Mr. Chairman, this measure, is not a violation of the concept of home rule. First, I must repeat that the street in question, which runs along the Washington Tidal Basin Park, is part of the Mall and its environs. Not one resident of the District of Columbia would be directly affected by this change. The committee has not somehow arbitrarily selected some random street in the District—15th Street SW., in front of the National Holocaust Museum, was carefully selected because it is only one block long and consists entirely of Federal property.

Second, there is a clear and obvious precedent for this change. Last year the District of Columbia appropriations bill included language which named the area in front of the Soviet Embassy as "Andrei Sakharov Plaza."

In sum, Mr. Chairman, because Raoul Wallenberg gave a whole new universe of meaning to the word "hero" by saving lives of 100,000 Hungarian Jews, I hope my colleagues will support Raoul Wallenberg Place and that none of you will seek to delete this section of the appropriations bill. I firmly believe that it would be an appropriate gesture to name the street in front of the Holocaust Memorial Museum in honor of this great American hero.

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the provision in the District of Columbia appropriations bill naming the section of 15th Street in front of the Holocaust Memorial Museum "Raoul Wallenberg Place."

The Holocaust Memorial Museum will remind us and future generations of the horrors of the Holocaust. But the museum is not intended only to make us despair at the depths to which mankind can sink; it should also force us to examine the question of how we can prevent future holocausts, how we can protect human rights, and how we should fight against racism and persecution. it is appropriate that Raoul Wallenberg be part of this memory, because he represents the ultimate symbol of hope and courage.

Born to a wealthy Swedish family, Wallenberg left the safety of his home to go to Budapest, Hungary, in the summer of 1944 on a high-risk mission from the American War Refugee Board to save tens of thousands of innocent children, women, and older men. Displaying remarkable courage, Wallenberg printed Swedish passports and passed them out to thousands of Jews. Single-handedly he approached deportation trains and literally pulled people out of the cattle cars destined for extermination camps. He purchased or rented dozens of buildings, which he then designated Swedish territory, and filled them with the persecuted to protect them from Fascist round-up squads. Through his efforts, Wallenberg saved an estimated 100,000 Hungarian Jews from the "final solution."

Neither I, nor my wife, nor our children, nor our grandchildren would be here today if it were not for Raoul Wallenberg. During that whole dark nightmare, no one else directly confronted Nazi cruelty. No one else had the audacity to follow the death marches, to jump in front of guns leveled at jews, to pull people off deportation trains. Raoul Wallenberg not only saved 100,000 lives, he saved our faith in humanity.

In retrospect, perhaps Wallenberg's greatest contribution is his reminder to us of the human dimension of human rights. We usually define human rights by international treaty: the right to emigrate guaranteed by the Helsinki Final Act, for example. In the best of worlds, international agreements alone would ensure all peoples' basic human rights. But time and again, we are reminded that our world is not an ideal one and that the promise of international law must be realized through individual action. Thus, what we most need are women and men motivated by a sense of justice, who are willing to risk and to fight in order to uphold dignity and respect for human life.

Unfortunately, the violation of human rights did not end with the crushing of Hitler in 1945. We need a Wallenberg today to speak out forcefully on behalf of Soviet refuseniks, individuals persecuted by the Soviet Government solely because of their religious faith and their desire to emigrate. We need a Wallenberg to confront apartheid in South Africa, to stand with the black demonstrators, to call for Nelson Mandela's release. We need a Wallenberg to seek the release of peaceful Baha'i prisoners in Iranian jails. We need a Wallenberg to secure the release of political prisoners—Andrei Sakharov in internal exile in the Soviet Union, opponents of the military regime in Chile, those who in far too many places around the globe suffer isolation, loss of liberty, and torture for their convictions.

Wallenberg is the archtype of the defender of human rights. His story shows that mankind can do more than simply survive, that it can nurture and protect the weak. He is a model of selfless behavior which few attain. The knowledge that one man so firmly embraced human rights as a guiding principle, however, should encourage us to continue in our fight for this goal.

In history, one can find examples of many who have killed 100,000 people. But how many have saved 100,000? Wallenberg has shown us that one individual—motivated by a genuine and personal concern for human rights—can face evil and triumph; that one person alone can make a difference.

Renaming a section of a street is a small honor to such a man. Nevertheless, it is an important symbolic gesture, and we must not forget the power of symbols.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3067, the District of Columbia appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986.

At the outset, I want to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, JULIAN DIXON and the ranking minority member, LARRY COUGHLIN, for their hard work and dedication. Without the usual benefits, Congressmen DIXON and COUGHLIN have taken the responsibility to the District our Federal seat of Governnent, very seriously. With the home rule principle as a guide, the subcommittee has effectively addressed the special needs of the District of Columbia. District residents are fortunate to have these gentlemen in leadership positions on this subcommittee.

Mr. Chairman, the bill includes Federal funds totaling $532,170,000 for fiscal year 1986 which is $1,173,000 below the fiscal year 1985 level. Included in this amount is a Federal payment of $425 million for fiscal year 1986 which represents 23.5 percent of the anticipated general revenue generated by local collections next year. This payment is the same amount as appropriated last year.

In addition to the lump sum Federal payment, Federal funds appropriated in this bill include $30.1 million for water and sewer services furnished to the Federal Government, $52 million for the Federal contribution to the city's three retirement funds, and $25 million for St. Elizabeths Hospital.

The payment to the retirement fund is the seventh of 25 annual Federal payments which will total $1.3 billion and will cover a portion of the unfunded liability attributed to former District employees who retired before home rule took effect. As authorized by Public Law 98-621, the payment for St. Elizabeths Hospital is part of a 6-year place to transfer administrative and financial responsibility from the Federal Government to the District of Columbia by 1991.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to report that the administration fully endorses the recommendations in this bill. In a letter the committee, the Young Slasher, signing in black ink, clearly stated that "this bill * * * is consistent with the Administration's request" and urged approval of the legislation in its present form. For the RECORD, I will include a copy of the OMB letter and the "Statement of administration Policy" on H.R. 3067.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3067.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, D.C., July 24, 1985.

Hon. SILVIO CONTE,
Committee on Appropriations, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIL: As the House Appropriations Committee prepares to mark up the 1986 District of Columbia Appropriation bill, I want to commend the subcommittee for its responsible action in keeping with the Administration's request.

I hope that when the District of Columbia appropriation bill is considered by the full committee you will use your influence and leadership to help ensure the passage of the bill as recommended by the subcommittee.

Sincerely,

DAVID A. STOCKMAN,
Director.

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

JULY 23, 1985.

District of Columbia Appropriation Bill, 1986.

(Sponsor: Dixon (D), California.)

This bill as approved by the House Subcommittee is consistent with the Administration's request. The Administration urges the full Appropriations Committee to take the Subcommittee recommendations and report the bill in its present form.

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

JULY 29, 1985.

District of Columbia Appropriation Bill, 1986.

(Sponsor: Whitten (D), Mississippi.)

This bill as reported by the House Appropriations Committee is consistent with the administration's request. The administration supports floor action to accept the committee recommendations and pass the bill in its present form.●

● Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Chairman, today, I rise in support of the amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], to ensure that section 118 of H.R. 3067 provide that no public funds may be used to kill unborn children in our Nation's Capital, and that funds shall be used to provide equal care for both the mother and her unborn child.

Some say this is an issue of "home rule" where the Congress should only be responsible for the use of "Federal" funds for abortions in the District and the District of Columbia government has the prerogative of using "its own funds" as it chooses for killing unborn children. On the contrary, Pub. L. 93-198 specifically designates the Congress, and each one of its Members with the responsibility for the full appropriation of all funds for our Nation's Capital.

Section 118 demands revision so that taxpayers' money is not used to fund the killing of unborn children, and it is the special responsibility of this body to recognize that fact. If this appropriations bill passes without amending section 118 we provide the District with a "blank check" with which to fund abortions. One abortion is as tragic as 100, and the some 4,393 abortions paid by the District from funds appropriated by Congress in the District of Columbia Appropriations Act (as cited from the District of Columbia government statistics note 67 of July 1984) denies us all any semblance of humanity.●

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I am in strong opposition to H.R. 3067, the District of Columbia appropriations for fiscal year 1986.

I do not oppose this bill because of any provision recommended by the Appropriations Subcommittee on the District of Columbia, which carefully crafted a bipartisan bill that meets the needs of the District of Columbia without exceeding the President's funding request. In fact, the subcommittee was specifically commended by outgoing Budget Director David Stockman for its "responsible action" in drafting this bill.

Rather, I am opposed to the bill because of the adoption of a grossly irresponsible amendment which would prohibit the use of any public funds for abortions in the District.

This amendment is both wrong in substance and wrong in procedure. It is a further attack on the fundamental right of women to control their own bodies. But, unlike many other such attacks which have been undertaken in the House of Representatives, it is an underhanded attack that exploits the continued power of the House over the District of Columbia's purse to achieve highly objectionable goals.

The sponsor of this amendment was apologetic about offering yet another amendment on a subject with which many Members are weary. He was referring to the floor fights that have surrounded the attachment of antiabortion riders to a variety of Federal health care programs and benefits packages. As a result of these amendments, congressional opponents of abortion rights have limited access to legal abortion services for those who receive health care services or health insurance benefits through the Federal Government.

Abortion is legal, and the vast majority of Americans want it kept that way. But those who approved these limiting amendments ignore the national mandate for safe and accessible abortion services. As a result of their repeated attacks, D.C. residents, along with Medicaid recipients, native Americans, Peace Corps volunteers, military employees, and Federal employees are already subject to significant restrictions on their right to have an abortion.

The current amendment goes even further, however. Not content to restrict the use of Federal funds for abortions, the amendment would restrict the use of all public funds for this purpose. This means that the District, which has courageously committed a portion of the funds that it raises independently of the Federal Government to poor women who are seeking abortions, will no longer be able to do so. Moreover, this will apply to all abortions performed in the District, with no exception for cases of rape, incest, or life endangerment.

Not only does this amendment fly in the face of public opinion, not only does it deny a fundamental right to a class of American citizens who are in most cases incapable of fighting back for financial or other reasons, but it would prohibit a jurisdiction of this Nation from employing its own funds for the purposes which it sees fit. It represents an unwarranted and indefensible Federal intrusion both into the local affairs of our Capital City and into the private lives of American citizens.

The District of Columbia deserves to be reimbursed for the responsibilities it assumes for the revenue losses and costs associated with the District's role as the Nation's Capital. The bill prepared by the subcommittee would have accomplished this in a rational and appropriate manner. But the restrictions on the fundamental right to safe and legal abortions that were added to this bill go far beyond any such restrictions adopted in the past. They are wrong and they must be rejected. I urge my colleagues to join me in defeating this bill.●

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The text of the bill H.R. 3067, is as follows:

H.R. 3067

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, namely:

FEDERAL PAYMENT TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

For payment to the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $425,000,000, as authorized by the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, Public Law 93-198, as amended (D.C. Code, sec. 47-3406): Provided, That none of these funds shall be made available to the District of Columbia until the number of full-time uniformed officers in permanent positions in the Metropolitan Police Department is at least 3,880, excluding any such officer appointed after August 19, 1982, under qualification standards other than those in effect on such date.

For payment to the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, in lieu of reimbursement for charges for water and water services and sanitary sewer services furnished to facilities of the United States Government, $30,100,000, as authorized by the Act of May 18, 1954, as amended (D.C. Code, secs. 43-1552 and 43-1612).

For the Federal contribution to the Police Officers and Fire Fighters', Teachers' and Judges' Retirement Funds as authorized by the District of Columbia Retirement Reform Act, approved November 17, 1979 (93 Stat. 866; Public Law 96-122), $52,070,000.

TRANSITIONAL PAYMENT FOR SAINT ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

For a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia, as authorized by the Saint Elizabeths Hospital and District of Columbia Mental Health Services Act, approved November 8, 1984 (98 Stat. 3369; Public Law 98-621), $25,000,000.

DIVISION OF EXPENSES

The following amounts are appropriated for the District of Columbia for the current fiscal year out of the general fund of the District of Columbia, except as otherwise specifically provided.

GOVERNMENTAL DIRECTION AND SUPPORT

Governmental direction and support, $99,342,000: Provided, That not to exceed $2,500 for the Mayor, $2,500 for the Chairman of the Council of the District of Columbia, and $2,500 for the City Administrator shall be available from this appropriation for expenditures for official purposes: Provided further, That any program fees collected from the issuance of debt shall be available for the payment of expenses of the debt management program of the District of Columbia: Provided further, That not less than $320,000 shall be used by the Office of Personnel exclusively for the administration of programs for the training of District of Columbia government employees: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, there is hereby appropriated $3,480,000 to pay legal, management, investment, and other fees and administrative expenses of the District of Columbia Retirement Board, of which $700,000 shall be derived from the general fund and not to exceed $2,780,000 shall be derived from the earnings of the applicable retirement funds: Provided further, That the District of Columbia Retirement Board shall provide to the Congress and the Council of the District of Columbia a quarterly report of the allocations of charges by fund and of expenditures of all funds: Provided further, That the District of Columbia Retirement Board shall provide the Mayor for transmittal to the Council of the District of Columbia an item accounting of the planned use of appropriated funds in time for each annual budget submission and the actual use of such funds in time for each annual audited financial report: Provided further, That of the $100,000 appropriated for fiscal year 1986 for Admission to Statehood, $50,000 shall be for the Statehood Commission and $50,000 shall be for the Statehood Compact Commission.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND REGULATION

Economic development and regulation, $99,525,000: Provided, That the District of Columbia Housing Finance Agency, established by section 201 of the District of Columbia Housing Finance Agency Act, effective March 3, 1979 (D.C. Law 2-135; D.C. Code, sec. 45-2111), based upon its capability of repayments as determined each year by the Council of the District of Columbia from the Agency's annual audited financial statements to the Council of the District of Columbia, shall repay to the general fund an amount equal to the appropriated administrative costs plus interest at a rate of four percent per annum for a term of 15 years, with a deferral of payments for the first three years: Provided further, That notwithstanding the foregoing provision, the obligation to repay all or part of the amounts due shall be subject to the rights of the holders of any bonds or notes issued by the Agency and shall be repaid to the District of Columbia only from available operating revenues of the Agency that are in excess of the amounts required for debt service, reserve funds, and operating expenses: Provided further, That upon commencement of the debt service payments, such payments shall be deposited into the general fund of the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the Director of the Department of Housing and Community Development shall report every six months to the Council of the District of Columbia on collections of rent from public housing stock.

PUBLIC SAFETY AND JUSTICE

Public safety and justice, including purchase of not to exceed 135 passenger-carrying vehicles for replacement only (including 130 for police-type use and five for fire-type use) and four additional passenger-carrying vehicles for fire-type use without regard to the general purchase price limitation for the current fiscal year, $535,416,000, of which $3,339,000 shall be payable from the revenue sharing trust fund: Provided, That the Metropolitan Police Department is authorized to replace not to exceed 25 passenger-carrying vehicles, and the Fire Department is authorized to replace not to exceed five passenger-carrying vehicles, annually whenever the cost of repair to any damaged vehicle exceeds three-fourths of the cost of the replacement: Provided further, That not to exceed $320,000 shall be available from this appropriation for the Chief of Police for the prevention and detection of crime: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provisions of law, in the case of each employee who retired from the Fire Department of the District of Columbia before February 15, 1980, and who is receiving on the date of the enactment of this Act an annuity based on service in the Fire Department, the District of Columbia Retirement Board shall cause to be paid not later than September 30, 1985, to each such employee a lump-sum payment equal to three percent of his or her annuity: Provided further, That funds appropriated for expenses under the District of Columbia Criminal Justice Act, approved September 3, 1974 (88 Stat. 1090; Public Law 93-412; D.C. Code, sec. 11-2601 et seq.), for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, shall be available for obligations incurred under that Act in each fiscal year since inception in fiscal year 1975: Provided further, That funds appropriated for expenses under the District of Columbia Neglect Representation Equity Act of 1984, effective March 13, 1985 (D.C. Law 5-129; D.C. Code, sec. 16-2304), for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, shall be available for obligations incurred under that Act in each fiscal year since inception in fiscal year 1985: Provided further, That $50,000 of any appropriation available to the District of Columbia may be used to match financial contributions from the Department of Defense to the District of Columbia Office of Emergency Preparedness for the purchase of civil defense equipment and supplies approved by the Department of Defense, when authorized by the Mayor: Provided further, That not to exceed $1,500 for the Chief Judge of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, $1,500 for the Chief Judge of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, and $1,500 for the Executive Officer of the District of Columbia Courts shall be available from this appropriation for official purposes: Provided further, That D.C. Code, sec. 11-1732(d), is amended by striking out "1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "1986".

PUBLIC EDUCATION SYSTEM

Public education system, including the development of national defense education programs, $515,005,000, of which $6,000,000 shall be payable from the revenue sharing trust fund, to be allocated as follows: $359,500,000 for the public schools of the District of Columbia; $70,905,000 for the District of Columbia Teachers' Retirement Fund; $67,715,000 for the University of the District of Columbia; $15,002,000 for the Public Library; $1,673,000 for the Commission on the Arts and Humanities; and $210,000 for the Educational Institution Licensure Commission: Provided, That the public schools of the District of Columbia are authorized to accept not to exceed 31 motor vehicles for exclusive use in the driver education program: Provided further, That not to exceed $2,500 for the Superintendent of Schools, $2,500 for the President of the University of the District of Columbia, and $2,000 for the Public Librarian shall be available from this appropriation for expenditures for official purposes: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be available to subsidize the education of nonresidents of the District of Columbia at the University of the District of Columbia, unless the Board of Trustees of the University of the District of Columbia adopts, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, a tuition rate schedule which will establish the tuition rate for nonresident students at a level no lower than the nonresident tuition rate charged at comparable public institutions of higher education in the metropolitan area.

HUMAN SUPPORT SERVICES

Human support services, $614,347,000, of which $5,857,000 shall be payable from the revenue sharing trust fund: Provided, That the inpatient rate (excluding the proportionate share for repairs and construction) for services rendered by Saint Elizabeths Hospital for patient care shall be at the per diem rate established pursuant to section 2 of an Act to authorize certain expenditures from the appropriation of Saint Elizabeths Hospital, and for other purposes, approved August 4, 1947 (61 Stat. 751; Public Law 80-353; 24 U.S.C. 168(a)): Provided further, That total funds paid by the District of Columbia as reimbursements for operating costs of Saint Elizabeths Hospital, including any District of Columbia payments (but excluding the Federal matching share of payments) associated with title XIX of the Social Security Act, approved July 30, 1965 (79 Stat. 343; Public Law 89-97; 42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.), shall not exceed $62,970,000: Provided further, That $11,000,000 of this appropriation, to remain available until expended, shall be available solely for District of Columbia employees' disability compensation.

PUBLIC WORKS

Public works, including rental of one passenger-carrying vehicle for use by the Mayor and three passenger-carrying vehicles for use by the Council of the District of Columbia and purchase of passenger-carrying vehicles for replacement only, $193,741,000, of which $2,500,000 shall be payable from the revenue sharing trust fund and not to exceed $4,000,000 shall be available for the School Transit Subsidy: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for collecting ashes or miscellaneous refuse from hotels and places of business or from apartment houses with four or more apartments, or from any building or connected group of buildings operating as a rooming or boarding house as defined in the housing regulations of the District of Columbia.

WASHINGTON CONVENTION CENTER FUND

For the Washington Convention Center Fund, $8,371,000: Provided, That the Convention Center Board of Directors, established by section 3 of the Washington Convention Center Management Act of 1979, effective November 3, 1979 (D.C. Law 3-36; D.C. Code, sec. 9-602), shall reimburse the Auditor of the District of Columbia for all reasonable costs for performance of the annual convention center audit.

REPAYMENT OF LOANS AND INTEREST

For reimbursement to the United States of funds loaned in compliance with an Act to provide for the establishment of a modern, adequate, and efficient hospital center in the District of Columbia, approved August 7, 1946 (60 Stat. 896; Public Law 79-648); the Departments of Labor, and Health, Education and Welfare Appropriation Act of 1955, approved July 2, 1954 (68 Stat. 443; Public Law 83-472); section 1 of an Act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to borrow funds for capital improvement programs and to amend provisions of law relating to Federal Government participation in meeting costs of maintaining the Nation's Capital City, approved June 6, 1958 (72 Stat. 183; Public Law 85-451; D.C. Code, sec. 9-219); section 4 of an Act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to plan, construct, operate, and maintain a sanitary sewer to connect the Dulles International Airport with the District of Columbia system, approved June 12, 1960 (74 Stat. 211; Public Law 86-515); and section 723 of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, approved December 24, 1973 (87 Stat. 821; Public Law 93-198; D.C. Code, sec. 47-321, note); and section 743(f) of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, approved October 13, 1977 (91 Stat. 1156; Public Law 95-131; D.C. Code, sec. 9-219, note), including interest as required thereby, $198,409,000.

REPAYMENT OF GENERAL FUND DEFICIT

For the purpose of eliminating the cash portion of the $269,860,000 general fund accumulated deficit as of September 30, 1984, $20,000,000, of which not less than $15,000,000 shall be funded and apportioned by the Mayor from amounts otherwise available to the District of Columbia government (including amounts appropriated by this Act or revenues otherwise available, or both).

SHORT-TERM BORROWINGS

For the purpose of funding interest related to borrowing funds for short-term cash needs, $3,750,000.

CAPITAL OUTLAY

For construction projects, $229,148,000, as authorized by an Act authorizing the laying of water mains and service sewers in the District of Columbia, the levying of assessments therefor, and for other purposes, approved April 22, 1904 (33 Stat. 244; Public Law 58-140; D.C. Code, secs. 43-1512 to 43-1519); the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954, approved May 18, 1954 (68 Stat. 101; Public Law 83-364); an Act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to borrow funds for capital improvement programs and to amend provisions of law relating to Federal Government participation in meeting costs of maintaining the Nation's Capital City, approved June 6, 1958 (72 Stat. 183; Public Law 85-451; D.C. Code, secs. 9-219 and 47-3402); section 3(g) of the District of Columbia Motor Vehicle Parking Facility Act of 1942, approved August 20, 1958 (72 Stat. 686; Public Law 85-692; D.C. Code, sec. 40-805(7)); and the National Capital Transportation Act of 1969, approved December 9, 1969 (83 Stat. 320; Public Law 91-143; D.C. Code, secs. 1-2451, 1-2452, 1-2454, 1-2456, and 1-2457); including acquisition of sites, preparation of plans and specifications, conducting preliminary surveys, erection of structures, including building improvement and alteration and treatment of grounds, to remain available until expended: Provided, That $14,591,000 shall be available for project management and $11,239,000 for design by the Director of the Department of Public Works or by contract for architectural engineering services, as may be determined by the Mayor, and that the funds for use of each capital project implementing agency shall be managed and controlled in accordance with all procedures and limitations established under the Financial Management System: Provided further, That all such funds shall be available only for the specific projects and purposes intended: Provided further, That notwithstanding the foregoing, all authorizations for capital outlay projects, except those projects covered by the first sentence of section 23(a) of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1968, approved August 23, 1968 (82 Stat. 827; Public Law 90-495; D.C. Code, sec. 7-134, note), for which funds are provided by this appropriation title, shall expire on September 30, 1987, except authorizations for projects as to which funds have been obligated in whole or in part prior to September 30, 1987: Provided further, That upon expiration of any such project authorization the funds provided herein for the project shall lapse.

WATER AND SEWER ENTERPRISE FUND

For the Water and Sewer Enterprise Fund, $162,987,000, of which $31,065,000 shall be apportioned and payable to the debt service fund for repayment of loans and interest incurred for capital improvement projects.

For construction projects, $19,635,000, as authorized by an Act authorizing the laying of water mains and service sewers in the District of Columbia, the levying of assessments therefor, and for other purposes, approved April 22, 1904 (33 Stat. 244; D.C. Code, sec. 43-1512 et seq.): Provided, That the requirements and restrictions which are applicable to general fund capital improvement projects and which are set forth in this Act under the Capital Outlay appropriation title shall apply to projects approved under this appropriation title.

LOTTERY AND CHARITABLE GAMES ENTERPRISE FUND

For the Lottery and Charitable Games Enterprise Fund established by the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for fiscal year 1982, approved December 4, 1981 (95 Stat. 1174, 1175, Public Law 97-91, as amended), for the purpose of implementing the Law to Legalize Lotteries, Daily Numbers Games, and Bingo and Raffles for Charitable Purposes in the District of Columbia, effective March 10, 1981 (D.C. Law 3-172; D.C. Code, secs. 2-2501 et seq. and 22-1516 et seq.), $4,151,000, to be derived from non-Federal District of Columbia revenues: Provided, That the District of Columbia shall identify the sources of funding for this appropriation title from its own locally-generated revenues: Provided further, That no revenues from Federal sources shall be used to support the operations or activities of the Lottery and Charitable Games Control Board.

CABLE TELEVISION ENTERPRISE FUND

For the Cable Television Enterprise Fund established by the Cable Television Communications Act of 1981, effective October 22, 1983 (D.C. Law 5-36; D.C. Code, sec. 43-1801 et seq.), $250,000.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. The expenditure of any appropriation under this Act for any consulting service through procurement contract, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3109, shall be limited to those contracts where such expenditures are a matter of public record and available for public inspection, except where otherwise provided under existing law, or under existing Executive order issued pursuant to existing law.

SEC. 102. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, all vouchers covering expenditures of appropriations contained in this Act shall be audited before payment by the designated certifying official and the vouchers as approved shall be paid by checks issued by the designated disbursing official.

SEC. 103. Whenever in this Act an amount is specified within an appropriation for particular purposes or objects of expenditure, such amount, unless otherwise specified, shall be considered as the maximum amount which may be expended for said purpose or object rather than an amount set apart exclusively therefor, except for those funds and programs for the Metropolitan Police Department under the heading "Public Safety and Justice" which shall be considered as the amounts set apart exclusively for and shall be expended solely by that Department; and the appropriation under the heading "Repayment of General Fund Deficit" which shall be considered as the amount set apart exclusively for and shall be expended solely for that purpose.

SEC. 104. Appropriations in this Act shall be available, when authorized by the Mayor, for allowances for privately owned automobiles and motorcycles used for the performance of official duties at rates established by the Mayor: Provided, That such rates shall not exceed the maximum prevailing rates for such vehicles as prescribed in the Federal Property Management Regulations 101-7 (Federal Travel Regulations).

SEC. 105. Appropriations in this Act shall be available for expenses of travel and for the payment of dues of organizations concerned with the work of the District of Columbia government, when authorized by the Mayor: Provided, That the Council of the District of Columbia and the District of Columbia Courts may expend such funds without authorization by the Mayor.

SEC. 106. Appropriations in this Act shall not be used for or in connection with the preparation, issuance, publication, or enforcement of any regulation or order of the Public Service Commission requiring the installation of meters in taxicabs, or for or in connection with the licensing of any vehicle to be operated as a taxicab except for operation in accordance with such system of uniform zones and rates and regulations applicable thereto as shall have been prescribed by the Public Service Commission.

SEC. 107. There are appropriated from the applicable funds of the District of Columbia such sums as may be necessary for making refunds and for the payment of judgments that have been entered against the District of Columbia government: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed as modifying or affecting the provisions of section 11(c)(3) of title XII of the District of Columbia Income and Franchise Tax Act of 1947, approved March 31, 1956 (70 Stat. 78; Public Law 84-460; D.C. Code, sec. 47-1812.11(c)(3)).

SEC. 108. Appropriations in this Act shall be available for the payment of public assistance without reference to the requirement of section 544 of the District of Columbia Public Assistance Act of 1982, effective April 6, 1982 (D.C. Law 4-101; D.C Code, sec. 3-205(b)), and for the non-Federal share of funds necessary to qualify for Federal assistance under the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention and Control Act of 1968, approved July 31, 1968 (82 Stat. 462; Public Law 90-445; 42 U.S.C. 3801 et seq.).

SEC. 109. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 110. Not to exceed 4½ per centum of the total of all funds appropriated by this Act for personal compensation may be used to pay the cost of overtime or temporary positions.

SEC. 111. Appropriations in this Act shall not be available, during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, for the compensation of any person appointed to a permanent position in the District of Columbia government during any month in which the number of employees exceeds 32,082, the number of positions authorized by this Act.

SEC. 112. No funds appropriated in this Act for the District of Columbia government for the operation of educational institutions, the compensation of personnel, or for other educational purposes may be used to permit, encourage, facilitate, or further partisan political activities. Nothing herein is intended to prohibit the availability of school buildings for the use of any community or partisan political group during non-school hours.

SEC. 113. The annual budget for the District of Columbia government for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, shall be transmitted to the Congress by no later than April 15, 1986.

SEC. 114. None of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be made available to pay the salary of any employee of the District of Columbia government whose name, title, grade, salary, past work experience, and salary history are not available for inspection by the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, the House Committee on the District of Columbia, the Subcommittee on Governmental Efficiency and the District of Columbia of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs and the Council of the District of Columbia or their duly authorized representative.

SEC. 115. There are appropriated from the applicable funds of the District of Columbia such sums as may be necessary for making payments authorized by the District of Columbia Revenue Recovery Act of 1977, effective September 23, 1977 (D.C. Law 2-20; D.C. Code, sec. 47-421 et seq.).

SEC. 116. None of the funds contained in this Act shall be made available to pay the salary of any employee of the District of Columbia government whose name and salary are not available for public inspection.

SEC. 117. No part of this appropriation shall be used for publicity or propaganda purposes or implementation of any policy including boycott designed to support or defeat legislation pending before Congress or any State legislature.

SEC. 118. None of the Federal funds provided in this Act shall be used to perform abortions except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term; or except for such medical procedures necessary for the victims of rape or incest, when such rape or incest has been reported promptly to a law enforcement agency or public health service. Nor are payments prohibited for drugs or devices to prevent implantation of the fertilized ovum, or for medical procedures necessary for the termination of an ectopic pregnancy.

SEC. 119. At the start of the fiscal year, the Mayor shall develop an annual plan, by quarter and by project, for capital outlay borrowings: Provided, That within a reasonable time after the close of each quarter, the Mayor shall report to the Council of the District of Columbia and the Congress the actual borrowing and spending progress compared with projections.

SEC. 120. The Mayor shall not borrow any funds for capital projects unless he has obtained prior approval from the Council of the District of Columbia, by resolution, identifying the projects and amounts to be financed with such borrowings.

SEC. 121. The Mayor shall not expend any moneys borrowed for capital projects for the operating expenses of the District of Columbia government.

SEC. 122. None of the funds appropriated in this Act may be used for the implementation of a personnel lottery with respect to the hiring of fire fighters or police officers.

SEC. 123. None of the funds appropriated by this Act may be obligated or expended by reprogramming except pursuant to advance approval of the reprogramming granted according to the procedure set forth in the Joint Explanatory Statement of the Committee of Conference (House Report No. 96-443) which accompanied the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1980, approved October 30, 1979 (93 Stat. 713; Public Law 96-93), as modified in House Report No. 98-265, and in accordance with the Reprogramming Policy Act of 1980, effective September 16, 1980 (D.C. Law 3-100; D.C. Code, sec. 47-361 et seq.).

SEC. 124. None of the Federal funds provided in this Act shall be obligated or expended to provide a personal cook, chauffeur, or other personal servants to any officer or employee of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 125. None of the Federal funds provided in this Act shall be obligated or expended to procure passenger automobiles as defined in the Automobile Fuel Efficiency Act of 1980, approved October 10, 1980 (94 Stat. 1824; Public Law 96-425; 15 U.S.C. 2001(2)), with an Environmental Protection Agency estimated miles per gallon average of less than 22 miles per gallon: Provided, That this section shall not apply to security, emergency rescue, or armored vehicles.

SEC. 126. (a) Notwithstanding section 422(7) of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, approved December 24, 1973 (87 Stat. 790; Public Law 93-198; D.C. Code, sec. 1-242(7)), the City Administrator shall be paid, during any fiscal year, a salary at a rate established by the Mayor, not to exceed the rate established for level IV of the Executive Schedule under 5 U.S.C. 5315.

(b) For purposes of applying any provision of law limiting the availability of funds for payment of salary or pay in any fiscal year, the highest rate of pay established by the Mayor under subsection (a) for any position for any period during the last quarter of calendar year 1985 shall be deemed to be the rate of pay payable for that position for September 30, 1985.

(c) Notwithstanding section 4(a) of the District of Columbia Redevelopment Act of 1945, approved August 2, 1946 (60 Stat. 793; Public Law 79-592; D.C. Code, sec. 5-803(a)), the Board of Directors of the District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency shall be paid, during any fiscal year, a per diem compensation at a rate established by the Mayor.

SEC. 127. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the provisions of the District of Columbia Government Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act of 1978, effective March 3, 1979 (D.C. Law 2-139; D.C. Code, sec. 1-601.1 et seq.), enacted pursuant to section 422(3) of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, approved December 24, 1973 (87 Stat. 790; Public Law 93-198; D.C. Code, sec. 1-242(3)), shall apply with respect to the compensation of District of Columbia employees: Provided, That for pay purposes, employees of the District of Columbia government shall not be subject to the provisions of title 5 of the United States Code.

SEC. 128. None of the funds appropriated by this Act may be used to transport any output of the municipal waste system of the District of Columbia for disposal at any public or private landfill located in any State, excepting currently utilized landfills in Maryland and Virginia, until the appropriate State agency has issued the required permits.

SEC. 129. The Director of the Department of Administrative Services may pay rentals and repair, alter, and improve rented premises, without regard to the provisions of section 322 of the Economy Act of 1932 (Public Law 72-212; 40 U.S.C. 278a), upon a determination by the Director, that by reason of circumstances set forth in such determination, the payment of these rents and the execution of this work, without reference to the limitations of section 322, is advantageous to the District in terms of economy, efficiency and the District's best interest.

SEC. 130. The Public Service Commission is hereby authorized to order and to approve the deregulation of streetlighting service to the District of Columbia as provided in its opinion and order in Formal Case No. 813, dated July 12, 1984 (Order No. 8056), notwithstanding the provisions of section 493(a) of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, approved December 24, 1973 (87 Stat. 811; Public Law 93-198; D.C. Code, sec. 43-402), section 8, paragraph 2 of an Act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and fourteen, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 977; Public Law 67-435; D.C. Code, sec. 43-501), and section 1 of an Act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1053; D.C. Code, sec. 43-1207): Provided, That the provisions of this opinion and order regarding deregulation of streetlighting service are hereby ratified and declared to be in effect as of July 12, 1984, and shall continue to be in effect until revoked or rescinded.

SEC. 131. (a) No State, or political subdivision thereof, in which a Member of Congress maintains a place of abode for purposes of attending sessions of Congress may impose a personal property tax with respect to the motor vehicle owned by such Member (or by the spouse of such Member) that is used for purposes of attending sessions of Congress unless such Member represents such State or a district in such State.

(b) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "Member of Congress" includes the delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands, and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico;

(2) the term "State" includes the District of Columbia; and

(3) the term "personal property tax" means any tax imposed on an annual basis and levied on, with respect to, or measured by, the market value or assessed value of an item of personal property.

(c) This section shall apply to all taxable periods beginning on or after January 1, 1985.

SEC. 132. The portion of 15th Street, Southwest, Washington, District of Columbia, located between Maine and Independence Avenues shall hereafter be known and designated as "Raoul Wallenberg Place". Any law, regulation, map, document, or other record of the United States and the District of Columbia which refers to that portion of such street shall be deemed to refer to "Raoul Wallenberg Place".

SEC. 133. The expenditure of any appropriation under this Act for any contract shall be limited to those contracts awarded on a competitive basis.

This Act may be cited as the "District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1986".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against the bill?

Are there any amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF NEW JERSEY

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 12, strike out the semicolon and all that follows through line 18 before the period.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman and Members of this body——

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order is reserved.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I had already begun speaking on the amendment so I would suggest——

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet. My mike was not on. I indicated that I wanted to reserve a point of order. I interrupted because I did not know whether the Chair had heard me or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] was on his feet. The Chair agrees with the gentleman. The point of order is reserved.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I know that many Members of this body are growing weary of abortion floor fights. But I would suggest that what we do here today may indeed result in some now nameless, voiceless child—perhaps many children—being given a chance to live.

That, in and of itself, makes any inconvenience wholly worthwhile.

I would point out to members of the committee that in 1983 there were 11,775 abortions for D.C. residents. Of that number, approximately 40 percent were paid for with Government funds—with funds appropriated by this Congress in the D.C. Appropriations Act. In other words, in 1983, 4,393 lives were snuffed out with public funding right here in the District. My amendment would bar abortion payments except to save the life of the mother.

I know the prochoice lobby here on the Hill gets mighty uncomfortable when faced with the horror of abortion, or with the humanity of the child in the womb, or with the increasingly apparent fact that abortion exploits women. But reality isn't changed or altered one iota because someone wishes it away or refuses to face it.

Mr. Chairman, abortion methods are gruesome and ugly to consider. Yet it is a sad fact, that there are some in this Chamber who have yet to carefully examine and scrutinize the methods of abortion. If we are being asked to pay for it, is it too much to ask what we are paying for?

Mr. Chairman, the carnage unleashed on American society by the 1973 Supreme Court abortion decisions is unparalleled in U.S. history.

Every 20 seconds of every day, little children at 8 weeks, 12 weeks, 16 weeks, 24 weeks gestation and beyond, right up until birth, are savagely decimated by the abortionist. The modern day abortionist has several highly efficient abortion methods at his disposal. The horror of the deed, however, has been mitigated by the clean, antiseptic environs in which abortions are procured.

For some, abortion is merely another medical procedure. But is it?

I suggest my colleagues look closer at just a few of these procedures. In many early abortions, a loop-shaped knife attached to a high powered suction device rips and shreds the unsuspecting child to pieces. The body parts are then vacuumed into a bottle and disposed of. This is euphemistically referred to as vacuum aspiration.

In the dilation and curatage and dilation and evacuation abortion, the child is cut, sliced and carved by a surgeon's scalpel without even the benefit of anesthesia. One of the most frightening jobs required of assisting nurses is to make a full and thorough accounting of all body parts in a D&C and D&E abortion. I have seen documented pictures of children who have been killed this way—decapitated, ribcages split open, arms and legs a pathetic jumble—and I came away sick to my stomach. And believe me, I marveled then and now that some Members of this body could deny the homicidal nature of abortion and go on to even assert that the extermination of the unborn can somehow be portrayed and construed to be enlightened, progressive policy?

In saline abortions, Mr. Chairman, usually done in the second trimester, the unborn baby has his or her life purposely snuffed out by an overdose of injected saltwater.

A baby terminated this way dies a very slow, excruciating painful death. After the salt is injected by a hypodermic needle into the infant's amniotic sac, the child breaths in the fluid and gets sick. The salt burns the outer layer of skin on the child. Internally, the baby's bloodstream carries the poison to his or her brain, nervous system and vital organs. After a 1½- to 2-hour futile struggle, the baby usually dies. A day or two later, the mother goes into labor and gives birth to a baby whose appearance resembles a first degree burn victim.

Are saline abortions enlightened social policy that a prudent Congress wishes to fund? Hardly. Hardly, I say to my colleagues.

Still another method of abortion, Mr. Chairman, is the so-called hysterotomy abortion—a method not unlike a C-section. As a matter of fact the only difference between the hysterotomy and C-section is the fate of the child. In a C-section, the child is cared for, nurtured, fed, kept warm and, hopefully, loved. In a hysterotomy abortion, after the umbilical cord is cut, the baby is tossed in a bucket or pan—like garbage—let to die. There have been literally thousands of these abortions in the United States. A significant number of children who survive abortion were the results of this method.

Mr. Chairman, it seems increasingly absurd to this Member that Members of this body can unashamedly embrace and champion the right to multilate and kill unborn children like this—and then demand that we pay for it.

It seems increasingly absurd to this Member that the opposition utterly fails to appreciate the marvelous breakthroughs in the diagnosis and treatment of the unborn. In every pregnancy, there are two patients to be cared for, mother and child. I prefer to think, Mr. Chairman, that it is out of ignorance of the facts rather than by design.

Mr. Chairman, there are some Members who may argue here today that this Congress should look the other way—let the Congress continue to authorize payment for the killing of unborn children in the District of Columbia. It's an issue of "home rule" they say. That's baloney.

When I offered my amendment to proscribe abortion coverage 2 years ago to Federal employees under the FEHB, the argument advanced against my amendment was that this is an employee benefit issue—not an abortion funding issue. The Congress wisely saw through that smokescreen and adopted my amendment which is current law and was again adopted earlier today as part of the Treasury Postal appropriations bill.

When Mr. HYDE of Illinois offered the Hyde amendment, critics charged that this was an issue of benefits for the poor—not an abortion funding issue. The Congress wisely saw through that smokescreen and adopted the Hyde amendment.

Today, we are again being told that this is not an abortion funding issue, but now the excuse is, that the issue is home rule.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, even on its face, home rule is not absolute. In years past, certain States and locales have argued home rule or States rights to defend slavery, and when slavery was outlawed, home rule was advanced to defend segregation and other forms of racism. Other countries use home rule to defend apartheid, discrimination against Soviet Jews, or forced abortion in the People's Republic of China. Home rule is clearly not persuasive as an argument to defend these human rights abuses nor is it persuasive in defending abortion funding.

Moreover, I would submit to my colleagues that in numerous other aspects of public policy, Congress conditions or limits funding to include some activity or to exclude others. We do it in environmental policy, we do it in our efforts to end race discrimination, we do it to end sex discrimination, we even do it to pressure States to raise their drinking age to 21.

Even H.R. 3067, the bill before us today, limits the D.C. Government in making its own decisions under "home rule" in matters relating to overtime, temporary position, ceilings on salaries, lobbying, the borrowing of funds, and the hiring and firing of fire and police officers. Earlier in the debate, Mr. FAUNTROY objected to other violations of home rule including the designation of a part of 15th Street as Raoul Wallenberg Place and the awarding of contracts by competitive bidding.

So the argument that the issue before us today is not abortion but "home rule" is weak. It is misleading and is clearly not persuasive.

I strongly urge passage of my amendment.

POINT OF ORDER

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California insist on his point of order?

Mr. DIXON. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. The amendment is a nonlegislative limitation to a general appropriation bill. Under the revised clause 2, rule XXI, such amendments are not in order during the reading of a general appropriation bill.

The chairman is advised that the rule states: "Except as provided in paragraph (d), no amendment shall be in order during consideration of a general appropriation bill proposing a limitation not specifically contained or authorized in existing law for that period of the limitation."

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment is a limitation and is not specifically contained or authorized in existing law, and therefore is in violation of clause 2 of rule XXI.

What the gentleman is trying to do is, by striking the word "federal," he in fact broadens the limitation.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard on the point of order, if the gentleman does insist on his point of order, I plan on offering another amendment, which would be a straight limitation that would say no funds provided by this act or appropriated by this act shall be used to pay for abortions, period. And I certainly hope, since the amendment I offer contains the life of the mother exception, that the chairman will not go forward with his point of order.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HERTEL of Michigan). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair must rule that the amendment in effect constitutes or creates a new limitation and therefore can only be offered if the House defeats the motion to rise.

Are there any amendments in order under——

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I move——

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet. I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] has been recognized.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer an amendment at this time?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF NEW JERSEY

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of New Jersey: On page 20 strike out line 9 through line 18 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 118. None of the funds provided in this Act shall be used to perform abortions."

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time and urge adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] insist on his point of order?

Mr. DIXON. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized on his point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that the amendment is a nonlegislative limitation to a general appropriation bill, and under the revised clause 2, rule XXI, such amendments are not in order during the reading of a general bill.

Mr. Chairman, the revised rule states in part, and I have indicated before: "Except as provided in paragraph (d), no amendment shall be in order during consideration of a general appropriation bill proposing a limitation not specifically contained or authorized in existing law for the period of the limitation."

Once, again, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment is a limitation and is not specifically contained or authorized in existing law, and therefore is in violation of clause 2(c) of rule XXI.

I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is just a straight, no-limitation amendment and I do hope it is in keeping with previous amendments offered on this floor, including the Hyde amendment, including the amendments of the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program.

When an objection was raised to language in the bill, it had no life-of-the-mother exception unfortunately, which I will seek to put back in; but I urge that the rule will sustain my position.

The CHAIRMAN. (Mr. HERTEL of Michigan). The Chair rules that the motion to rise takes precedence over the amendment.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provision of clause 2 of rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

Mr. TALLON changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. MILLER of Washington changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the motion was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending is an amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

The Clerk will reread the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of New Jersey: On page 20 strike out line 9 through line 18 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 118. None of the funds provided in this act shall be used to perform abortions."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, should not the maker of the amendment be recognized first on his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The maker of the amendment yielded back the balance of his time.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, let me first point out where we are parliamentarywise.

The gentleman from New Jersey offered two amendments to the bill which would restrict the right of the District government to use its own locally generated revenues to pay for abortions. Under the House rules, I offered a motion that the committee rise. The House has obviously defeated that motion and now we are considering the amendment itself.

Let me read to you, first of all, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey. I want everyone to hear this amendment. We, as a House, faced an identical amendment in September 1980, and defeated the amendment. The gentleman's amendment reads:

None of the funds provided in this act shall be used to perform abortions.

Whose funds are in this act? There are $2.2 billion of District funds. What are District funds? They are funds raised from sales taxes, property taxes, and other taxes and fines and fees raised and collected in the District of Columbia.

Then there are Federal funds. Basically, there are four categories of Federal funds. The largest is the Federal payment which totals $425 million.

Most of you would ask, what is the state of the law at the present time as it relates to abortions in the District of Columbia? The law in the District of Columbia, which has been in effect since 1980, states that "none of the Federal funds"—let me say that again—"none of the Federal funds provided in this act shall be used to perform abortions except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term"; that is one exception.

The second exception applies to victims of rape or incest when such rape or incest has been reported promptly to a law enforcement agency or the Public Health Service. And there is also an exception for ectopic pregnancies, which are generally known as tubal pregnancies, and one would argue that such pregnancies endanger the life of the mother.

What the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has offered here is an amendment that under the circumstances could not be offered in any of your cities or any of your States because it would prohibit people from using their own State or local revenues, or whatever revenues would be available to them, for abortions. It is a unique situation that the District of Columbia must come to this House in order to spend its own local revenues, and be told how to spend those revenues.

This amendment would say that "you the people of the District of Columbia, cannot even use your own money, if you so desire, for abortion purposes." This has nothing to do with the religious or moral feelings of people about abortion. This does have something to do with telling District residents that they cannot use the funds they raise from taxes and fees, for abortions of any kind, not if a woman has been raped, not if there is a case of incest, not for an ectopic pregnancy, not even to save the life of a mother. We in this House are saying "under no circumstances can you use any money."

Now, think about that. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] could not do this in the New Jersey State Legislature. My good colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN], could not do this in the State of California.

As I mentioned a moment ago, this House faced this same issue in 1980, and we had the courage, notwithstanding the political momentum on this issue, to say that this is not an abortion issue; this is an issue dealing with the right of the citizens of the District of Columbia to take their own money—and let me emphasize this is their own locally raised revenues—and make some judgments on it. We are not the city council. And we are not the mayor. If we could do this across the board, for all cities, all States, and all municipalities, then there might—there just might—be some justification for it.

So we should not feel good going home tonight knowing that we are doing to the District of Columbia something we could not do to any other city, State, or municipality in the country, and that is to disallow the people of the District to use their own tax dollars for an abortion to save the life of a mother, or where some young lady has been raped, or where there is a case of incest, or where the pregnancy does not lie in the womb but lies in the tube.

So no matter how you feel about abortion, have the courage at least to allow the people of the District of Columbia to make the decision for themselves. The Supreme Court has already ruled on abortion. Now let us have the courage and dignity to allow the people here in this District of Columbia to make their own decision as to what they do with their money.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the case that my good friend from California [Mr. DIXON] has made for home rule, but there is a paramount issue here that transcends any legal niceties over how the District of Columbia spends those Federal dollars that we appropriate for them in this House.

In 1976, when I had won a primary in California, I came back to one of the seminars that both of our parties give to primary victors, and as I was driving to National Airport—and I remember the exact spot where I passed the Washington Monument—I had the news on the radio and I heard the following announcement: That for the first time in the history of this city or any major American city there were more abortions than there were live births. And this has persisted. This death toll has continued for the last 8 years, and I am sure it will be the same this year.

With our Federal dollars appropriated out of this House and with the last vote confirming that most of our Members identify with the prolife position, not the right-to-abortion position, we funded—just with our Federal dollars—4,393 abortions of the over 11,000 that took place; there were barely over 9,000 live births.

Now, when the number of abortions in the Nation's Capital exceeds the number of live births, this does become the business of this House. I was hissed in this Chamber by a very few Members when I merely restated what the leader of one of the world's great religions had said on our Mall on October 7, 1979. The next day we were in session this issue came up. And I merely said that Pope John Paul II had asked people throughout the world to stand up for life.

On June 21 of this year, right here on Capitol Hill in the Hyatt Regency, at the prolife meeting of groups from all around the country, a Nobel Prize winner, Mother Teresa, spoke, and she pleaded very poignantly—and please understand how these words hit some Members—that what we do to the unborn we do to Jesus Christ himself.

Many Members in this House feel this issue so deeply that we feel we are taking unborn, preborn, human life with an immortal soul deigned into existence by God.

Now, I respect those Members who feel, for scientific reasons or their own philosophical reasons—I assume that many of them also believe in God—that there is not life until either quickening or until some moment when a doctor pats the behind of a little child and the lungs first aspirate. I respect that belief. There are some Members that I have trouble respecting their positions, where they slide back and forth—and there are many of them—or they will take a position consistent with what is being said in their districts or they will take a poll to make up their minds. But I respect the position of those of you who feel very strongly about the right of women to control their own bodies, even if there is a separate life with a separate IQ, either higher or lower, even a different racial orientation, which can be possible, different hair, different sex, and different blood.

In Lyons, France, last year, all of the blood was removed from a fetus even before quickening and replaced with different blood. What medical science is doing is precisely what the President told us on the Ellipse on January 22 of this year, that medical science is racing ahead.

I noticed, when our Vice President, whose position is evolving—that is his word—pointed out that over 15 million children, what some of us believe are preborn human beings, have been killed in their mothers' wombs, that this is calling to the attention of this Nation the need to rethink this issue, and we have to do just that.

We debate in the well of this House that moneys are not going to China, the People's Republic of China, Communist China, because of rumors we are hearing—not rumors, but things we see on PBS—about their enforced abortion policy, and that this House should not appropriate money for that, and it passes overwhelmingly, so how, even on a principle such as home rule, can we do less in our own Federal City than we will do with the nation of Communist China?

I think that the Members who disagree with those of us who call ourselves prolife, in all due respect, should maybe in the future—because things are so tense in this House anyway that we have got enough tension to last us for three more Congresses—and today on this issue, try to limit debate.

On this issue we should try to limit debate, because God knows it has been debated to death and in some cases debated to life, that we will try to limit the debate, vote our consciences and try to have respect for one another's positions.

I am just happy that my position seems to be the one that is prevailing. It was not when I arrived in this body.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not plan to take 5 minutes to discuss this and I certainly do not want to discuss the whole question of when life actually begins. I know there are a lot of deeply held feelings in this Chamber on this subject on both sides of the issue, but I think it is important to recognize in addition to the question of home rule, that there is one fundamental change that we are making in regard to policy, national policy, as it relates to the District of Columbia, and that policy has existed since 1980. In 1980, a determination was made that no Federal funds provided in this act shall be used to perform abortions except where the life of the mother would be in danger if the fetus were carried to term, or except for such medical procedures necessary for the victims of rape or incest when such rape or incest has been reported promptly to a law enforcement agency or public health service.

I think it is important to recognize that this language stipulates that there will be no exceptions, absolutely no exceptions, that the language reads that none of the funds provided in this act shall be used to perform abortions. It is an important difference in language. It is an important change in policy.

For people who might believe, or for people who might not be sure when life begins, who are aware of the fact that medical technology as it advances is making a fetus more viable earlier and earlier during the gestation period, for people who do not necessarily believe that life begins at the moment of conception, I think it is important for those of us who might not believe that life begins at the moment of conception to consider the life of the mother, to consider the life of a mother if it is a young woman in particular who has been raped and who under this language will be forced in the District of Columbia to carry that baby to term, because there are absolutely no exceptions under the law.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to prolong this debate, but the rules are such that they need to be explained. I understand what the gentleman said, but that was not the intent of the author nor is the intent of those who support this to change the substance of the exceptions. It happens to be that under the rules that prevail in this House if we were to put those exceptions in the amendment, we would be met with a point of order.

What we have to do is pass this. True, this is different. The question is whether it extends merely to those funds you can identify as Federal funds or to all funds, those funds that the District of Columbia can get when they do not have to use them for other purposes because we have the Federal funds.

In order to even get this to conference, we have to use this language. That is how we got the language that we presently call the Hyde amendment.

We are caught betwixt and between. If we bring up an amendment, we are criticized because we have changed the exceptions. We have eliminated the exceptions. If we bring the amendment up and it has the exceptions in it, we are subject to a point of order, so we are proceeding in the same manner as we have in the past when we identified the Hyde amendment as language in previous bills where we are required under the rules that we did not present, but the rules that have been adopted.

So the question really is not do you want to eliminate the exceptions. That is not our intention. The question is do you want this particular amendment that would extend the reach in terms of the dollars considered.

I have every expectation what will happen now is what has happened in the past. At conference time the exceptions are put in because the Senate insists on them as they have in the past; but please, some of us who feel very deeply about this issue, and everyone feels deeply about this issue in this Chamber, no matter on what side they might find themselves, some of us feel it is unfair to require us under the rules to present an amendment in a certain form and then be criticized because we are attempting to change the substance of the law, when if we attempt to use the language that the gentleman identified earlier, we would be subject to a point of order and not allowed to discuss it.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MRAZEK. Would the gentleman accept a unanimous-consent request to utilize the language that presently exists in section 118?

Mr. LUNGREN. I am not the author, but I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is probably not aware, but when I first offered the amendment several moments ago, it had a life of the mother exception, but it was objected to by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON], and that objection was sustained by the Chair.

I would hope if this amendment does prevail, I will offer a unanimous-consent request that the life of the mother exception be reinserted into the bill, so I will do it myself. I did that 2 years ago when the Treasury-Postal bill was up and likewise offered it. It was not objected to and that exception went back into the bill.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, would it be in order to make a unanimous-consent request now to change the language? I am asking if it would be appropriate now for me to make that request.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The life of the mother exception?

Mr. MRAZEK. No; to utilize exactly the same language in section 118 that has existed since 1980.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. No; I would not consent to that.

Mr. MRAZEK. Would it be appropriate for me to make that unanimous-consent request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is talking about the exact language that is in the current act?

Mr. MRAZEK. The language that exists in section 118 which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has sought to change by way of this language. I read it a few minutes ago and it simply stipulates that none of the Federal funds provided in this act shall be used to perform abortions except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term, or except for such medical procedures necessary for the victims of rape or incest when such rape or incest has been reported promptly to a law enforcement agency or public health service.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from California yield further?

Mr. LUNGREN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MRAZEK. I have not received a response.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the request also include the last part of that paragraph the gentleman was reading? Is the gentleman talking about the gentleman's earlier amendment that was offered? The Chair is in doubt because there is one more sentence the gentleman did not read.

Mr. MRAZEK. The additional clause is "nor are payments prohibited for drugs or devices to prevent implantation of the fertilize ovum or for medical procedures necessary for termination of an ectopic pregnancy."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is requesting that also as part of the modification, whether that is in order?

Mr. MRAZEK. That is the exact language that exists now in the Federal law, that says no Federal funds shall be used for abortion except with those exceptions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to that modification?

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LUNGREN was allowed to proceed for one additional minute.)

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to add to the language of the amendment, "except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, just let there be no mistake about it, based on what the distinguished chairman has said earlier, what we are doing here is dead wrong. No matter how you feel and where you draw the line on the question of abortion, what we are doing here is dead wrong because it affects not only the Federal funds, but the District of Columbia's own funds, their own payment.

Let us be very clear that what the amendment does is it removes the existing restriction that is already in the bill that prohibits the expenditure of Federal funds for abortions except in the case of the life of the mother, rape, incest, or ectopic pregnancy. That is already in the bill.

What this does is remove that and then say that none of the Federal funds or the District's own funds will be used for any kind of abortion, and, my colleagues, that is wrong. That is the wrong way to legislate. It is the wrong way to treat this issue.

We should leave the language in there that we have now that was carried in this bill for time after time, leave that alone. We have a restriction on the use of Federal funds for abortion, and we should not take this further step that further applies to District funds and applies to all kinds of abortions. It is wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electonic device, and there were—ayes 221, noes 199, not voting 13, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Carney for, with Mr. Torricelli against.

Messrs. HENDON, MOORE, and KOLBE changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MURTHA], having assumed the chair, Mr. HERTEL of Michigan, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3067), making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 242, nays 173, not voting 18, as follows:

Mr. COYNE and Mr. BRYANT changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous matter, on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION TO SIT ON THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1985, DURING 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be permitted to sit while the House is under the 5-minute rule on Thursday, August 1, 1985.

This has been cleared with the minority, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, concerning the vote just taken, there were a group of us on the elevator—there is something wrong with the elevator or the clocks, or something—and we were here very, very briefly after the gavel banged. I hope that in the future maybe the gavel will go down a little slower so we will not miss votes when we are indeed working in our offices with our staffs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair apologizes to the gentleman and will try to accommodate the Members.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I thank the Chair.

COASTAL ZONE MANAGEMENT REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 214 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2121.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2121) to provide for the reauthorization of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, and for other purposes, with Mr. BONER of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. SHUMWAY] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2121, a bill to reauthorize the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972—the "CZMA." The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has considered this legislation during 2 days of intensive hearings conducted by the Subcommittee on Oceanography, chaired by our distinguished colleague, Ms. MIKULSKI. We are convinced by the testimony, as well as our 13-year oversight of the CZMA, that important national interests are being well served by this program.

Twenty-three States and five territories have developed impressive CZM programs with the encouragement of Congress and the help of some Federal funding. These States have voluntarily assumed the primary responsibility for managing their shorelines. The program's voluntary nature demonstrates respect for the tradition in the United States of local and State responsibility for land use planning. Rather than overriding local and State authority for this important task, Congress has encouraged coastal States to utilize their full authority. Furthermore, through the CZMA, Congress has provided a constant reminder to coastal States of their vital role in promoting common interests shared by all States, whether coastal or landlocked.

Because the CZMA has been so successful and because pressures on the coast are constantly increasing, the committee recognizes the need to enhance the total level of support for this program. However, we are not recommending increased Federal support; rather, increases would come from greater coastal State matching contributions. Beginning in fiscal year 1989 and beyond, there would be a 50/50, rather than 80/20, Federal/State partnership.

By reducing the share of Federal involvement in CZM, we do not want to give the misimpression that this program is not serving national interests. On the contrary, our Nation will always need to play an active role in overseeing the wise management of our coastal areas because important national concerns are being served. The increasing State share reflects the fact that State programs are beginning to mature. Further implementation should be accomplished on the basis of an equal partnership.

H.R. 2121 does more than equalize the Federal/State partnership in Coastal Zone Management. Other important provisions are contained in the bill. It requires States to promptly submit for Federal review and approval any program changes they may have. Furthermore, it allows the Secretary of Commerce to reduce funding for programs which are not making satisfactory progress in identifying and protecting coastal resources of national significance. Also, some dormant provisions of the act are repealed. And, the National Estuarine Sanctuary Program is strengthened to reflect an emphasis on research, so that our knowledge and awareness of estuaries will be improved, and we can better provide for their continued health.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2121 is a carefully balanced bill which enjoys bipartisan support. In this regard, I would like to acknowledge the thoughtful contributions of Congressmen NORM LENT, our full committee ranking member, and NORM SHUMWAY, ranking member on the Oceanography Subcommittee, as well as my colleague, subcommittee Chairwoman BARBARA MIKULSKI. With their assistance, you have before you a bill which continues the important work of managing our Nation's coastal zone and reduces the need for additional spending over the next several years.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2121, legislation to reauthorize the Coastal Zone Management Act, which Chairman JONES has ably described.

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Subcommittee on Oceanography held 2 days of hearings on this program with a diversified list of witnesses testifying on its many aspects; virtually all of the testimony supported reauthorization of the program and documented the CZMA's many successes. However, Mr. Chairman, the hearings also indicated that the Coastal Zone Management Program is presently in a transition period where, since 28 of 35 U.S. coastal States or territories have approved CZM programs, the Federal role no longer needs to financially entice coastal States into the program to accomplish the national objectives of the act. As a result, I am pleased to say that the bill before us today was amended in committee to phase down the Federal share of State management grants, over a period of 4 years, from the current 80 percent Federal/20 percent State ratio to a more realistic and appropriate 50/50 ratio. Correspondingly, coastal States will have to phase up their grant match required to receive their Federal funding.

This change in the CZMA funding formula simultaneously accomplishes two imortant objectives. First, it properly decreases the Federal role in the overall program; and, secondly, it allows the overall program to grow by requiring States, according to a gradual and rasonable timetable, to increase their own financial commitment to wisely manage their respective coastal areas.

I am also pleased to be able to support an amendment which our distinguished chairman, Mr. JONES from North Carolina, will be offering to essentially freeze the authorization levels in H.R. 2121 at the fiscal year 1985 appropriation levels. Our committee, during its consideration prior to reporting H.R. 2121, recognized the need for fiscal restraint and adopted an amendment to save $99 million over the next 6 years, as compared with current authorization levels. The Jones amendment, however, will achieve $193 million savings over the next 5 years. Mr. Chairman, given our Federal deficit, this is a most responsible amendment and is consistent with the recognition that the Federal role in coastal management can be reduced at this point in the program's development so that the States can more appropriately increase their contributions.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT].

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to support, wholeheartedly, H.R. 2121, the Coastal Zone Management Reauthorization Act of 1985. I believe that the State Coastal Zone Management plans developed under the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, and the National Estuarine Sanctuary Program established under the Coastal Zone Management Act, are notable achievements. They are excellent examples of State/Federal partnership and cooperation. The federally approved Coastal Zone Management plans balance local, regional, and national needs for the wise use, protection, and development of our Nation's coastal areas.

One of the witnesses who appeared before the Oceanography Subcommittee in support of this reauthorization was New York's secretary of state, Gail Shaffer. Her excellent testimony documented the successful implementation of New York State's Coastal Zone Management Program from the time Federal approval was received in September 1982. I believe that New York's Coastal Zone Management plan is a success, and I believe that similar successes are found in the great majority of the States which have implemented Coastal Zone Management programs.

Some of my colleagues may be concerned because this reauthorization does not reduce Federal support for the Coastal Zone Management Program as far as the administration might wish. However, H.R. 2121 as reported makes substantial reductions in the authorized level of funding for the Coastal Zone Management Act, especially for sections 306 and 306A of the act. A committee amendment which will be offered on the floor today reduces those authorizations even further. Also, H.R. 2121 contains a provision which will reduce the Federal percentage of grants under sections 306 and 306A from the current 80 percent Federal/20 percent State ratio to a 50-50 Federal/State ratio, which would be achieved for fiscal year 1989 and thereafter.

Therefore, I believe that the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee has taken a fiscally responsible approach toward this reauthorization. This bill provides a reasonable reassessment of the appropriate levels of Federal and State financial participation in the Coastal Zone Management Act Grant Program. I want to compliment the chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES], the chairwoman of the Oceanography Subcommittee, the gentlelady from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] and the ranking Republican member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from California [Mr. SHUM-

WAY] for their leadership in producing a bill which preserves the essential features of this program yet also recognizes the need to cut Federal spending.

I urge all my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, to support reauthorization of the Coastal Zone Management Act and vote in favor of H.R. 2121.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI].

Ms. MIKULSKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2121, a bill to reauthorize the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972.

My colleagues and I on the Oceanography Subcommittee held 2 days of hearings on the Coastal Zone Management Program. We heard witnesses from the administration, the Coastal States, environmental organizations, and industry. We also heard from residents of coastal communities. These witnesses told us that State Coastal Zone Mangement programs are effective and are meeting the national goals of the Coastal Zone Management Act.

This Nation's vast coastal waters, lands, and resources are better managed and protected today because of the work done by the 28 State and territory coastal zone management programs approved by the Federal Government under the Coastal Zone Management Act.

These programs cover more than 90 percent of our shoreline, or 95,000 miles of our beaches, bays, estuaries, and harbors. More than 50 percent of our people live and work in these coastal areas, and this figure will grow to nearly 80 percent by the year 2000. Their health and livelihood depend on how well we manage and develop our coastal resources. I believe that the Coastal Zone Management Act has been an effective tool in achieving these goals.

The Coastal Zone Management Act is often described as an environmental law, and this is correct. But I would like to stress that the Coastal Zone Management Act has other national goals. Among other goals, the Coastal Zone Management Act seeks to streamline the State, local, and Federal permitting process and to foster balanced economic growth in coastal areas.

The Subcommittee on Oceanography has documented the achievements of State coastal programs. Coastal States have consolidated and simplified State and local permitting procedures and significantly reduced the permit review time. This has saved money for businesses and developers by creating a more efficient regulatory process.

Coastal States also have used Federal funds to help revitalize urban waterfronts, to retain fishing facilities, and to restore recreational areas.

They have used coastal zone management planning funds to produce environmentally sensitive development plans resulting in substantial private investment in coastal areas. This is balanced economic growth, and it is possible because of the Coastal Zone Management Act and the work of local and State coastal management programs.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2121 also amends the National Estuarine Reserve Program to clarify and strengthens its estuarine research functions, and to provide for a system of estuarine reserves that will be fully representative of the range and diversity of the estuarine areas of this Nation.

Finally, I want to emphasize that H.R. 2121 and the National Coastal Zone Management Program enjoys strong bipartisan support. I want particularly to thank Congressman NORM SHUMWAY, the ranking member on the Oceanography Subcommittee, for his many contributions to this bill. On my side of the aisle I would like to thank Congressmen STUDDS and TAUZIN for their important role in resolving the conflict.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries unanimously reported H.R. 2121 to this House, and I strongly recommend my colleagues to give their support to this vital and successful program of coastal zone management.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER].

Mr. CARPER. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today as a strong supporter of the Coastal Zone Management Act, and I support this legislation to continue the Federal Coastal Zone Program.

I represent a State that has long recognized the value of its coastal resources. Indeed, the State of Delaware passed its coastal zone law in 1971, a year before the passage of the Federal Coastal Zone Management Act whose reauthorization we are considering today. Delawareans are proud of their act which is, arguably, the most protective coastal zone law of any State in the country.

Part of the strength of the Delaware Coastal Zone Program is its close working relationship with the Federal Coastal Zone Management Program. This legislation will allow that cooperative effort to continue by providing financial and technical assistance for the continuing management of coastal development.

I commend the chairman of the committee, Mr. JONES, and the chairwoman of the Oceanography Subcommittee, Ms. MIKULSKI, and the ranking members for bringing to the floor a responsible bill which will bring the Federal/State funding ratio down from the current 80–20 to 50–50. I also understand the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee chairman will be offering an amendment to reduce the authorization levels for fiscal year 1986 to this year's appropriation levels. I feel these actions are a reasonable compromise between the unquestioned need for this program and budget pressures which cannot be ignored.

In 1972, the Congress of the United States stated, through the Coastal Zone Management Act, its intent to protect our invaluable coastal zone. It is time for us to reaffirm that commitment. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2121, legislation to reauthorize Federal support for State coastal zone management programs through the end of 1991. I believe coastal zone management has worked well; it has served the interests of our Nation in the balanced and prudent use of our limited coastal resources; and it has established a useful and durable partnership between the Federal Government and State governments on issues affecting the coasts.

Five years ago, I authored the Coastal Zone Management Act Amendments of 1980. As chairman of the House Subcommittee on Oceanography at the time, I conducted a comprehensive series of hearings throughout the country on coastal zone management. Those hearings established a record that demonstrated clearly the value that this program has had for the country, as well as the difficulty of planning for the balanced use of coastal resources in the face of ever-increasing economc, environmental, and recreational pressures. The events of the past 5 years have not altered the fundamental importance of this program to the well-being of our coastal areas, nor have they diminished the value of the Federal-State cooperative mechanisms that are part of the law.

Although continuing a program of proven value to our country, the legislation before us today does reflect the changing times. The bill calls for a smaller, more focused coastal zone management law with State government responsible for an increasingly large share of the financial cost of the program. The bill will guarantee the continuation of coastal zone management, emphasizing those parts of the program, such as estuarine sanctuaries and basic management grants, that have proven to be of greatest value in recent years.

During the hearings before the Oceanography Subcommittee this spring, we heard virtually unanimous support for the continuation of this program from representatives of the States and from coastal and environmental groups. But I was especially pleased by the testimony of Mr. Edwin Sidman, president of the Beacon companies, a Boston real estate development firm that is currently involved in Rowes Wharf, a massive multiuse development project on the last piece of undeveloped downtown waterfront in Boston. This developer praised the CZM Program for "Establishing a policymaking forum that facilitates consistency in the application of Federal and State policies as to the development, use, and conservation of our precious coastal zone areas." The only dissenting voice at our hearings came, unfortunately, from the administration. The only reason given for opposition was that the program was working so well that it should be financed entirely by the States. Only in this administration could a program's success be used as the justification for its termination.

Although I have no hesitation in supporting H.R. 2121, I do note with disappointment our failure in this bill to address satisfactorily the Supreme Court discision of January 1984 regarding the question of OCS lease sales and consistency with the CZM Program.

The Court decision to the contrary, the fact is that OCS lease sales do "directly affect" the coastal zone. For this reason, they should be subject to the consistency requirements of section 307(c) of this act. I continue to believe that Congress has a responsibility to deal with this issue, but I am willing to concede that this is not the ideal time, nor the ideal legislation, in which to confront this question.

Coastal zone management embodies a partnership between the Federal Government and State governments that has worked well. It is a model of that most conservative of doctrines—federalism, for it reflects interests responsive not simply to the narrow concerns of the Federal Government or particular State governments. On the contrary, coastal zone management has furthered the truly broad and national interest in policies that strike a balance between economic development and environmental protection in the coastal zone. Support for this legislation is not a partisan issue; it is not a regional issue; it is a question of common sense and support for a program that has worked in the past, that is working today, and that has much more to contribute to the economy and ecology of our country in the years ahead.

I want to congratulate the distinguished chairwoman of the Oceanography Subcommittee, Ms. MIKULSKI, for her leadership in this issue, and I urge approval of the bill.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, as many know, I had intended to offer an amendment on the issue of Federal consistency. I feel very strongly about this issue in terms of the State and communities ability to be heard on issues that impact on the coast.

In January 1984, the Supreme Court found that because OCS oil and gas lease sales occur outside the coastal zone, it cannot directly affect the coastal zone and, therefore, are not subject to the consistency provision of the CZMA. I think that is contrary to the basic intent of Congress in the provisions that were contained in CZMA initially.

The amendment I would have offered would have asserted congressional intent that Federal activities on OCS, including lease sales, should be subject to the consistency provision. My goal is to return to the States the authority they had before the Supreme Court and to give them a say in the major activities which affect their coastlines.

This amendment, it seems to me, would have represented a return to cooperative federalism, which is the basis for CZMA. I understand the concerns about reauthorization and it is my view that having a bill, a reauthorization of CZMA, is much more important, obviously, than having no bill at all, and I do not want to jeopardize the opportunity for this legislation to be adopted.

For that reason, I do not intend to offer such an amendment, but I want it conditioned on a commitment from the committee to address the consistency issue. I would expect the committee, the subcommittee, to hold hearings when and if decisions of the courts or actions of the administration occur which would erode the intent of Congress on this issue of consistency.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland for a response on that.

Ms. MIKULSKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to give the gentleman those assurances. I want to thank him for his remarks and his cooperation in reauthorizing the CZMA. My colleague and I are interested in the issues raised by my friend, the gentleman from California, and the Subcommittee on Oceanography will continue to study them and to take whatever action is necessary and appropriate to improve the consistency review procedures.

If there is any serious threat that these procedures will be weakened, I can assure my colleague that the Subcommittee on Oceanography will hold such oversight hearings. I thank the gentleman for his cooperation, gallantry, and common sense.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentlewoman for her comments, and also for her leadership on this issue as she brings it to the floor. I look forward to working with her and working with the minority side on ensuring that the State's voices and the communities' voices are heard on an issue that can surely impact on the people in those areas.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New york [Mr. MANTON].

Mr. MANTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, rise to give my full support to H.R. 2121, the reauthorization of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1985. I wholeheartedly commend the chairwoman and the members of the Subcommittee on Oceanography, and the chairman and the members of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries for presenting the House with a compromise which strikes a fair balance between oil and gas development on the Outer Continental Shelf and the rational use of our coastal resources for tourists, recreation and commercial fishing.

Since 1972, when the Coastal Zone Management Act was first enacted, Congress has recognized the important national interests which are achieved by effective coastal zone management. With this legislature foresight our country has benefited from the resurgence of an economic and environmental vitality in our Nation's coastal areas. The extraordinary success in applying Federal coastal zone management funds to economic development projects, in managing the Nation's coastal resources, and streamlining administrative decisionmaking, may all be attributed to the reauthorization of this law and continued Federal involvement with program oversight and funding.

I am particularly pleased to support a new measure in the Coastal Zone Management Act which provides for the national estuarine sanctuary research system. We now have designated 15 national estuarine sanctuaries, therefore, it is most appropriate to specifically identify nationally significant estuaries which are threatened by pollution, development, overuse or depletion of their natural resources.

Through their designation as national estuarine research sanctuaries, they will be utilized for the orderly intergovernmental planning processes provided for within the act.

Although my colleagues on the committee would prefer greater funding levels than are provided for in the current reauthorization all of us on the committee are aware of the need to respect budget constraints and the limitations set by this body on all authorizations. Despite the reduced authorization in this bill this legislation is still an important step in providing States with a strong incentive to serve local and national interests by developing and implementing coastal programs.

Again, I commend the gentlewoman from Maryland and the gentleman from North Carolina for their excellent work and urge passage of H.R. 2121.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2121, a bill to provide for the authorization of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972.

I would first like to thank my colleagues on the Oceanography Subcommittee, Chairwoman MIKULSKI and ranking minority member, Mr. SHUMWAY, for their leadership in bringing this bill to the floor today. Both have done an outstanding job in developing a bill to reauthorize this vital coastal program.

H.R. 2121 provides for the continued distribution of Federal financial assistance to the coastal States for the development and implementation of State coastal zone management programs. The proportion of Federal funding will gradually be phased down from the current 80 percent to 50 percent in 1989. This Federal financial assistance has been extremely beneficial to the State of Washington in the past, and is essential to the continued vitality of the coastal programs in many coastal States.

In 1976, Washington became the first State to gain Federal approval for its Coastal Zone Management Program. Since then, numerous projects have been initiated with CZM funds to improve the Washington coastline. For example, Tacoma, WA, applied a $25,000 CZM grant to upgrade its Ruston Way waterfront. This seed money attracted $10 million in private investment and another $9 million in State and local funds for park acquisition and development.

H.R. 2121 also amends section 315 of the CZMA by renaming the existing estuarine sanctuaries as national estuarine reserves and providing further guidance to NOAA and the coastal States regarding the research purposes of the estuarine reserves.

Mr. Chairman, the Coastal Zone Management Act has been extremely important to the people of the coastal States and the Nation in providing for the preservation, protection, development, restoration, and enhancement of the resources of the coastal zone. I strongly support H.R. 2121, and urge its passage today.

Mr. SHUMWAY. I have no further requests for time, Mr. Chairman, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now reported in the committee bill shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each section shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Coastal Zone Management Reauthorization Act of 1985".

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

REFERENCE

SEC. 2. Whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment, or repeal, of a section, subsection, paragraph, or other provision, the reference is to be considered to be made to a section, subsection, paragraph, or other provision of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.) unless otherwise specified.

REDUCTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE GRANTS

SEC. 3. (a) Section 312(c) (16 U.S.C. 1458(c)) is amended by striking "if the Secretary determines" and all that follows thereafter and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "if the Secretary determines that the coastal state—

"(1) is failing to make significant improvement in achieving the coastal management objectives specified in section 303(2) (A) through (I); or

"(2) is failing to make satisfactory progress in providing in its management program for the matters referred to in section 306(i) (A) and (B).".

(b)(1) Subsection (a) of section 306 of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1455) is amended by striking, "The Secretary may" and all that follows through "if the Secretary—" and substituting in lieu thereof the following: "The Secretary may make grants to any coastal state for the purpose of administering that state's management program, if the state provides for the applicable fiscal year: 20 per centum of the grant for fiscal year 1986; 30 per centum of the grant for fiscal year 1987; 40 per centum of the grant for fiscal year 1988; and 50 per centum of the grant for each fiscal year thereafter. The Secretary may make the grant only if the Secretary—".

(2) Section 306A is amended by striking section (d)(1) and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"(d)(1) The Secretary may make grants to any coastal state for the purpose of carrying out the project or purpose for which such grants are awarded, if the state provides for the applicable fiscal year: 20 per centum of the grant for fiscal year 1986; 30 per centum of the grant for fiscal year 1987; 40 per centum of the grant for fiscal year 1988; and 50 per centum of the grant for each fiscal year thereafter.".

(c) Section 306(g) (16 U.S.C. 1455) is amended by deleting the second sentence, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The state shall promptly notify the Secretary of any amendment or modification and submit it for Secretarial approval. The Secretary may suspend all or part of any grant made under this section pending state submission of the amendment or modification.".

NATIONAL ESTUARINE RESERVE RESEARCH SYSTEM

SEC. 4. Section 315 (16 U.S.C. 1461) is amended to read as follows:

"NATIONAL ESTUARINE RESERVE RESEARCH SYSTEM

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF THE SYSTEM.—There is established the National Estuarine Reserve Research System (hereinafter referred to in this section as the 'System') that consists of—

"(1) each estuarine sanctuary designated under this section as in effect before October 1, 1985; and

"(2) each estuarine area designated as a national estuarine reserve under subsection (b).

Each estuarine sanctuary referred to in paragraph (1) is hereby designated as a national estuarine reserve.

"(b) DESIGNATION OF NATIONAL ESTUARINE RESERVES.—After September 30, 1985, the Secretary may designate an estuarine area as a national estuarine reserve if—

"(1) the Governor of the coastal state in which the area is located nominates the area for that designation; and

"(2) the Secretary finds that—

"(A) the area is a representative estuarine ecosystem that is suitable for long-term research and contributes to the biogeographical and typological balance of the System;

"(B) the law of the coastal state provides long-term protection for reserve resources to ensure a stable environment for research;

"(C) designation of the area as a reserve will serve to enhance public awareness and understanding of estuarine areas, and provide suitable opportunities for public education and interpretation; and

"(D) the coastal state in which the area is located has complied with the requirements of any regulations issued by the Secretary to implement this section.

"(c) ESTUARINE RESEARCH GUIDELINES.—The Secretary shall develop guidelines for the conduct of research within the System that shall include—

"(1) a mechanism for identifying, and establishing priorities among, the coastal management issues that should be addressed through coordinated research within the System;

"(2) the establishment of common research principles and objectives to guide the development of research programs within the System;

"(3) the identification of uniform research methodologies which will ensure comparability of data, the broadest application of research results, and the maximum use of the System for research purposes;

"(4) the establishment of performance standards upon which the effectiveness of the research efforts and the value of reserves within the System in addressing the coastal management issues identified in subsection (1) may be measured; and

"(5) the consideration of additional sources of funds for estuarine research than the funds authorized under this Act, and strategies for encouraging the use of such funds within the System, with particular emphasis on mechanisms established under subsection (d).

In developing the guidelines under this section, the Secretary shall consult with prominent members of the estuarine research community.

"(d) PROMOTION AND COORDINATION OF ESTUARINE RESEARCH.—The Secretary shall take such action as is necessary to promote and coordinate the use of the System for research purposes including—

"(1) requiring that the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, in conducting or supporting estuarine research, give priority consideration to research that uses the System; and

"(2) consulting with other Federal and state agencies to promote use of one or more reserves within the system by such agencies when conducting estuarine research.

"(e) FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—(1) The Secretary may, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary shall promulgate, make grants—

"(A) to a coastal state—

"(i) for purposes of acquiring such lands and waters, and any property interests therein, as are necessary to ensure the appropriate long-term management of an area as a national estuarine reserve,

"(ii) for purposes of operating or managing a national estuarine reserve and constructing appropriate reserve facilities, or

"(iii) for purposes of conducting educational or interpretive activities; and

"(B) to any coastal state or public or private person for purposes of supporting research and monitoring within a national estuarine reserve that are consistent with the research guidelines developed under subsection (c).

"(2) Financial assistance provided under paragraph (1) shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary considers necessary or appropriate to protect the interests of the United States, including requiring coastal states to execute suitable title documents setting forth the property interest or interests of the United States in any lands and waters acquired in whole or part with such financial assistance.

"(3)(A) The amount of the financial assistance provided under paragraph (1)(A)(i) of subsection (e) with respect to the acquisition of lands and waters, or interests therein, for any one national estuarine reserve may not exceed an amount equal to 50 percent of the costs of the lands, waters, and interests therein or $4,000,000, whichever amount is less.

"(B) The amount of the financial assistance provided under paragraph (1)(A)(ii) and (iii) and paragraph (1)(B) of subsection (e) may not exceed 50 percent of the costs incurred to achieve the purposes described in those paragraphs with respect to a reserve.

"(f) EVALUATION OF SYSTEM PERFORMANCE.—(1) The Secretary shall periodically evaluate the operation and management of each national estuarine reserve, including education and interpretive activities, and the research being conducted within the reserve.

"(2) If evaluation under paragraph (1) reveals that the operation and management of the reserve is deficient, or that the research being conducted within the reserve is not consistent with the research guidelines developed under subsection (c), the Secretary may suspend the eligibility of that reserve for financial assistance under subsection (e) until the deficiency or inconsistency is remedied.

"(3) The Secretary may withdraw the designation of an estuarine area as a national estuarine reserve if evaluation under paragraph (1) reveals that—

"(A) the basis for any one or more of the findings made under subsection (b)(2) regarding that area no longer exists; or

"(B) a substantial portion of the research conducted within the area, over a period of years, has not been consistent with the research guidelines developed under subsection (c).

"(g) ANNUAL REPORT.—Beginning with fiscal year 1986, the Secretary shall provide to the Congress an annual report that sets forth, with respect to the period covered by the report—

"(1) new designations of national extuarine reserves;

"(2) any expansion of existing national estuarine reserves;

"(3) the status of the research program being conducted within the System; and

"(4) a summary of the evaluations made under subsection (f). The Secretary shall submit the report within three months after the end of the fiscal year covered by the report.".

REPEALS

SEC. 5. The following are repealed:

(1) Section 310 (16 U.S.C. 1456c; relating to research and technical assistance programs and grants).

(2) Section 314 (16 U.S.C. 1460; establishing the Coastal Zone Management Advisory Committee).

(3) Subsection (c) of section 15 of the Coastal Zone Management Act Amendments of 1976, Public Law 94-370 (16 U.S.C. 1451 note; relating to certain additional personnel positions).

AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 6. Section 318 (16 U.S.C. 1464) is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended—

(A) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) Such sums, not to exceed $40,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $38,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, $36,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988, $35,000,000 for each of the the fiscal years ending September 30, 1989, September 30, 1990, and September 30, 1991, as may be necessary for grants under section 306, to remain available until expended;".

(B) By amending paragraph (2)—

(i) by striking "$20,000,000 and inserting in lieu thereof "$16,000,000", and

(ii) by striking "September 30, 1985,'" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1991,";

(C) by amending paragraph (4) by striking "September 30, 1985," and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1991,";

(D) by amending paragraph (5) by striking "September 30, 1985," and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1991,"; and

(E) by amending paragraph (6)—

(i) by striking "$6,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000", and

(ii) by striking "September 30, 1985," and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1991,".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 7. This Act takes effect October 1, 1985.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. JONES OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. JONES of North Carolina: Strike all of SEC. 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following new SEC. 6:

"SEC. 6. Section 318 (16 U.S.C. 1464) is amended as follows:

(1) subsection (a) is amended—

(A) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

'(1) such sums, not to exceed $36,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986; $36,600,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987; $37,900,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988; $38,800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989; and $40,600,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, as may be necessary for grants under sections 306 and 306A, to remain available until expended;'.

(B) By striking paragraph (2) and renumbering subsequent paragraphs—

(C) By amending the new paragraph (3) to read as follows:

'(3) such sums not to exceed $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986; and $1,500,000 for each of the fiscal years occurring during the period beginning October 1, 1986 and ending September 30, 1990, as may be necessary for grants under section 309, to remain available until expended;'

(D) By amending the new paragraph (4) to read as follows:

'(4) such sums not to exceed $2,930,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986; $3,800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987; $4,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988; $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989; and $5,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, as may be necessary, for grants under section 315, to remain available until expended; and

(E) by amending the new paragraph (5) to read as follows:

'(5) such sums not to exceed $3,300,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986; $3,300,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987; $3,300,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988; $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989; and $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, as may be necessary for administrative expenses incident to the administration of this title.' "

At the end of the bill, add a new Sec. 8, as follows:

"TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 8. Section 308(h) (16 U.S.C. 1457(h)) is amended by deleting 'subsections (c)(1)' each place it appears and inserting instead 'subsections (c)'."

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the amendments which we now bring before the Members propose to freeze the authorization levels in H.R. 2121. Authorized levels for fiscal year 1986 are frozen at the level of fiscal year 1985 appropriations. In subsequent years, authorized levels rise only to the extent necessary to accommodate the expected rate of inflation—4½ percent per year. The term of authorization is reduced to 5 years.

I want to make clear the intent of this amendment. This is a deficit reduction amendment. It reflects the strong desire of the members of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to control the deficit. Over the 5-year term of this authorization, it will save $193 million as compared to currently authorized levels. It does not reflect any intent to phase out this or phase down this critical program.

Extensive hearings before my committee clearly demonstrated the important national interests being served through this program. Many of these have been explained in detail in our committee report. In view of these national interests, the committee recommended what I consider to be justified authorization levels. These levels should be considered to reflect the committee's view of the value and accomplishments of this program.

However, we also realize the importance of deficit reduction. Thus, we are proposing freeze in Federal expenditures under the CZMA. In combination with other aspects of this bill, such as provisions to increase State matching contributions, the total level of support for coastal management will increase over time. Therefore, this amendment will aid deficit reduction efforts, while safeguarding the national interests in wise coastal management.

The second part of this amendment makes a purely technical adjustment in section 308(h) of the CZMA. The amendment would clarify that section 308(c)(2) grants to assist State participation in Outer Continental Shelf leasing, may be financed through the coastal energy impact fund. This amendment is offered entirely for purposes of clarification. It does not alter congressional intent or deviate from current agency practice in administering this provision.

I urge my colleagues to support these amendments.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendments being offered by our committee's distinguished chairman, Mr. JONES.

Mr. Chairman, by freezing the CZMA authorizations at last year's appropriations levels, and only allowing for an increase to offset inflation, this amendment will reduce the authorization levels for the CZMA by $193 million over the next 5 years. Moreover, this amendment leaves intact a provision which will gradually phase down the funding formula from the present 80 to 20 Federal/State ratio to a more appropriate 50 to 50 ratio. In doing so, this legislation will not jeopardize our Nation's coastal areas by jeopardizing the program, but in fact it will allow for an increase in the overall program, not at Federal expense, but by requiring an increased State match for these CZM grants.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is fiscally responsible; it will ensure that the overall appropriation for the various programs under the CZMA will, for the next 5 years, never exceed, in terms of real dollars, the appropriations for the CZMA made in fiscal year 1985. Of course, the appropriations process always allows for less than authorized appropriations, and considering the shift in the Federal/State ratio, it is my belief that future appropriations may not even need to reach as high as this bill's authorization ceilings in the upcoming years.

Again, I support Mr. JONES' amendment, and I commend him for his concern for our Nation's fiscal shortfall, as well as his longstanding concern for our Nation's valuable coastal areas.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHUMWAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. This amendment is offered on behalf of the bipartisan leadership of the committee.

The amendment refines what I believe is already a fiscally responsible approach by the committee to the reauthorization of the Coastal Zone Management Act. It would further reduce authorization levels for the various sections of the Coastal Zone Management Act through fiscal year 1990. I note, for my colleagues on this side of aisle, that the approach taken in this amendment—which is basically a freeze for fiscal year 1986 at fiscal year 1985 appropriation levels, and then adding a 4.5-percent inflation factor for the outyears—is virtually identical to the approach which has been adopted by the Senate Commerce Committee in its bill reauthorizing the Coastal Zone Management Act (S. 959).

This amendment provides a very substantial savings, when compared with authorization levels in existing law, and when compared with authorization levels in H.R. 2121, as reported. As compared to authorizations under current law, savings for fiscal year 1986 would be $42.77 million—a 50-percent savings—and for fiscal years 1986-90, the cumulative savings would be $193.50 million—a 45-percent savings.

As compared to H.R. 2121, as reported, the amendment saves $29.77 million for fiscal year 1986—a 41-percent savings—and fiscal years 1986-90, there is a cumulative savings of $112.05 million—a 32-percent savings.

In short, this amendment provides very substantial savings as compared to both current law and the bill under consideration, and is as close to a freeze amendment in terms of the most recent appropriation as one reasonably can get. I am informed by the policy level officials at NOAA that this amendment is most welcome to them. I urge my colleagues on this side of the aisle to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHUMWAY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise also to support the amendment, as well as the bill as a whole, and to commend the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI], for their leadership on the bill and also for making the hard decisions necessary to come in within a freeze level for 1986 and at the same time make an important program function within tight budget constraints.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON], and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the committee's amendment to reduce the authorized spending levels in H.R. 2121 to the fiscal year 1985 appropriations under the CZMA. This freeze will amount to a savings over current authorized levels of more than $193 million over a 5-year period which amounts to a savings of about 45 percent.

This amendment will make a significant reduction in the authorized spending levels for the National Coastal Zone Management Program. At the same time, my colleagues and I on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee want to preserve the integrity of this program. We believe this amendment will do that in a fiscally sound manner.

I believe that we have provided sufficient funds to maintain the current State coastal programs. We have also allowed for a modest increase during the years 1987-90 to provide for increased program costs.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the committee's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments?

If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. GUARINI) having assumed the chair, Mr. BONER of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2121) to provide for the reauthorization of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 214, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2121, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request to the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

NEW DEFERRAL OF BUDGET AUTHORITY FOR 1985 FOR UNITED STATES INFORMATION AGENCY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-90)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, July 30, 1985.)

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION TO SIT DURING 5-MINUTE RULE ON THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1985

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be permitted to sit during the 5-minute rule on Thursday, August 1, 1985.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER]?

Mr. BARTLETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, we do not have a clearance from the minority leadership over here.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. The gentleman from Florida, Mr. CLAY SHAW, has cleared this as the ranking member.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, would the gentleman repeat the exact request?

Mr. HOYER. We are asking unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be permitted to sit during the 5-minute rule on Thursday, August 1, 1985.

It is my understanding that the gentleman from Florida, Mr. CLAY SHAW, has in fact cleared this request.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER]?

There was no objection.

AMERICA—LAND OF OPPORTUNITY

(Mr. STRANG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks, and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Speaker, the ability to communicate is obviously an important skill and talent. I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a young woman in the Third District of Colorado who recently displayed her forensic skills by winning a statewide high school speech contest.

Rebecca Harwood, a junior at Roaring Fork High School in my hometown of Carbondale, was the winner of the second annual Abraham Lincoln Foundation's "land of opportunity" speech contest.

Rebecca's speech explains with clear logic why we should never take our freedoms in this country for granted, and she does it with beautiful flow of words and ideas. I commend it to your reading.

I urge my colleagues to take advantage of this nonpartisan program and to help expand it next year across the Nation so all 10th, 11th and 12th grade students have the opportunity to express the growing resurgence of patriotism in America.

AMERICA—LAND OF OPPORTUNITY

America. We all know it has been labeled "the land of opportunity", but many Americans fail to realize why. We grow up in what most foreigners and refugees consider the most wonderful land and live a seemingly perfect life full of endless opportunity, that we as Americans, tend to overlook. We take for granted the freedom, which is ultimately responsible for making America the land of opportunity, and the most important freedom we have is the freedom of choice.

How would you like your government telling you that you are only allowed one child, or that blue Jeans are illegal, or that Monopoly and Chess are forbidden? Such items are common in America, yet many governments don't grant their inhabitants such luxuries—yes, luxuries. Just try and buy a Walkman in Russia and you'll see what I mean. Our choices in the grocery store are practically unlimited and nowhere else can one find such a selection of fresh fruits and vegetables year-round. Even clothes make America great. Have you seen the latest fashions in Poland? Not too exciting. Why, I have the freedom to walk through town wearing a Hefty garbage bag, if I ever felt the urge. That is what I call freedom of choice!

Our choices, however, extend beyond that of monetary purchases. Every person controls the fate of his or her own life. The amount and kind of education I receive is governed by me. I, like every one of you, have the freedom to be a doctor, homemaker, mechanic—or even president. America has the wonderful privilege called free enterprise. That means I can sell hubcaps legally, open up a law firm, or start a newspaper without the government dictating what I am allowed to print. We have constructed laws against child and forced labor, and work is awarded accordingly, so I can be as rich, or as poor, as I choose. Therefore, my fate lies in my own hands, not in those of the government.

Our liberties cover that of religion also. Our country is a melting pot of every known religion, and even some of those not known. Religion is very much a part of our country, as it is most, but here we have the choice whether or not to believe, to participate, or support. We can, within reasonable limits, practice our religion any way we choose under the 1st amendment of the constitution. Also protected by the first amendment is that of speech. In America we can talk freely without Government spies recording our words, or without fear that our neighbors are undercover fascist police who will turn us onto the mercy of the Third Reich. Nobody can dictate my choice of words, whether for this speech, or any other I might give.

So, we all agree that America has privileges not bestowed upon other countries, so you might ask, "Why can't they all be like us?" Many were, at one point. They lost their freedom, though, as a child loses his privilege to eat cookies when he becomes ill from them. You see, they abused their rights, and when a government is on the verge of collapse, it turns to communism, where the government spends every one's money, because its people were not doing it well enough for themselves. It works up to a point, but that kind of extreme control leads to a society void of individual, creative thinking that is so vital to a growing world. America has a unique government which is difficult to maintain due to lack of control. Therefore, it is up to the people to make it work. To do this, we need to use our freedoms wisely. Our freedom to vote decides the fate of our country, yet only just over half of the population use it, and even less on the state, county, and town levels. Another freedom frequently not taken advantage of is the freedom of speech, to take an active role in the government to make it what we want. Our country has drifted into a state of lethargic antipathy in which we criticize it for its faults, yet not do anything about them, which lowers the spirit causing depressions. We have lost the patriotism which we once had during the war, and even the American flag has lost the respect it deserves. No longer is the Pledge of Allegiance said daily, or the flag displayed in most classrooms. I think that the degenerating Statue of Liberty symbolizes the degenerating faith and pride we once had, and must retrieve to insure the country's well being.

The difference then, must come from the people, so rather then ask what more your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country. We have an exceptional system, that, like most things, is not faultless, but is ever changing. We have power over the changes that occur, and we must use our freedom of choice to its benefit, not its downfall. Part of the change is simply realizing, why is America the land of opportunity? It is very difficult for an American to come up with an appropriate answer, and that is sad. We know we are free, but exactly what are we free to do? Once we understand the benefits of living here, we can appreciate them, and utilize what this country has to offer. It is our responsibility, as a whole, to make our country work, through changing our attitudes and displaying interest and pride, to show that freedom of the people produces a working, effective government.

The freedoms our government has given us are costly to it. By granting us free enterprise, it has produced an enormous debt. By not controlling all money, the rich and poor classes are separating. Why is this your problem? Because you are America! You are the government, and you have the power to make the decisions that change it, for better or for worse. Our freedom of choice that we value so much can be used both ways. We can choose to ignore the elderly, the poor, the homeless, and the needy, and pretend it is our government's responsibility to protect them, or we can do something about the problems which threaten the stability of America. The people are what makes our country great, and if we honor and respect the land we live in, keeping our country united and strong, America will continue to be the leader of the world. We have a good thing going here, and realizing it is the first step to rekindling the flame of patriotism. Remember, dandelions only flourish where lawns are not tended. Because this is America we together, have the ability, through our power of choice, to keep America, the land of opportunity.

RESOLVING THE BUDGET CRISIS

(Mr. PANETTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, this week Congress faces what probably will be its last opportunity this year to resolve the budget crisis. We are now 2½ months past the May 15 deadline for passage of a budget. While the House and Senate have adopted separate resolutions, the conference has failed to find the essential ingredients for compromise. Part of the problem lies with the White House, which has provided little if any leadership over the past few months. Part of the problem lies with partisan posturing on Capitol Hill. But the bottom line is clear to all Americans—Washington is failing to deal with the most severe deficit crisis that has ever faced this Nation. At a time when the budget process should be at its strongest, it is being undermined by confusion, contradiction, and double talk.

Five appropriation bills have been passed in the House without a conference agreement to enforce targets. The Ways and Means Committee, to its credit, has completed action on a reconciliation bill making some of the savings assumed in the House-passed budget resolution. But there is no guarantee that the rest of reconciliation will be implemented. The House has had to resort to adopting a resolution making its own budget resolution the conference report for purposes of enforcement. In short, the budget process is surviving, but it is full of holes, it is taking on water, and it is threatening to sink completely unless we end this ad hoc approach to budgeting and fulfill our duties under the Budget Act.

Actually the procedural difficulties are only half of the problem. GNP growth has fallen dramatically from projected levels, threatening to add to this year's budget deficit, which, in turn, will increase next year's interest payments on the debt. Furthermore, a weak economy this year puts in question the optimistic growth estimates of next year, which could mean even higher deficits still in fiscal year 1986. Even worse, many are still predicting a recession in 1986 or 1987, which means deficits could top $300 billion a year by the end of the decade.

Yes, our appropriation bills have been frozen at prior year levels, but a simple freeze of discretionary spending is not, unfortunately, a solution for $200 billion deficits. It is better than nothing, but it is not nearly enough.

With the August recess a few days away, we appear to be in a game of budget musical chairs, where the goal is to make the last offer with the biggest numbers before the Congress leaves town at the end of the week. Whichever political party is left without a chair to sit in when the music stops will, according to the strategists, lose the deficit public relations battle.

But this is not a game that will be won by public relations—by 30-second TV spots showing scenes of morning in America, or afternoon in America or early evening in America. It will not be won by catchy slogans or fancy buzzwords. There will be no winners because this crisis is not a partisan crisis, it is a national crisis. The failure to deal with $200 billion deficits will be a plague on the houses of both Democrats and Republicans. A nation in recession could care less about the details of partisan bickering. They surely will remember the failure of both executive and legislative branches to act when action was essential.

But the game goes on. The House offer is denounced by the Senate. The Senate offer is undermined by the President. Now the talk is that the House should not even consider the Senate offer seriously since it has been rejected by the President. The strategy is simple: With the President not supporting the Senate plan, especially the call for a delay on the Social Security COLA and the oil-import fee, the House can ignore the Senate offer and blame the President for the failure of Congress to reach agreement on a budget. It is all like a sad version of Abbott and Costello's "who's on first" routine.

Frankly, to some this sort of strategy might make sense in the marbled hallways of the U.S. Capitol. It might even make brilliant short-term political sense. But outside Washington, DC it looks like another dodge to avoid resolving a critical problem. This approach places the goals of making the Senate look bad or the President look inconsistent above the very solemn responsibility we have to deal with the greatest crisis facing this Nation: the deficit crisis.

Most would agree that President Reagan has failed to provide strong leadership in the budget area. Instead of using his election mandate to build the essential coalition needed to make hard decisions on the budget, he plays business as usual. But Congress cannot let a President's failure weaken our resolve to attack these yearly deficits of $200 billion and more. As the Speaker has said "two wrongs don't made a right." Two weak branches of government failing to grapple with the greatest economic issue of our day can cause devastating economic damage in the future.

The Senate is not perfect, but at least, after months of budget hide and seek, we have on the bargaining table all the key ingredients for real deficit reduction: defense, entitlements, and taxes. Anyone who has looked at the Federal budget for 5 minutes can tell you that these areas have to be addressed in any realistic deficit reduction package. The Senate has finally acknowledged what the most basic arithmetic tells you, and now it is up to the House to respond with an offer which includes these essential components of deficit reduction. With a little more work, some bold action and some political courage, we can have a deficit reduction package with some real teeth in it by the end of the week regardless of where the President stands.

The ball is really in Congress' court now—clear thinking tells us we are not going to get much political mileage out of trying to unload the deficit crisis onto the shoulders of a lameduck President who is recovering from surgery, who is enormously popular with the American people and who genuinely does not give two hoots about budget deficits. Failure to join with the Senate this week to develop an ambitious deficit reduction package will not be forgiven by the American people no matter how much House Democrats and Senate Republicans point their fingers at the President or House Republicans point their fingers at the Senate leadership.

The better strategy is to agree on deficit reductions through cuts in defense, entitlements, and revenue increases in a budget resolution, enforce those reductions through the reconciliation process and budget scorekeeping system, and then let the President deal with the political fallout if he chooses to veto any part of a true deficit reduction package.

The American people are smart enough in that situation to judge who will be responsible for failing to deal with the deficit. But to stop now and do only a patchwork budget resolution is to capitulate to the pollyannas in and out of the White House who refuse to acknowledge the economic threat deficits pose for the Nation.

We are in one of those situations where, as Benjamin Franklin said, "We must all hang together, or assuredly we shall all hang separately." We can play games this week, worry over our press clippings that tell us whether we are winning the public relations battle and hope that there is a chair left when the deficit music stops, or we can find common ground with the Senate, agree on a budget resolution that contains $60 or $70 billion in deficit reductions for the next fiscal year, come back in September and implement the budget through appropriation bills and reconciliation. We will not regret rising above the demands of politics for this one effort at dealing with a crisis—there are still plenty of other games to be played and issues to distinguish our two great political parties by. But this is not one of them. Our reward for tough action will be a manageable deficit, a strengthened foundation for economic growth and the knowledge that we can turn to more positive debates over the future priorities of this Nation. Let us resolve this crisis now.

AMERICA'S STEEL INDUSTRY NEEDS OUR HELP TO HELP ITSELF

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAYDOS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, in the years that many of us have been urging action to reduce the impact of imports on America's steel industry, our opponents claim that the steel industry itself is responsible for its inability to compete, having failed to control its costs and having failed to introduce the new technology into its mills.

Last year, as we all know, when Congress passed the Steel Stabilization Act as part of the omnibus trade package, it included provisions that the steel industry reinvest the earnings anticipated from the results of the steel limitation agreements to be signed into their steel operations.

I do not argue with that provision. It is an important one because it will ensure a commitment to steelmaking by those steel producers.

What I do say, though, is that the steel industry, despite a contrary belief, has been and is making a determined effort to seek new technological advances that will enable it to stay competitive with foreign steelmakers.

There is a lot of effort going on by the steel industry, in some cases with the help of government and in some with no such assistance, to develop these new techniques and systems that will put the American steel industry in the forefront once again.

I recently received a copy of testimony offered by Dr. David Cantor, a specialist in economics and, more specifically, the steel industry, with the Congressional Research Service, at a field hearing in Youngstown, OH, by the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight of the Committee on Science and Technology on the topic of "Modernization in the American Steel Industry."

This is a most critical area because, as Dr. Cantor's examination of the data shows, the steel industry is and has been making a serious effort in this regard.

I commend my colleagues, Mr. VOLKMER of Missouri, chairman of the subcommittee, and Mr. TRAFICANT of Ohio, who suggested the hearing. I hope that they will share with other Members of this body the knowledge and insights they have gained.

But, because I feel Dr. Cantor's comments are most important as a means of showing all of you what the American steel industry is doing and trying to do, I have received permission to include his testimony as a part of my commentary today.

The testimony by Dr. Cantor includes some historical background which helps understand how the steel industry developed after the end of World War II and why it is where it is today.

He also discusses the role and impact of the "minimills," the problems those companies are having as they go through growing pains of age, expansion, and increasing competition from outside as well as from within the industry.

I urge every Member of the House, regardless of how familiar you are with the steel industry and its various facets, to read Dr. Cantor's testimony. I believe it will encourage many of you to rethink your attitudes toward actions considered vitally necessary to keep the American steel industry as an integral part of America's economic structure.

But, at the same time as we applaud the industry for making its effort for renewal, we cannot ignore the impact of imports on the American steel market and the companies that are trying to survive.

The problem is not going away, while the voluntary restraint agreements being signed by the Special Trade Representative's Office are seemingly providing some relief, the overall problem may just be too overwhelming for those kinds of actions.

For example, last year, more than 60 nations around the world shipped more than 26 million tons of steel to the United States, capturing nearly 27 percent of the American steel market.

For the first 5 months of this year, January through May, foreign steelmakers exported nearly 11 million tons to the United States, holding just over a 25-percent share of the domestic steel market.

The point of all this is that, so far, the voluntary restraint agreements are having little impact on steel imports. While it is true that the imported steel share of the domestic market has shrunk each month since January, the decreases are so small as to be almost negligible at this time.

And, in fact, if we compare the first 5 months of 1985 with the same period of 1984, we will find that foreign manufacturers have reduced their steel shipments to the United States by a mere 18,000 tons, a decrease of one-half of 1 percent. That, Mr. Speaker, is hardly enough to be raving about, especially after the way the package on the voluntary agreements was sold to members of the Congressional Steel Caucus.

And now, let me share with you the latest figures on steel imports that became available just this afternoon, some of which raise serious questions about the voluntary agreements that this administration has been bragging about.

For the month of June 1985, steel exporting nations shipped 2.3 million tons to the United States, the highest monthly level since January's 2.6 million tons.

More importantly, for the first 6 months of this year, steel imports total 12.9 million tons, 500 tons more than was imported for the first 6 months of 1984.

Thus, the import penetration levels for the month of June and the first 6 months of this year—27.9 percent and 26.2 percent, respectively—are well above the levels for the same time periods in 1984.

More serious to the economy and the well-being of the American steel industry, domestic steel mill shipments in June dropped more than 300,000 tons, from 6.5 million tons shipped in May to 6.2 million tons in June.

This means that less steelmaking capacity is being used resulting in the need for fewer workers and less raw material. In toto, it is just another sign that the directions being taken by this administration with regard to the steel industry in particular and to the national economy in general are not working.

Quite frankly, I am amazed when I look at the list of nations that export steel to the United States. If those countries felt it was important for their national pride or their economic base to have some steelmaking capability to meet their internal needs, then I have no quarrel.

But, if they developed or increased their steelmaking facilities in order to earn international dollars by selling their steel on the open market—and by that you all will understand that I mean the United States—then I am more than just a little concerned.

After all, was it really necessary for Ecuador to ship 15 tons of steel to the United States? Or for the United States to take 577 tons from Hong Kong or 8 tons from Fiji or 20 tons from Libya?

We won't even talk about the 3 million tons from Canada, the 1.4 million tons from Brazil, the 2.5 million tons from West Germany, the 1.1 million tons from France, the 1.3 million tons from Spain, the 6.6 million tons from Japan, and the 2.2 million tons from South Korea.

With the exception of Libya, at least all of those countries are reasonably aligned with the United States in international affairs.

But, do we have to give up American jobs to support steel industries in nations that are announced enemies of ours? Is there any sound reason for the United States to allow East Germany to export 273,000 tons of steel to us? Poland, in 1984, exported 132,000 tons of steel to the United States; Romania, 272,000 tons; Czechoslovakia, nearly 63,000 tons; and Hungary, 40,000 tons.

I just don't understand it. I know we're supposed to be showing those Communist countries that capitalism works, but is it right for us to accept 780,000 tons from those countries at a cost of our own production and jobs for our own citizens?

Aren't we just shoring up governments diametrically opposed to what we as a nation stand for?

Between 1975 and 1984, employment in the steel industry dropped from 457,000 to 236,000. In 1984, alone, some 7,000 jobs were lost.

And the prospects for 1985 and 1986 aren't any better. In fact, we already know that a number of jobs are going to be eliminated over the next 18 to 24 months. LTV Steel is planning to close one facility that will eliminate 1,300 jobs. And other closings or rollbacks have been announced by other steel companies.

Is it any wonder that those of us from the steel-producing areas of this country are upset and concerned about the directions in which we are going?

The most obvious question, of course, is: What do we do? The Congressional Steel Caucus, you can be assured, is watching the developments of the voluntary restraint agreements very closely. We, with a great deal of reluctance, are prepared to give them time to work.

I can tell you, though, should it appear that the situation is not improving, we will consider more stringent action.

I, personally, am not afraid of being called a protectionist, as I told this body last week. Quite frankly, I put the well-being and survival of American workers and American industry first on my list of important items.

We are waiting to see what happens, just as the steel industry is waiting. But both the Steel Caucus and the steel industry are not standing idly by. The industry is making the effort to change and, thereby, to regain some measures of competitiveness with steel-exporting nations. And, therefore, it is incumbent on us, the Congress, and this administration to provide a climate in which the industry can have some assurance of success.

HEARINGS ON "NEW TECHNOLOGY AND THE FUTURE OF STEEL"

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

My name in David Cantor. I am a Specialist in Industry Economics in the Economics Division of the Congressional Research Service. I appreciate very much your invitation to participate in these hearings, and the opportunity to share with you the results of my analysis of the steel industry.

Many claims are made, Mr. Chairman, that the current difficulties facing the steel industry are grounded in managment decisions of the past. We hear that the industry overbuilt capacity. We are told that the industry took advantage of its market power and was slow to innovate and modernize. The industry itself tells us that it erred in allowing costs to rise in an almost unbridled way. No longer is the industry dominated by a small group of integrated producers that enables it to dictate price and quantity in the steel market. It now includes a new breed of steel-makers, the "minimills", that have become a significant force for competition in the declining or at best stagnant steel market. They and foreign steel producers that sought oveseas markets for themselves, have created a highly competitive market environment. Thus, the integrated segment of our industry, which was virtually the only supplier in the U.S. steel market in the past, is unable to utilize its capacity efficiently and profitably. More important, perhaps, the industry finds itself hard pressed financially to undertake those efforts that could conceivably shore up its ability to meet its competition head-on and with reasonable prospects for success.

My research and analysis of developments in the steel industry suggest to me that the fundamental problem of the industry is the adjustment to changes that have occurred in the U.S. steel market. While, in the past, we economists would characterize the structure of the steel market as an oligopoly—a market where only a few sellers supply the product, today, the steel market is highly competitive. Thus, while management decisions relating to price and investment could be made largely independent of the combined market forces of supply and demand in the past, today they are driven by those market forces.

I would suggest, also, that, even in the past, when the industry faced relatively little competition from abroad, from competing materials, and from new entrants into the industry, America's steel industry was to a degree an innovator in developing and implementing new and more efficient processes to make steel. It could innovate, funding its investment from revenues generated in the oligopolistic market that it dominated. In the present market environment of competition, it continues to be an innovator in adopting new technologies for steelmaking. Thus, while the evidence may support the thesis that the steel industry has not simply sat back and allowed itself to fall behind with respect to technical innovation, the questions today are the adequacy of its efforts in the past, and its ability to make the additional investments necessary to survive—the minimal goal of any seller even in the theoretically ideal, purely competitive market.

THE POST-WORLD WAR II PERIOD TO 1980

Mr. Chairman, strong claims are made that management decision of the past may be responsible for the steel industry's dilemmas of today. In particular, let me address the question of overcapacity. If the steel industry overbuilt its capacity in the years and decades following World War II, those decisions resulted in part from federal government policy. Analysts—both those regarded as critics of the industry (Donald Barnett and Louis Schorsch, for example) and those viewed as sympathetic to it (Father William Hogan, for example)—agree on this point. President Truman proposed in his State of the Union Message of 1949: "(legislation) to authorize an immediate study of the adequacy of production facilities of materials in critically short supply, such as steel; and if found necessary, to authorize government loans for the expansion of production facilities to relieve such shortages, and furthermore to authorize the construction of such facilities directly if action by private industry fails to meet our needs."

The industry disagreed, contending that the outlook for steel demand did not justify expansion. History is on the side of the industry. In 1951, America's steel industry had about 105 million tons of capacity. Yielding to government pressure, it expanded capacity to about 136 million tons by 1960, at an annual rate of growth of about 2.9 percent. Virtually all of this added capacity was in the form of open-hearth furnaces, which replaced the obsolete Bessemer furnaces. In this same period, U.S. steel demand, while fluctuating in response to changes in the business cycle, actually declined at an annual rate of about −0.8 percent. Although excess capacity was created in the industry, the major steel producers did not hold down prices, which rose at an annual rate of nearly 6 percent.

Let me cite one more example of the effect of government policy on the expansion of steel-making capacity in the United States. In 1954, Bethlehem Steel Corporation attempted to acquire the facilities of Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company. Bethlehem wanted productive capacity in the midwest to serve the growing automotive and appliance markets. The Department of Justice opposed the acquisition on antitrust grounds, a decision that was upheld in the courts in 1958. As a result, and in order to penetrate the midwest steel markets, Bethlehem built in the early 1960s the first large "greenfield" plant constructed in the United States since 1952, its plant at Burns Harbor, Indiana. Let me note that, while government policy may have influenced the expansion of capacity in this case, the decision to build Burns Harbor brought with it one of the first large-scale installations of what has become the predominant steel-making process in the world today, the Basic Oxygen Process. Thus, government policy may have coincidentally contributed to technological innovation and modernization of America's steel industry.

Major expansion of steel-making capacity came to an end by 1960, because of lack of growth in demand and the absence of government pressure to expand steel-making capacity. In the 1960s, steel capacity grew by about 8 million tons, at an annual rate of about 0.6 percent. In this same period, demand grew at a rate of about 3.1 percent per annum. Prices continued to rise in this decade.

Then, we come to the 1970s. In the first half of this decade, there was a substantial net increase in total industry capacity to about 180 million tons. But there are several reasons for this. First, domestic steel demand was rising from about 100 millions tons in 1969-70 to over 120 millon tons in 1973. Second, we begin to detect the strong presence of the "minimills" into the market; these are the relatively small companies that produce steel from scrap metal in electric furnaces. More than two-thirds of the 12.5-million ton expansion of electric furnace capacity took place in the "minimill" segment of the industry from 1972 to 1975. Furthermore, from 1975 on, virtually all of the growth of electric furnace capability took place in the "minimills".

A third reason for the expansion of steel capacity in the first half of the 1970s is that the large integrated steel companies were engaged in the process of modernization. In particular, the integrated companies were ridding themselves of outmoded and obsolete capacity. Between 1972 and 1975, the industry closed down nearly 20 million tons of relatively inefficient open-hearth capacity.

While expansion of capacity reached its peak in the mid-1970s, it declined thereafter. For all intents and purposes, the capacity reduction of about 15 million tons in the last half of the 1970s was the result of the continuing process of modernization, namely the elimination of excess open-hearth capability, and the emergence of a declining trend in steel demand. Electric furnace capacity grew by about 5 million tons, mainly in the "minimill" segment of the industry. Basic Oxygen capability was constant at about 96 to 97 million tons. The most important development in the last half of the 1970s was the closing down of more than 20 million tons of inefficient open-hearth furnace capability.

The post-World War II era provides examples of modernization other than replacing the obsolete steel-making processes of the past—Bessemer and open-hearth. The integrated steel companies were active in this modernization process. In 1967, U.S. Steel Corporation commissioned the first continuous caster in the United States for its Gary, Indiana works. National Steel and McClouth Steel installed continuous casters in 1968 and 1969.

In the 1960s, America's steel industry was active in developing the process for the direct reduction of iron ore (DRI). Among these efforts were those of Armco, which built and operated a pilot plant in Kansas City, Missouri in 1966 and later, in 1972, a full-scale commercial plant in Houston, Texas. Two other DRI plants were built in the early 1970s: the Midland-Ross plant in Portland, Oregon and the Georgetown Steel plant in Georgetown, South Carolina. None of these DRI ventures proved to be economically viable, however, owing to the sharp increases in natural gas prices in the late 1970s; the DRI process used natural gas as a basic energy input. Be that as it may, these examples indicate that the U.S. steel industry was clearly experimenting with, developing, and implementing new productive processes in the decades gone by—although the extent to which it made technical progress may have been influenced by its market structure.

Before leaving the past, Mr. Chairman, it is important to point out that the oligopolistic structure of the steel market permitted the dominant firms in the industry to adopt pricing strategies other than those of the competitive market place. In particular, the claim is made that steel companies engaged in what economists label, "administered pricing". That is, price is determined by costs to which a percentage mark-up is added. This is the conclusion of Dr. Zoltan Acs in his recently published study of the steel industry. It is almost taken for granted by one of the industry's most prominent critics, Dr. Robert Crandall. Indeed, though this strategy is becoming increasingly difficult to implement in today's market, it has become the norm on which analysts base their analyses of the industry: for example, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimated the price effects of a steel import quota using an equation in which input costs were explanatory variables. In a market where sellers can exert a significant influence on supply, an administered pricing strategy might be considered a prudent business decision. But when the structure of the market changes, this pricing strategy gives rise to the problem of not being able to compete on the basis of price.

This is why we hear one steel industry executive after another confess that they allowed costs to run rampant as recently as the early 1970s. Perhaps, they permitted costs to rise so sharply, because they did not recognize that the market structure was changing, and the industry did not recognize the need to adjust to these changes. In testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee on July 1, 1983, David Roderick, the CEO of United States Steel Corporation, stated: "Clearly, during the 1970's, it (labor costs) ran amok. Incidentally, I am not, you know, banging the steelworkers for this. Keep in mind that we steel companies signed those contracts, so this is joint bargaining. We did this together. We did not do it very well, in my opinion. We got each other into trouble."

Dr. Acs indicates that demand was a minor factor in influencing price, and that costs of production—mainly, those of labor (which were negotiated with the United Steelworkers on an industry-wide basis)—were dominant in explaining steel price behavior. the point is that, in the past at least, the steel industry could accept higher costs of production, passing them through to buyers, because the structure of the market it served was an oligopoly, where competition from other sellers at home and abroad and from other materials was not a significant concern, and where price could rise above the point at which the market would clear.

THE STEEL MARKET TODAY

Mr. Chairman, if I were to use one phrase to describe the steel market today, it would be "adjustment to competition": competition for market share in a stagnant or declining market; competition with the "minimills"; competition with competing materials; and, competition with imports. This competition has been very tough on the integrated segment of the industry at least, although even the "minimills" are experiencing difficulty in the marketplace. Indeed, the Barnett-Schorsch study of the steel industry is aptly titled—Steel: Upheaval in a Basic Industry.

First, the market for steel is stagnant. For about the past decade, demand for steel has fluctuated around the 100 million ton level. U.S. steel demand reached a high point of nearly 117 million tons in 1978; its low point was about 76 million tons in 1982. In 1984, U.S. steel demand was about 98 million tons, and forecasts of future demand by Data Resources, Incorporated suggest that steel demand will be at levels of about 100 million tons through the rest of this decade.

Steel demand has not responded to economic growth. One reason for this is the emergence of substitute materials—especially, plastics and aluminum. Indeed, during the 1970s and into the 1980s, a significant drop occurred in the so-called steel intensity of the economy; that is, the ratio of steel input to real Gross National Product. My analysis of trends in steel intensity indicates that it fell by 22 percent in the 1970s, and by another 14-15 percent in the first half of this decade. The downsizing of cars and the increased use of lighter weight materials in cars and construction help to explain this structural shift away from steel. The only bright spot in this analysis is that the data imply that further declines in steel intensity are likely to be very modest. The point is that steel demand is not likely to rise significantly.

At the same time, we have significantly more sellers in this stagnant market. The large integrated companies clearly dominate in terms of capacity: according to data compiled by Acs, the seven largest companies have over 110 million tons of capacity, but there are also at least 60 "minimill" companies with expanding capacity. These "minimills" have been extremely successful in penetrating the market for structural products. In 1975, electric furnace output, a reasonable surrogate for "minimill" activity accounted for 20 percent of total U.S. steel production; by 1984, they accounted for about 35 percent of the nation's steel output. Their emergence as a force in the industry makes the steel market more competitive, effectively requiring the integrated companies to adjust to the changes in market structure.

Why are they so successful? One, they are small. They do not have to make the investments in blast furnaces and large steelmaking furnaces that the integrated companies must make. Two, they specialize at least for the present in a small range of products. They do not have to have different rolling mill complexes. Three, they are located close to their markets. Thus, their customers incur lower transportation costs than they would if they bought from larger but more distant mills. Four, many employ non-union labor. Thus, they avoid some of the high labor costs and work rules that the unionized integrated companies must operate under. Five, there is some evidence that they benefit from local government assistance: at least one of the most prominent "minimill" companies, Nucor, obtained a substantial amount of its financing through industrial revenue bonds.

But even the future of the "minimills" is debatable. A recent article in Iron Age, a respected trade journal, reported that the traditional market for "minimill" products may be saturated. The article quotes Kenneth Iverson, the CEO of Nucor, as saying: "In the past, the primary competition for minimills was foreign suppliers and integrated producers. Over the last three or four years, this has changed so that the primary competitors today are other minimills—and I expect that to continue into the future."

While praising their accomplishments, the American Iron and Steel Institute observed in its 1985 annual report: "But now, minimills face the problems of growing maturity. Their financial success is based on high volume sales at low per ton profit margins. But economic growth in some traditional minimill markets seems to be slowing, and as they try to move into higher value products, they find themselves competing for a larger share of still depressed markets."

Furthermore, the "minimills", being scrap-based, are likely to encounter significant problems of quality control, should they expand their product line into flat-rolled products. The uniformity of the quality of the raw material inputs is more important in the latter than in the structural and bar products that "minimills" now produce.

The integrated companies compete not only with other industries and the "minimills" for a share of the stagnant steel market, but also with foreign imports. In 1984, the United States imported steel from over 50 countries. Our steel imports represented over one-fourth of the domestic market. There is some indication that foreign steel companies—in Taiwan, for example—built new capacity to capture overseas markets. Even today, new steel mills are being built in third-world countries: Nigeria and Pakistan recently opened or are close to completion of their new steel mills; Venezuela is constructing a 4.8 million ton mill, which, according to a Forbes magazine article, will produce steel to earn foreign exchange. Despite our industry's efforts to modernize, the steel industries of most other countries are newer than our industry, embodying state-of-art technology. Labor costs overseas are a fraction of ours. Even with the import restraint expected as a result of the President's steel program, foreign producers could expect to hold 20 percent of our market.

The integrated steel industry has attempted to respond to the sluggish marketplace for steel and to the competition it faces at home and abroad. Father Hogan discusses the efforts of the major companies to adjust to the market in his book, Steel in the United States: Restructuring to Compete. I addressed the industry's efforts in my report, America's Steel Industry: Modernizing To Compete; with your permission, I submit this report for the record. Essentially, I found three elements to the steel industry's modernization efforts: (1) rationalization of existing capacity; (2) adoption of currently available state-of-art technology; and (3) research and development of new technologies for steel-making.

Clearly, in a smaller market, a critical element of modernization is the elimination of old and obsolete plant. We saw that the industry was engaged in this effort in the 1970s. Perhaps of greatest long-term promise, we observed that the integrated industry replaced some of its older outmoded capacity with more modern plant. Indeed, let me cite some of the data developed by Barnett and Schorsch on the age of steel plants in the United States and Japan; I think this data will put to rest the idea that our plant is "ancient" and, thus, unable to compete. On average, our steel-making furnaces are about 2 years older than those in Japan; our continuous casters are about the same age. Where we lag behind is in the product rolling mills: our mills are from 4 to 10 years older than those in Japan.

Our industry has moved forward vigorously to install state-of-art technologies, although not as aggressively as in other countries. From 1981 to 1983, we had a positive rate of growth of continuously cast output, while most other countries had negative growth rates. In this period, a period marked by severe recession, our steel industry constructed or commissioned more than 16 continuous casters. In 1984, nearly 40 percent of our steel output was continuously cast, nearly double the share in 1980; as a result, the industry is making headway in catching-up with foreign producers in the use of this technology.

Companies are planning to install new direct reduction processes using coal, thereby bypassing the coking and blast furnace operations. Wily Korf recently announced plans to install this process in his Wallingford, Connecticut plant. Weirton Steel, formerly part of National Steel, has similar plans, and is seeking funding from the Department of Energy to proceed with them.

Smaller, incremental changes in technology are being installed in steel-making operations. New ladle refining systems are in place in Armco's Ashland, Kentucky plant; U.S. Steel Corporation is installing such a system at its Fairfield, Alabama plant.

LTV Corporation is engaged in a joint venture with Sumitomo Corporation to install a state-of-art electrogalvanizing mill at its Cleveland works. Again, in spite of the stagnant market, we find continued evidence that the industry is installing or willing to install current state-of-art technology to enhance its ability to produce steel of high quality and in competition with imports.

The modernization effort does not stop here, however. The steel industry in collaboration with federal agencies is engaged in research and development efforts to find even more efficient ways to produce quality steel products. You know of the sensor research being undertaken at the National Bureau of Standards. This effort, if successful, would permit the industry to monitor more precisely the quality of the steel as it moves through the various stages of production: from molten metal to ingots to semi-finished shapes to final products. Similarly, U.S. Steel Corporation and Bethlehem Steel Corporation have joined together with the Department of Energy to develop processes for near net shape casting. This process, if successful, would permit the industry to produce slabs one-fourth the thickness of conventional slabs; these thinner slabs would require less processing than the conventional product, with the result of lower costs.

Thus, we see the industry responding to the forces of competition by utilizing its total plant more efficiently, implementing new processes, and looking forward to still newer developments in steelmaking technology. America's Steel Industry is indeed modernizing to compete.

PROSPECTS AND PROBLEMS IN THE FUTURE

Mr. Chairman, as I look back upon the recent and not-so-recent history of the steel industry, I am impressed by the fact that it has continually engaged in a modernization process. Up to the 1970s, it could undertake this effort in a more comfortable business environment: the "minimills", substitute materials, and competition from relatively more modern foreign industries were not major forces affecting it. But, as we know from the experience of just the past few years, all of these factors have created a major change in the steel industry's business environment; they have thrust it into a highly competitive market.

To survive in this market, integrated steel companies must cut costs. They can do this by developing and installing new processes for making steel. They can do this by eliminating inefficient capacity, replacing it in whole or in part by more modern furnaces and rolling mills. They can attempt to reduce labor costs, and are likely to do so by negotiating work rule changes, lower hourly compensation costs, or both.

The issue is not that the industry will not adopt this strategy for survival in a competitive marketplace; I think it is fair to say that the industry has adopted this strategy. The issue is the adequacy of the effort—particularly in its modernization program. This issue is of interest to Congress, because, when Congress passed the Steel Import Stabilization Act as Title VIII of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 (P.L. 98-573), it conditioned any import relief on the industry's reinvestment of its cash flow from steel operations into those operations. Congress and the President were willing to restrict competition in the U.S. steel market for five years, but only if the industry was willing to undertake a modernization program that would enable it to become competitive on its own, one that its former market structure did not require of it.

Mr. Chairman, my analysis of the industry's investment pattern in relation to its cash flow a year ago indicated that the industry was already meeting the requirements of the current law. From 1979 to 1983, the industry invested about 3.5 billion dollars more in steel operations than it generated in cash flow from those operations; over these five years, it invested about 11.5 billion dollars in steel operations, while it generated from operating income and depreciation allowances, about 7.9 billion dollars. While I cannot predict the future investment behavior of the industry, I think it is fair to say that the industry is likely to meet the requirements of the law by investing its cash flow from steel in steel.

But even the industry would agree that the amount of investment necessary to become internationally competitive is far greater than its average annual investment of about 2.4 billion dollars in steel operations in the recent past. President Reagan's Steel Advisory Committee, which functioned from November 1983 to November 1984 with participants from industry, labor, and government, reported that the necessary amount of investment in steel would be in the range of 5 to 5.5 billion dollars per year. (I would note that the Committee's report represented a consensus of the views of its members.) The American Iron and Steel Institute claims that "the domestic steel industry, to maintain 95 million tons of shipments capability in the 1980's, needs to spend about $5.2 billion annually to insure adequate modernization of its facilities." Donald Trautlein, CEO of Bethlehem Steel Corporation, in his testimony before the Senate Finance Committee on June 13, 1985 on the President's tax reform proposal, stated that the industry would fall short of its desired investment goals by about 1.5 billion dollars. Thus, while there is every reason to believe that the steel industry will be in compliance with the law, there is also reason to believe that industry investment would be inadequate for it to become competitive in all markets.

Now, frankly, the industry's estimate of its investment requirements may be inflated. They assume a shipment level of 95 million tons, which implies either a massive surge in demand or virtually no imports. As I have already noted, the demand for steel in the forseeable future is projected by Data Resources, Incorporated to be aout 100 million tons per year. The only other possibility is for imports to drop to levels of 5 to 7 million tons, if domestic steel shipments are to rise to 95 million tons; this, too, is improbable. Even if the industry's estimate of capital requirements is too high, it is probably fair to say that they will need substantially more per year than they have invested in steel operations in the recent past.

The industry is likely to encounter great difficulty in raising this capital. Conventional borrowing means interest rates in the range of 13.5 to 16.5 percent today, a premium of from 2 to 5 percentage points above the rate paid by high quality long term borrowers. According to the recent Iron Age report on "minimills", even firms in this segment of the steel industry are experiencing difficulty in borrowing.

Indeed, if the steel industry could borrow substantially reduced rates of interest, not only would it be able to reduce capital charges, but also it would be better able to implement the results of the research and development efforts going on, and benefit from the lower costs derived from new technology. Consider the following optimistic scenario. I recently estimated that a 3.5 percentage point reduction in the interest rate paid by steel companies could lower costs by about 14 dollars per ton just owing to the change in the rate. In addition, if the companies borrowed to install a continuous caster, total costs of production could be reduced by still another 35 dollars per ton.

Among options for generating the capital the industry says it needs to modernize other than conventional borrowing in the capital markets, there is the possibility of more joint ventures with foreign investors. Note, if you will, the purchase of a 50-percent interest in National Steel by Japan's Nippon Kokan Steel Company. There are other examples as well. Nisshin Steel (Japan) has a 10-percent equity interest in Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Company. LTV Steel has a joint venture with Sumitomo Steel (Japan) at its electrogalvanizing plant in Cleveland. Kawasaki Steel (Japan) is providing some of the capital to refurbish the Fontana plant of California Steel Company. Canadian steel companies have invested heavily in some of our "minimill" companies: Chapparall and Raritan River Steel. Joint ventures with foreign steel companies emerge as a real possibility for generating capital.

Another option is to finance modernization by executing what amounts to lease-purchase agreements. Bethlehem Steel Corporation is doing just this in order to acquire its two continuous casters at Burns Harbor and Sparrows Point. The Austrian manufacturer of the casters, Voest-Alpine, will receive a payment per ton of steel produced by the casters at the two plants.

Obviously, government could provide some funding directly or indirectly to finance steel industry modernization. To some extent, it is already doing so. There are already various provisions built into our tax code that benefit the industry. The Department of Energy is involved in a collaborative effort with United States Steel Corporation and Bethlehem Steel Corporation to develop a near net shape casting process. The American Iron and Steel Institute and the National Bureau of Standards are jointly engaged in a research and development project to develop sensors to enhance quality control of steel-making. Your Committee authorized expenditures of, I believe, six million dollars by the Department of Energy for steel research, and additional funds for the National Bureau of Standards.

I emphasize these questions of financing modernization, Mr. Chairman, because, whatever the results of the efforts of the scientists and engineers in developing new technologies for steel-making, they translate into a more modern, efficient, and competitive steel industry only if they can be implemented. There is a major difference between technological innovation and economic innovation. In the former, new processes may be developed. In the latter, they must pass the tests of economic viability. Thus, in view of the stagnant outlook for steel demand, the existence of excess capacity in the industry today, and the considerable apprehension on the part of the industry regarding the effectiveness of the President's import restraint program, it would not be surprising if the industry implemented new processes with considerable caution.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I address the question of the outlook for employment in the steel industry. Most analysts agree that modernization of the steel industry will not result in a resurgence of employment in the industry. For example, installation of a continuous caster to replace ingot-casting and the milling of ingots into semi-finished shapes would, according to the recent report of the National Academy of Engineering, reduce labor input per ton of steel by about 50 percent. Except that demand for domestic steel would rise, it is unlikely that persons on layoff or displaced owing to plant closings would be able to reclaim their jobs.

Let me share with you a report by my colleague at CRS, Linda LeGrande, that was commissioned by the Subcommittee on Science, Research, and Technology of the House Science and Technology Committee, and that they have authorized me to release to you. LeGrande finds that the level of steel industry employment over the next decade may not fall substantially from present levels. But, she also finds that the composition of the labor force in the steel industry will change significantly in the next ten years. The lower skilled personnel will give way to more skilled and educated workers. Thus, another implication of modernization is that the characteristics of the labor force are likely to be very different from today's steel workforce. Even if the employment were to stay at present levels, many of those currently employed would not be able to retain their jobs. Mr. Chairman, I submit for the record and consideration of this committee, the report by Linda LeGrande, Employment in the Steel Industry: The Shape of Change.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I find the steel industry to be one that has demonstrated a willingness to modernize and to commit resources to that effort, and I would expect that to continue. That is, I think, most encouraging, because such an attitude is critical to its meeting the challenges of adjusting to a competitive marketplace. America's steel industry, in spite of foreign competition and overall sluggish or declining demand appears to be anything but a dying industry. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not deluded into thinking that the steel industry will emerge as it is today from its current struggle to become fully competitive at its present size. There is still much obsolete capacity in place. Grave doubts exist regarding the ability of the industry to finance its modernization. I suppose that the outlook for the industry can best be expressed by an industry spokesman, Donald Trautlein, who closed his address to the American Iron and Steel Institute at its 1985 annual meeting with these words: ". . . we are taking significant steps forward—and we're determined to take more. A lot of good things are happening—and we are making progress. While our industry may be slimmer by 1990, it will also be a lost smarter, a lot stronger, and a lot more competitive."

THE 25TH MEETING OF THE U.S.-E.P. PARLIAMENTARY EXCHANGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, the 25th meeting between Members of the House of Representatives and a delegation of the European Parliament was held at the U.S. Military Academy, West Point, NY, on June 21-24. The U.S. delegation was chaired by the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] and cochaired by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS]. The European delegation was chaired by Pieter Dankert of the Netherlands, a past president of the European Parliament. I think it is noteworthy that another former president of the European Parliament, Mrs. Simone Veil, was also a member of the European delegation.

Mr. Speaker, U.S. relations with Western Europe are good, but our friendship is confronted with political-security questions and economic and commercial disputes which will greatly affect our future. The members of the European Community share our hope for a positive outcome in the Geneva negotiations. They are especially interested in how Western Europe's relationship with the United States will be affected by the strategic defense initiative. In the economic and commercial arena, the United States and the European Community must determine what they will do next to contain and solve the problems posed by international monetary issues and disturbing rise of protectionism.

The discussions which the U.S. delegation had with its European counterpart did much to widen our understanding of Europe's problems. The U.S. delegation encountered European concern about certain aspects of our security and economic policies, but it also found that the Europeans believe strongly in the importance of working together with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, this meeting occurred at a historic time for the European Community. The Community has accepted Spain and Portugal into its membership. When the next meeting with the European delegation occurs in January, the U.S. delegation will be able to welcome their colleagues from two more European democracies.

Mr. Speaker, a report of the 25th meeting is printed below. I strongly commend this report to the attention of my colleagues, who, I know, are very interested in the present state of relations between the United States and Western Europe.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 26, 1985.

Hon. DANTE B. FASCELL,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Affairs, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We respectfully submit our report on the 25th meeting between a delegation from the United States Congress and a delegation of the European Parliament held at the U.S. Military Academy, West Point from June 21-24, 1985. Representative Tom Lantos (D-Calif) chaired the U.S. Delegation; Representatives Benjamin A. Gilman (R-NY) and Sam Gibbons (D-Fla) were the co-chairmen. Other members of the U.S. delegation included Representatives Donald J. Pease (D-Ohio), Bill Frenzel (R-Minn), J.J. Pickle (D-Tex), Harry Reid (D-Nev), E. Thomas Coleman (R-Mo), Doug Bereuter (R-Neb), Mark D. Siljander (R-Mich), Alfred A. McCandless (R-Calif), Bill Lowery (R-Calif), Esteban Torres (D-Calif), Bill Richardson (D-NM), and Hamilton Fish, Jr. (R-NY). The European delegation was chaired by Mr. Pieter Dankert of the Netherlands, a past President of the European Parliament. Messrs. Vincenzo Giummarra of Italy and Rene Piquet of France served as co-chairmen.

This parliamentary meeting provided an opportunity for the delegations to discuss a number of issues affecting U.S.-EC relations. Some have been on the agenda at previous meetings, such as trade disputes and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), agricultural trade and food aid, steel, trade relations with Japan, narcotics, visa reciprocity, and human rights. Other issues, such as the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) and NATO burdensharing, are relatively new, their presence reflecting in part a greater desire in the European Parliament to discuss security questions and to serve as a forum for the discussion of European ideas on East-West political-security issues. The agenda also included international terrorism, a subject which has been given dramatic immediacy with the hijacking of an American airliner at Athens airport on June 14 and the subsequent taking of hostages. Because of this incident, and others, such as the terrorist bombing in the Frankfurt air terminal, the two delegations approved a statement condemning international terrorism and recommending steps to stop it.

SECURITY ISSUES

Since the first of the year the dominant issue in U.S.-Western European security issues has been the Strategic Defense Initiative. With eight party groups from the European Parliament present, the U.S. delegation had a good opportunity to hear the spectrum of European opinion on SDI. For their European audience, the U.S. delegation sought to explain the future of the SDI within the Congress.

Representatives Tom Lantos and Doug Bereuter led much of the U.S. discussion on SDI. Representative Lantos pointed out that SDI related funding already existed in the Defense Department budget before President Reagan seized on the concept in March 1983 to promote a new strategic doctrine. Present debate, he explained, was confused by the Administration's use of two definitions of SDI; the President's relying on an impenetrable umbrella that would make nuclear weapons impotent, the other favoring a "point defense" of U.S. retaliatory capabilities. Representative Lantos warned against a quick dismissal of SDI's feasibility but added that the concept did raise questions about U.S.-European relations and the prospect of a conventional war in Europe. Representative Bereuter acknowledged several European concerns about SDI but explained that SDI was designed to enhance both U.S. and European security. Other members of the U.S. delegation observed that SDI had obtained authorized funding in both the House and the Senate and that, despite some reservations, the program appeared to be well-established in the Congress.

The European response varied from strong support of SDI to very critical opposition. The only general conclusion about European opinion was that most of the European delegation acknowledged the fact that SDI research would continue and that that, in itself, was acceptable. However, they expressed a number of reservations. Foremost were concerns about a decoupling of the United States from Europe, a destabilization of East-West relations and the strategic balance, and technological dominance of Western Europe by the United States. Several European delegates noted Congressional support for the SDI and urged the Congress to monitor its development very closely in order to weigh all of the implications of SDI. Another major European concern is the need to coordinate European research and development activities in SDI related technologies. Without such coordination, some of the Europeans expressed the fear that bilateral negotiations between the United States and each European participant in SDI would break down the spirit of community and cooperation among the members of the EC.

From SDI, the discussion of security issues shifted to that of NATO burdensharing. Although NATO itself is the framework for resolving differences in burdensharing, the presence of this issue on the agenda demonstrates the relationship between economic policies in Europe and NATO policies and the interest of several of the EC members in promoting a common European arms policy. Representative Harry Reid reviewed recent developments in burdensharing and concluded that the NATO allies in 1984 and 1985 had taken important steps towards improving NATO's posture. Representative Reid observed that in 1984 eight of the European allies met the 1978 guideline for an annual increase of 3 per cent in defense spending (after inflation). Also, the Allies agreed to improve certain storage facilities and munitions stocks, as well as to upgrade weapons systems vital for sutainment of NATO's conventional defense. The primary concern of the European delegation was whether the United States was willing to purchase more European manufactured equipment and weapons. Whether through the Western European Union, the European Community, or some other organ, most of the European delegation stressed the need for a common European policy to correct the 6:1 imbalance in defense procurement between the United States and Western Europe. Also, of concern to several Europeans was the effect of protectionism on future weapons purchases from Europe.

ECONOMIC AND TRADE ISSUES

The discussion of these issues centered, in part, on the aftermath of the Bonn Economic Summint in May 1985, where President Francois Mitterrand had argued for simultaneous conferences on international monetary and trade issues. Many in both the U.S. and Europeans delegations agreed on the need for an international conference on monetary issues; although, suggested objectives for it varied. Representative Tom Coleman assigned much of America's present trade difficulties, including a $123 billion deficit in 1984 to the high dollar. But Representative Coleman also warned that the strong dollar was making it difficult for U.S. companies to compete at home, since high interest rates have made the U.S. an attractive field for foreign competitors and operations. He recommended reduction of the U.S. budget deficit, improvement of the investment climate within Europe, and greater cooperation among the Western economic powers as necessary steps to improve the international economic climate.

The European delegation agreed with much of what Representative Coleman said. However, several speakers advocated stronger state intervention in capital markets than preferred by most of the Americans. Also, the Europeans proposed establishment of specific margins to govern the adjustment of exchange rates—a recommendation the Reagan Administration has opposed. Some of the European members claimed that a more responsible policy on behalf of the United States would reduce the conditions which have contributed to greater Third World debt.

The trade discussion concentrated on a new multilateral trade round and the present and future status of the GATT. Representative Bill Frenzel frankly acknowledged that protectionist sentiment was mounting in the Congress and that there was mounting disillusionment with the GATT process. A new GATT round, Representative Frenzel observed, would not address some of the significant issues affecting international trade, such as export credit systems, relative tax burdens, or the relative value of monetary units. Without agreement on a definition of subsidies in a new round, the United States might establish a unilateral definition and implement policy as it sees necessary. In closing, Representative Frenzel agreed with other speakers on the urgent importance of addressing problems related to the international monetary system. Many of the European did not view the future of the GATT as pessimistically as Representative Frenzel and urged the United States to hold to the GATT system and avoid bilateral trade agreements. The Europeans were also disturbed by what they preceived as mounting protectionism in the United States—symbolized most recently to them on June 20 by the President's announcement of an increased tariff on pasta imports from the EC.

Both the United States and the European Community also experienced trade problems with Japan. Thus, both delegations briefly discussed their trade relationship with Japan. Representative Don Pease reviewed U.S. trade relations with Japan and assigned a sizeable share of the U.S. problem to the high dollar. However, while Japan may adhere to the formal rules of the world trade system with its low tariff levels, its informal or unwritten rules still cost U.S. exporters significant market losses. For example, Japan dominates the world market in semi-conductors because of the policies of its conglomerates which sell chips at a loss and then offset these losses with profits from other operations. Japanese practices in many areas of business are not subject to the GATT, Representative Pease noted, therefore, it has been hard to get them to reform. Representative Pease stated it was time for Japan to begin taking corrective measures, and he suggested that Prime Minister Nakasone's encouragement of more Japanese purchase of imports might signal an important beginning. The Europeans agreed with Representative Pease's observations about the problems posed by Japan's internal economic and business structures, pointing, in particular, to the difficulties caused by Japan's distribution system.

Representative Pease also made a presentation on the steel industry and U.S.-EC trade problems in steel. In his explanation of the Steel Import Stabilization Act of 1984, Representative Pease pointed out that the Act's limitation of foreign imports to 17 to 20.2 per cent of the U.S. market was accompanied by requirements that the U.S. steel industry move toward modernization and make a commitment to worker retraining. This latter concern about worker reeducation to avoid unemployment was also raised by Ms. Magdalene Hoff of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Another steel issue concerning the status of the 1982 U.S.-EC Arrangement which seeks to limit steel imports from the EC. Representative Pease hoped that the Community would accept the latest U.S. offer to resolve a dispute over pipe and tube steel imports, and he urged the Europeans to support negotiations on "consultation" products. This category of steel product was not formally included in the 1982 Arrangement; however, there was agreement that the two sides would consult if there had been a significant upsurge in these imports in the U.S. market. Although the Europeans did not respond specifically to these statements about the 1982 Steel Arrangement, they emphasized their commitment to settlement of outstanding issues with the United States through negotiations.

AGRICULTURE

Discussion of trade problems related to agriculture were influenced by two developments: The decision of the U.S. Department of Agriculture to provide $2 billion of Commodity Credit Corporation inventories as bonuses to U.S. exporters to compete in world markets in 1988, and the announcement by the President on June 20 to increase tariffs on pasta imported from the EC. The European delegates suggested the United States did not appreciate the degree of efforts already taken to reform the Common Agriculture Policy (CAP). Among the measures they mentioned were limited guarantee payments to producers, milk quotas, and an ongoing effort to get agreement on reduced cereal prices. The Europeans protested against the added tariff on pasta and the Department of Agriculture's bonuses for farm exporters. Concerning the latter, Mr. Mark Clinton of Ireland said it would bankrupt both U.S. and European farmers. The U.S. delegation responded that the Agriculture Department program was a statement of U.S. frustration with existing conditions. They also claimed the United States was more willing to negotiate on agricultural issues than the EC.

Also included in the discussion on agriculture was food and development assistance toward Africa. After reviewing the recent history and present state of U.S. and EC food policy toward Africa, Representative Doug Bereuter outlined steps which the European Community and the United States could take to improve their policies' effectiveness. For the EC, Representative Bereuter suggested that instead of paying to store and export its surpluses it should provide these surpluses as food aid and then pay its producers the difference between low world prices and higher EC prices. Both the U.S. and EC could work together to insure that food aid would not disrupt existing local food production and marketing. Also, both donors and recipients need to consult more regularly in order to coordinate food aid policy with reform and structural changes in the national economies. Lastly, there is a need for better project coordination among the donors. Taken all together, Representative Bereuter suggested that it was especially important to establish U.S.-EC coordination at the country level.

NARCOTICS, HUMAN RIGHTS, TERRORISM, AND VISA RECIPROCITY

Originally, these four topics were to be included in one working session, but the length of discussion on them and earlier subjects demanded that another session be added. Representative Benjamin A. Gilman opened the discussion with a review of necessary measures to combat drug trafficking and drug production. Representative Gilman referred to the size of the narcotics business in the U.S., $110 billion, to illustrate how great the problem has become on a global scale. Although one can find positive signs in the struggle against drug trafficking, such as recent measures by the Governments of Thailand and Colombia, Representative Gilman stated there "must be increased financial support from the international community for narcotics control programs." He urged the European legislators to join in efforts to create coordinated global and regional drug strategies against drug trafficking and to eradicate local drug production. Some of these endeavors would complement the United Nations consideration of a new convention against narcotics trafficking. Representative Gilman also encouraged the EC member nations to give more support to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control; at present, only three of the 10 EC members contribute to it. Mrs. Simone Veil of France agreed on the need to do more, and pointed out that the European Parliament had taken important steps by setting up a committee of inquiry on narcotics.

The issue of international terrorism had been on the agenda weeks before the hijacking of TWA Flight 847 in Athens and subsequent terrorist acts. Those events lent an urgency to the planned discussion. Because of the threat of international terrorism to democratic values, the two delegations agreed to the text of a joint statement condemning international terrorism and calling for government measures to combat it. The two delegations stated their belief that there should be a joint conference of competent public officials to examine this issue. The text of the joint statement follows:

The Members of the European Parliament Delegation and the Delegation of the U.S. House of Representatives regard international terrorism as one of the most serious threats to the fabric of civilization and its democratic values. The hijacking of TWA

Flight 847, the taking of hostages, the murder of Robert Stethem, and the airport bombing in Frankfurt are but the most recent examples of the terrorist threat that has profoundly affected our free societies.

Combating international terrorism requires multilateral action among the United States, the member nations of the European Community and other democratic and civilized societies. The European Parliament and the U.S. House of Representatives in their respective resolutions of 18 April and 20 June, 1985 condemned terrorism as a rejection of the fundamental values and rights of our societies and a threat to democracy and called for government measures to combat terrorist acts effectively. All nations, large and small, are equally threatened. To this end, the two delegations believe that a joint conference of competent public officials should be convened. Furthermore, joint and effective steps to assure safe and secure civil aviation are urgently required.

Our democracies certainly have the resources to destroy international terrorism. We must mobilize the political will to give this battle the highest priority it demands.

In the discussion of terrorism, Mr. Elmar Brok of the Federal Republic of Germany emphasized the need for a single definition of terrorism in order to oppose it more effectively. From the U.S. delegation, Representative Mark Siljander argued that much of the international terrorist movement could not operate without Soviet orchestration and that terrorism had become the present form of Soviet war against the West. Representative Siljander recommended a number of steps to fight the spread of terrorism: A better public understanding of its danger, improvement in Western intelligence-gathering capabilities; the use of military force when required; adoption of diplomatic and economic sanctions against its supporters, and non-negotiation with terrorist groups. The European delegation strongly shared Representative Siljander's concern about the growth of terrorism, but several questioned his argument that the Soviets bear primary responsibility for its orchestration.

Turning briefly to the issue of human rights, Representative Tom Lantos commented that the human rights situaton in the Soviet Union had deteriorated, even though the Soviets had signed the Helsinki Accords ten years ago. He urged his fellow parliamentarians to condemn equally violations of human rights by regimes on the political left or right and to be willing to go beyond symbolic protests. Human rights, Representative Lantos observed, cannot be the sole criterion in foreign policy, but it certainly should rank equally with commercial considerations in foreign policy. Representative Gilman concurred with these observations and underscored the importance of the Ottawa meeting of the Helsinki Commission in May-June 1985, which was the first time the Commission had devoted an entire meeting to human rights.

The last issue, visa reciprocity, involves the removal of the present U.S. requirement for visas for citizens of the EC countries entering the U.S. for business or pleasure. The European delegation explained that this policy creates a poor image of the United States in Europe, especially since there are no similar requirements for U.S. citizens visiting Western Europe. The U.S. delegation responded very sympathetically to the European position. Representative Alfred McCandless told the Europeans that Senator Alan Simpson had introduced a provision in his immigration bill in the current Congress which seeks to correct this problem; Simpson's language was similar to that which had been contained in the Simpson-Mazzoli bill of the 98th Congress which had not reached final passage. However, Representative McCandless pointed out the complications caused by the high rate of illegal immigration into the United States. He also noted that when the Department of State had considered a program to drop visa requirements for citizens from select countries others had protested and charged favoritism, thereby moving the State Department to drop its consideration.

CENTRAL AMERICA

The discussion of the present situation in Central America showed the variety of perspectives in the EC on this issue as well as the changes of outlook within the Congress over U.S. policy toward Nicaragua. Mr. Brok emphasized the successes he saw in the present situaton in El Salvador. President Duarte had implemented a land reform program, steps had been taken towards democratic reform, and the United States had supported Durate's efforts to open discussions with his opposition. In comparison, Nicaragua had become less democratic, the number of political prisoners had increased beyond that under President Somoza, and the visit of Daniel Ortega to Moscow had shown disturbing ties with the Soviet Union. Another European speaker, Mr. Ernest Glinne of Belgium, was less critical of Nicaragua and more critical of the policies of the United States. He opposed the economic sanctions on Nicaragua imposed by the United States and argued that the United States should give stronger support to the Contadora process. In order to decrease Nicaragua's dependence on the Soviet Union, Mr. Glinne advocated pursuit of a regional and energy program which would tie Nicaragua more to its neighbors. Mexico, for example, could replace the Soviet Union as a source for oil.

Responding for the U.S. delegation, Representatives Tom Coleman and Bill Richardson stressed that the U.S. outlook on Nicaragua had shifted because of Ortegas policies and recent visit to Moscow. Representative Coleman pointed out that the Carter Administration initially hd sought to aid the Sandinistas but had stopped because of humanitarian concerns—a lesson about the Sandinistas that seemed as important today as it was then. Representative Richardson concurred with these judgments about the costs of Ortega';s behavior and added that Nicaragua had misrepresented its intentions to the United States. He noted an increased consciousness among Democrats and Republicans of the importance of bipartisan foreign policy. This had been shown in both the House and Senate by earlier votes in June to support humanitarian funding for the "Contras", the guerrillas opposing the Sandinista regime.

The examination of U.S. and EC policies toward Central America ended three days of very productive discussion. For the U.S. delegation, this meeting provided an excellent opportunity to obtain an understanding of European thinking on most of the political, economic, and commercial issues affecting our relationship. Even though disagreement sometimes appeared over issues like SDI or select commercial matters, what impressed both delegations was the mounting importance of working together to solve problems affecting the United States and the European Community. Nothing demonstrated this mutual concern more than the agreement on a joint statement on international terrorism. The next meeting with the European Parliament will be in January, and we are looking forward to continuing our discussions then.

Sincerely,

TOM LANTOS,
Chairman.

ENHANCING LOW POWER TV OPPORTUNITIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOUCHER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin BOB KASTENMEIER, chairman of the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice, in introducing legislation which frees an emerging new communications service—low power television—from an unanticipated burden imposed upon it by the Copyright Act.

Our bill is a technical amendment, acceptable to all interested parties, which safeguards the interests both of copyright owners and users. It opens the door to enhanced competition in the communications marketplace and provides increased local television service for Americans living in rural communities.

The legislation establishes a clear definition of something previously undefined: the local service area of a low power television or [LPTV] station.

LPTV stations are small-scale TV stations now being licensed by the Federal Communications Commission to provide local broadcast TV service to communities which are frequently overlooked or underserved by existing, regular TV stations.

The definition of a television stations "local service area" contained in the Copyright Act of 1976 does not apply to LPTV stations. This oversight has had an unanticipated, but devastating affect on LPTV which has developed subsequent to passage of the act.

As a result, local cable television systems must consider a local LPTV signal a "distant" signal for copyright purposes even if the LPTV station is located across the street and despite the fact that the LPTV station has already paid the licensing rights for programming in the local market area. This anomaly has had a chilling affect on the expansion of LPTV stations.

Our bill resolves the problem. A cable system which wishes to carry the local LPTV station would not be required to pay "distant signal" copyright rates for the local signal.

If passed, this bill will make it possible for literally thousands of new LPTV stations to begin local TV broadcasting. Small communities which cannot support a conventional TV station would be able to enjoy what residents of large urban markets have had for years—TV coverage of local news, high school and community college sports, parades and local religious services; in short, TV programming which reflects diversity and local values.

Communities throughout southwest Virginia would benefit greatly from LPTV service. Industry experts inform me that Blacksburg, Christiansburg, and Radford are among the markets likely to have local broadcast television service from LPTV within the next 2 years. Additional stations are possible in Tazewell County and elsewhere. Indeed, any community which in the past has been large enough to support a radio station could support a local LPTV station as well.

In short, I believe that our bill accomplishes a great deal of good without interfering with the interests of other parties in the copyright and communications area.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent during rollcall No. 265 on July 26, 1985. Had I been present, I would have voted in the following way:

Rollcall No 265, on passage of the Jacobs amendment, as amended by the Nelson Amendment, reducing the appropriations for office expenses of former Presidents under H.R. 3036, I would have voted "no".●

THE 17TH ANNIVERSARY OF INVASION OF CZECHOSLOVAKIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on August 21, the people of Czechoslovakia and Americans of Czechoslovakian descent will commemorate the 17th anniversary of the 1968 invasion of Czechoslovakia by the Soviet Union.

In 1968, on this Soviet Day of Shame, the Communists overran Czechoslovakia's borders with over 500,000 soldiers in a brutal attempt to crush the hopes and dreams of this peace-loving nation. This act once again demonstrated the Soviet Union's unwavering commitment to a policy of stopping any attempt by individuals to assert their inherent rights of freedom, liberty, and self-determination.

Today the Communists continue relentlessly in their oppression of those who wish to reestablish an independent Czechoslovakia; and we as Americans, the leaders of the free world, must persist in our support of those Czechoslovakians who are devoted to reestablishing a free homeland.

Charter 77, a courageous Czechoslovakian dissident group, has consistently forced the Communist leaders to account for their inhumane treatment of the Czechoslovakian people. Recently, the group marked its eighth year of existence as a voice of opposition to the Soviet-controlled government.

At this point in the RECORD, I would like to share with my colleagues an article that appeared in the March 22, 1985, edition of the Washington Post, which describes the latest activities of this brave group of Czechoslovakian dissidents. The article follows:

CZECHOSLOVAK RIGHTS GROUP PROVES TO BE SURVIVOR

(By Bradley Graham)

PRAGUE.—In the Soviet Bloc, where human rights groups tend to fall early victim to the repression they condemn, Czechoslovakia's Charter 77 is an example of survival against the odds.

Marking the eighth anniversary of its existence recently, Eastern Europe's oldest dissident group issued a lengthy restatement of principles and aims—in part to remind the world it still exists and in part to clarify for signatories what the movement stands for.

Charter 77's field of comment has broadened since its founding in 1977 in defense of human rights. In recent years, it has produced reports on such diverse topics as pollution, rock music and drugs. Its aim, say supporters, is to offer Czechoslovaks an alternative voice to that of their Communist government.

A lengthy appeal issued by the charter movement this month called for the dissolution of NATO and the Warsaw Pact and the creation of an association of "free and autonomous" European nations. "Perhaps such an ideal seems a dream," said the 17-page document. "Yet we are convinced that it represents the will of most Europeans."

Going up against one of the most stiff-backed regimes in the communist world has been a painful experience for many signers of the charter. A large number have been or are still being prosecuted, and often imprisoned, for participating in the movement.

Most of the signatories have endured a variety of forms of harassment, from loss of jobs to permanent police surveillance to exclusion of their children from universities.

On March 11, the day Mikhail Gorbachev came to power in the Soviet Union, police in Prague raided an apartment where 48 persons, many of them chartists, were viewing newsreels of the 1968 Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia. All were detained, some for as long as two days, then released.

"We offered dialogue to the state at the beginning, without illusions of course," said Eva Kanturkova, a writer, signer of the charter manifesto and one of those present at the clandestine film showing. "But the only dialogue we've had has been with the state security service."

Charter 77 insists that it does not aim to be a mass movement. Supporters, known as signatories, number 1,200, and the group has been gaining only several dozen new ones per year.

"It is not an organization nor a basis for opposition activities," said an anniversary statement issued in January. "Charter 77 has no members, only signatories. It is not something one can join or leave, only sign.

"It does not intend to enunciate its own programs of political or societal changes or reforms. Its goal is the rehabilitation of people as the true subjects of history.

"What a person can gain [from signing] is the feeling of being liberated, the feeling of being true to himself, the feeling of being publicly responsible again, the feeling of having left the forum of general indifference and of not participating, with his silence, in matters that are evidently immoral."

Charter 77 is represented by three spokesmen who change from year to year. Their names are attached to the documents released irregularly in the group's name. The three used to be chosen to reflect the major factions—ex-Communists, Roman Catholics and noncommunist intellectuals. This year's all have leftist backgrounds.

Mr. Speaker, I join with Americans of Czechoslovakian descent throughout the 11th Congressional District of Illinois, which I am honored to represent, and our Nation, as they commemorate the 17th anniversary of the invasion of Czechoslovakia. May their hopes and prayers for a homeland free of Soviet domination soon be realized.●

HELSINKI'S 10TH ANNIVERSARY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, as the cochairman of the U.S. (Helsinki) Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I rise today in commemoration of the Helsinki accord's 10th anniversary. On August 1, 1975, the leaders of 33 nations of Western and Eastern Europe, Canada, and the United States signed the Helsinki Final Act. Seen as the capstone of détente policy, the Final Act placed respect for fundamental human freedoms squarely within the East-West framework as a basic element of government-to-government relations. Through good faith observance of the Final Act's standards for responsible and humane international conduct, signatory states were to advance along the difficult road toward mutual trust and cooperation.

As President Ford said upon signing the accords in 1975:

History will judge this Conference not by what we say here today, but by what we do tomorrow—not by the promises we make, but by the promises we keep.

From the beginning, the West has acknowledged that full implementation of the Helsinki accords' human rights provisions realistically cannot be accomplished overnight but would necessarily be a long-term process.

On the eve of the 10th anniversary, it is getting that we pause a moment to reflect upon the Helsinki process.

The original critics of Helsinki and others who have been disillusioned in recent years by the lack of significant progress in human rights in certain signatory states raise serious questions about the credibility and utility of the Helsinki process. The U.S. (Helsinki) Commission welcomes public debate on these questions, for we believe that the Helsinki process addresses issues and ideas about which a concerned world public should not remain silent.

Generally speaking, in the 10 years since the Helsinki accords were signed, East bloc human rights behavior has registered on the bad to worse end of the scale.

Rare improvements in human rights conduct have been largely grudging, dilatory, cosmetic, and calculated to serve other than humanitarian interests, generally signifying only temporary movement from the bad to the less bad. At once a characteristic and a major cause of the deterioration of East-West relations, East bloc human rights conditions have taken a quantitative as well as a qualitative turn for the worse.

The Soviet human rights record showed marginal improvement from 1975 through 1979. Despite many arrests, Soviet dissidents were active and effective. Ten unofficial Helsinki groups sprang up in the U.S.S.R. Soviet citizens could listen to Western short-wave radio broadcasts. Soviet Jewish emigration reached the record high level of over 50,000 in 1979. The Kremlin, bouyed by detente, adopted a somewhat more tolerant stance toward limited dissent.

In 1980, the Kremlin embarked on a harsh new law-and-order campaign—KGB style. Several foreign policy factors led to the demise of detente: Western anger over the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan; the European decision to deploy American Pershing missiles; and the rise of Polish Solidarity. Soviet domestic realities, such a Kremlin leadership instability and declining Soviet standards of living, were equally compelling. Perhaps most important, however, dissidents represented more areas of the U.S.S.R. and more diverse social backgrounds—and the West was hearing about them.

After 1980, arrests of Soviet dissidents tripled to nearly 240 per year; criminal charges against them grew vaguer and sentences grew longer; repressive new laws were passed. Conditions of imprisonment for about 10,000 Soviet political prisoners worsened. In January 1980, Nobel Laureate Andrei Sakharov was summarily banished to Gorky. Today, the Sakahrovs have disappeared.

The Kremlin also tried to cut the Soviet people off from the West. Jewish, German, and Armenian annual emigration rates fell to under 1,000 per group. Laws were passed to discourage contacts with foreigners. Soviet jamming of Western radio broadcasts was resumed in the wake of Polish Solidarity. Direct-dial telephone calls, introduced as a come-on for the Olympic games, were canceled. A KGB campaign tried to cut the flow to the West of unofficial news about Soviet society.

Today, this repressive human rights policy is still very much in place. Establishing Soviet economy efficiency is clearly the first priority of the new Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

The lack of significant progress in the area of human rights such as we find in the Soviet Union is not and should not be viewed as testimony on the credibility and utility of the CSCE process. This process has legitimized human rights as a matter of diplomatic discourse among nations and has placed it on the agenda of our allies. The CSCE process has become an important instrument of diplomacy for the United States and for the other Western democracies. This instrument, applied in a determined, concerted, and compassionate manner over time has yielded and will continue to yield positive results.

In East-West diplomacy, the Helsinki process has become the vehicle by which concerns in humanitarian, military, political, social, cultural, and other fields routinely are conveyed through bilateral and multilateral channels. Bilaterally, the Helsinki umbrella has afforded to the smaller Eastern bloc countries continued greater latitude in establishing relationships with Western nations independently of the Soviet Union.

The multilateral Helsinki approach to problems has served to increase Western leverage by compounding the political cost to the Eastern governments of human rights violations, while increasing their incentive to correct them. Helsinki's European focus, unlike diffuse U.N. discussions, ensures that debate remains centered on an area where Western ideas fall on familiar and fertile soil.

The Soviets have proven adept at marketing its social and political system as a model for other States. Helsinki has provided a unique forum in which the United States and its allies can reveal publicly the grim, brutal reality behind the Soviet facade. These debates are significant in helping to form opinion within Europe. The CSCE process has become a continuing framework for the consideration of a broad range of East-West issues and keeps the door open to the possibility of concrete progress.

Then there is the individual. By signing the Helsinki accords, the Western democracies in essence pledged to keep faith with the persecuted in the East. It is telling to recall that the West failed to anticipate the impact that the human rights provision of the Helsinki accords would have on Eastern bloc citizens. Western human rights advocates and politicians were not the first to act upon the accords as a means to expose human rights violations in the East. East bloc citizens seized upon the Helsinki provisions as a program for human rights advocacy.

Five Soviet Helsinki monitoring groups were established in Moscow, Ukraine, Lithuania, Georgia, and Armenia as were similarly inspired organizations such as Charter '77 in Czechoslovakia and the Workers' Defense Committee [KOR] in Poland. It was the repressive regime's response to these monitors, who had openly appealed to all Helsinki signatory governments and world public opinion for support, that finally stirred the West into action. Despite continued repression, Helsinki monitors in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe persevere in their perilous and selfless work to this day.

In eloquent gestures of solidarity, arrested Soviet human rights activities have symbolically joined Helsinki monitoring groups from their places of confinement in labor camps or jails. Less than 1 week ago, Charter '77 issued a statement in commemoration of the 10th anniversary. It is a statement of hope, of urging not to give up and of reaffirmation of the ideals of the Final Act. For these courageous men and women, the Helsinki process remains a source of inspiration and of hope. It is also a lifeline, however thin a thread. It is not for us to sever that thread.

Mr. Speaker, 10 short years ago, the Helsinki Final Act helped to usher in a new era in international relations based on the precept that a states' humane treatment of its citizens is as significant as respect for a neighbors' frontiers or willingness to settle disputes peacefully. Because of Helsinki, Western governments now take it for granted that it is their right and responsiblity to speak out when human rights violations occur in another participating state.

At this moment Secretary of State Shultz accompanied by representatives of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe meets with representatives of the other signatory nations to commemorate the 10th anniversary. It is a solemn moment, a time for reckoning for coming to terms with our hopes and with our expectations. The foundation of the Helsinki process was painstakingly built in Geneva. It has developed slowly and has suffered setbacks. Frustration is great and justified. But we should not lose sight of our ultimate aim, perhaps put most eloquently by physicist Yuri Orlov, founder of the Moscow Helsinki Group and a prisoner of conscience since 1977: "By our efforts, we increase the probability that in the end we shall be successful."

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield to my distinguished colleague from the State of Texas [Mr. BUSTAMANTE].

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Maryland, for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the members of the Helsinki Commission for organizing this special order on occasion of the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act.

After 10 years the Soviet and Eastern bloc records of compliance to many of the provisions of the Helsinki accords is dismal. The Soviet Union not only violated the Helsinki accords but also the U.N. Charter when it invaded Afghanistan, and it still violates these international conventions every day of its occupation of that country. The Soviet Union's record on human rights is no more encouraging. One needs just to look at the present situation of the intellectuals who formed the unofficial Helsinki group in Moscow to monitor Soviet human rights compliance. These intellectuals who took their government's signature unto the accords as a change in human rights policy, were sorely disappointed. The group was brutally disbanded, with many of its principals like Antoly Shcharansky, Yuri Orlov imprisoned in very harsh conditions, or sent in exile like Andrei Sakharov. The Soviets have meted out such harsh treatment to these dissidents, that they have changed the West's focus from human rights issues to concern about the lives and health of these human rights advocates.

Mr. Speaker, I want to turn my attention for a moment to the plight of Soviet Jewry. I concentrate on Soviet Jews for they form one of the largest Jewish communities in the world, and because they suffer badly from the neglect, nonobservance, and outright violation of their rights and freedoms, both as individuals and as a community.

While one of the basic rights guaranteed under the Helsinki accords is the right to leave and to facilitate family reunification, the Soviets have hampered emigration. This is demonstrated by the existence of thousands of refuseniks and the continuing drop in emigration. Not only do the Soviets block emigration but they engage in a concerted campaign of harassment of applicants for family reunion. Applicants lose their jobs and cannot find any work leading to impoverishment and the threat of a charge of parasitism. They are thrown out of universities and are deprived of academic standing. The government further isolates them by vilifying them in the media, by taking away their telephones, by constantly surveilling them, and through physical attacks on them.

The persecution does not end here. Jewish "activists", or more correctly, Jews who actively demand recognition of their rights to emigration, to pursue their culture and, to study the Hebrew language are subject to arrests, trials, and prison and labor camp sentences. Many are victims of brutal beatings.

Mr. Speaker, the state of affairs of these Jews has moved me to request from Mr. Gorbachev that such inhumane actions cease. I particularly conveyed my concern over the beatings of Yuli Edelshtein and Yosif Berenshtein and the recent conviction of Evegeny Aisenberg and the trial of Dan Shapira. With such a record before us, we may be led to ask what was the use of the Helsinki accords? It certainly did not change the functioning of the Soviet dictatorship. On the other hand, it has helped establish human rights as a legitimate issue of international concern.

Mr. Speaker, our Government should continue its efforts on behalf of Soviet Jews. To that effect, we should require the Soviets to comply with universally recognized human rights before we give them concessions on bilateral relations. When coupled with economic, or other incentives, the Helsinki Final Act will then achieve its role as an instrument for promoting human rights.

Mr. Speaker, I again thank my friend from Maryland for yielding. I wanted to express our concern and to join with the gentleman in this special order.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman from Texas for his eloquent statement, for his support not only on this special order, but on a daily basis for the cause of human rights both in this country and around the world.

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, August 1, 1985 will mark the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE), in Helsinki, Finland. At that time the heads of state of 33 European nations, the United States and Canada affixed their signatures to a unique document which obligated its signatories to implement a series of complementary provisions in many fields, including cooperation in the humanitarian, military-security, economic, scientific and cultural areas. This week the Foreign Ministers of the 35 signatory states are again gathered in Helsinki to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the process initiated in Helsinki and to give their assessment of the accomplishments and failures of this endeavor.

The 10 years of experience we have had with this important process, the CSCE or Helsinki process as it is called, has yielded mixed results. Unique among diplomatic documents in Europe, the Final Act established an on-going review mechanism to periodically review the implementation of its provisions. The first of these review conferences was held in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, from 1977–78, the second in Madrid, Spain, from 1980–83 and the third will take place in Vienna, Austria, beginning in October, 1986. During these conferences, the full record of implementation failures and successes were reviewed and new measures adopted.

Despite initial, unsuccessful attempts by the Soviet Union and its allies to block discussion of human rights violations in their countries, the result of the Belgrade and Madrid review conferences and the recent human rights experts meeting in Ottawa, Canada, was to establish human rights as a legitimate issue of international concern and discussion. Through the CSCE process, it has now been firmly established that criticism of the manner in which a state treats its own citizens can no longer be dismissed as interference in internal affairs but is of interest to all states. In short, the CSCE process has helped to inject a needed degree of accountability into the diplomatic treatment of human rights issues.

The Helsinki process has provided a necessary support for the aspirations of the people of the Warsaw Pact countries. Shortly after its adoption, the Final Act was published in full throughout the Soviet bloc and unexpectedly gave rise to the spontaneous formation of citizen groups in several countries interested in monitoring and encouraging their government's compliance with the Final Act. Despite repeated repression and harassment, these groups have continued to function, particularly in Czechoslovakia and Poland, and to provide useful information on the human rights situation in their countries.

Another important positive accomplishment of the CSCE process has been the political dialogue which has been established among the 35 signatory states on a wide variety of issues ranging from confidence-building measures to scientific and cultural development in the Mediterranean area. As part of the CSCE process, discussion is now underway in Stockholm, Sweden, on the development of concrete, militarily significant confidence and security-building measures designed to increase military security and reduce the outbreak of conventional war in Europe by miscalculation. In other areas of the Final Act, we can look forward to a high-level cultural forum in Budapest this October bringing together important cultural figures as well as diplomats from all signatory states as well as to an Experts Meeting on Human Contracts next year in Bern, Switzerland, to seek ways to improve family reunification.

Unfortunately, the status of the Helsinki process on its 10th anniversary is not as rosy as the brief analysis I have just made would indicate. Undermining and endangering all the positive accomplishments of the Helsinki Final Act has been the repeated failure of the Soviet Union and several of its allies to abide by its obligations undertaken when it signed the Helsinki Accords. Most glaring has been their lack of implementation, in fact outright violation, of the human rights and humanitarian provisions of that document. Thousands have been arrested and imprisoned since the signing of the Final Act, most for simply desiring to exercise their rights and freedoms guaranteed in the Final Act itself. While the Helsinki process has added an important element of accountability into diplomatic discourse on human rights, it unfortunately has been powerless to induce the offending countries to improve their repressive practices.

We can criticize all we like, but if these criticisms and suggestions go unheeded over time, many will begin to question the utility and efficacy of the entire process. To be sure, there have been intermittent improvements in certain East European countries, usually on the eve of an important CSCE forum, but overall the record of implementation, particularly in the human rights area, has not been good. Emigration from the Soviet Union has slowed to a trickle, dissent has been brutally suppressed and the hopes of millions in Eastern Europe, awakened in 1975 by the promise of the Helsinki Final Act, have been disappointed.

The dismal record of the Soviet Union has not been confined to the human rights area. The invasion and occupation of Afghanistan marked a violation of the very heart of the Final Act's basic principles that signatory states should refrain from the threat or use of force and respect one another's national sovereignty and territorial integrity. The imposition of martial law in Poland in 1980 and all the subsequent repression there is another vivid reminder of the failures of the CSCE process. It is instructive, in this regard, to note the hyprocrisy of the Soviet Union, which has, with much fanfare at the Stockholm CDE Conference, been pushing for a Treaty on the Non-Use of Force, a pledge already contained in the Helsinki Final Act and which the Soviet Union is violating daily in Afghanistan.

The 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act provides us with a valuable opportunity to reaffirm our commitment to the Helsinki process, and particularly to its human rights and humanitarian provisions. The East-West dialog initiated in Helsinki 10 years ago and the process of review and accountability which has been gradually established have proven to be valuable assets. The Helsinki process has provided a beacon of hope to the peoples of Eastern Europe and has even helped to marginally improve their lives by enhancing somewhat the free East-West flow of people, information and ideas.

We cannot ask too much of the Helsinki process, since it is unrealistic to expect that in a mere 10 years the repressive nature of Soviet society would fundamentally change. What we sought when we signed the Final Act in 1975 were incremental changes and improvements as well as an established instrument for calling attention to the need for continued compliance. This we have largely achieved. It cannot be ignored, however, that continued Soviet repression of any form of dissent and its policy in Afghanistan have endangered the real achievments of the Helsinki process and undermined its credibility. Unless these outright violations of the spirit and the letter of Helsinki cease, the Helsinki Final Act will ultimately fall short of its primary goal of building real trust, security and cooperation among the peoples of the 35 signatory states.●

● Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, Thursday, August 1, 1985, marks a milestone in East-West relations. It is the 10th anniversary of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, held in Helsinki, Finland to promote world peace, the free exercise of human rights, and better understanding and cooperation between East and West.

In the years which followed the signing of the Helsinki Accords, some gains were realized. For example, the Soviet Union allowed increased emigration of national minorities and improved conditions for foreign journalists; there has been greater openness about military activities, including the voluntary exchange of observers at military exercises; and scientific and economic activity between East and West increased. However, this progress fell far short of the high standards set at Helsinki.

As of late, Soviet action in human rights has been deplorable. A glaring example of this is the emigration of Soviet Jews to the West. In the years following Helsinki, 1975-79, 124,402 persons were granted exit visas. However, in the last 5 years, only 35,816 have been allowed to emigrate. This shows a blatant disregard for the long term goals of the accords. We must continue to pressure the Soviets into conformation with the goals of the Pact through continued spotlighting of human rights violations in the eyes of world opinion. The Helsinki accords are the best forum to keep this pressure on the Soviet Government to improve conditions for national minorities. Perhaps if such a forum was available in the 1930's, atrocities such as the Holocaust or the bloody purges of Stalin may not have taken place.

At the present time, we are engaged in the first significant arms control talks of this decade with the Soviets in Geneva. This type of continuing dialog is the best avenue available to achieve world peace and stability. On this historic occasion, let us revive the spirit of Helsinki and call on the negotiators in Geneva to end the arms race—a race which has no winners. And, let us make the second decade after Helsinki a decade of achievement.●

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Final Act of the Helsinki accords.

This anniversary provides an opportunity to reflect back on what could have been a turning point in relations between East and West. The signing of these accords sparked a strong hope that a better understanding and sense of cooperation would be established and that a mutual commitment to the advancement of human rights would be recognized.

Today's anniversary should be the celebration of a decade of accomplishment toward greater respect for human freedom and fundamental rights.

But, Mr. Speaker, today is not a day to celebrate accomplishments, for there have been precious few. Sadly, today is a day of regret and disappointment. Regret that the Soviet Union has not been held accountable for the fundamental disregard for human rights it has displayed, and disappointment that an agreement which once held so much promise has not been fulfilled.

The Soviet Union's human rights record has, in fact, deteriorated since the Helsinki accords were signed. Events including the 1979 invasion of Afghanistan, increased pressure on Poland, and the 1983 shooting down of an unarmed Korean jetliner evidence the gross betrayal of the intent of the accords by the Soviets.

Emigration of Soviet Jews has also dwindled from 51,000 in 1979 to just 900 last year. This significant decline is not because less people wish to leave the U.S.S.R. Indeed, sources indicate that more people than ever before have expressed a desire to emigrate. Increased harassment, loss of jobs, censorship of mail and phone calls, and even imprisonment generally succeed in suppressing attempts to emigrate.

The Kremlin obviously has its own opinion of minimal standards of human rights, but the Congress of the United States and the citizens of the free world must not accept their definition. As Members of the greatest democratic body in the world, we must reaffirm our commitment to the goals set forth in the Final Act, and we must reaffirm our commitment to pressuring the Soviet Government to do the same.

The 10th anniversary of the Final Act of the Helsinki accords must serve as a reminder that we must constantly be vigilant about human rights in order to ensure their promotion and protection. The next 10 years must be a decade of challenge, change, and progress as we work to share with oppressed peoples throughout the world the freedom we in this country so abundantly enjoy.●

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] who, as the distinguished vice-chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe [CSCE], referred to as the Helsinki Commission, has made available this time to us today in order to enable us to expound upon the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. It is an important commemoration which we discuss today, and one which I welcome.

Prior to the meeting of the 35 nations in Helsinki in August, 1975, there were several years of intense negotiations regarding the many provisions of the Helsinki document. In its final form, it contains three baskets, or sections. The first basket focuses on security matters, although principle No. 7 deals with human rights in general. The second basket deals with economics, while the third basket discusses human rights provisions, among them, family reunification. I was pleased to cosponsor House Joint Resolution 361, a companion bill to Senate Joint Resolution 180 which commemorates the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords, and which was the topic of House consideration earlier today. In conjunction with that measure, I was pleased to join the gentlelady from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], in introducing a concurrent resolution today which focuses more distinctly on principle No. 7 of basket one to which I just referred. Principle No. 7 is 1 of 10 guiding principles in the Final Act, and asserts respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thoughts, conscience, religion or belief. It is highly appropriate that we focus attention on this aspect of the accords, and in reviewing the 18th Semiannual Report by the President to the CSCE, we find that, "The Soviet Union has continued to violate both the letter and spirit of principles guiding relations between states as set forth in the Helsinki Final Act."

Having turned back the pages of time to review remarks made by the late Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev at the time of the signing of the Helsinki accords, I find it especially interesting that he stated, "We assume that all countries represented at the conference will implement the understandings reached. As regards the Soviet Union, it will act precisely in this manner." President Gerald Ford, in his address at the signing, accurately conveyed the observation that participating nations at the Helsinki meeting will be judged "not by the promises we make, but by the promises we keep."

Following the historic signing ceremony, Helsinki Watch Monitoring Groups were formed across the Soviet Union. Their aim was to closely follow the actions of Soviet authorities in their implementation of the principles in the three baskets. Congress also acted, by forming the Helsinki Commission—the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe—in 1976. Since its inception until this past year, the Commission was ably and respectively chaired by our colleague, the gentleman from Florida and the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, DANTE FASCELL. His tenure has been a guiding light for the Congress and for the administration in following actions taken by nations signatory to this agreement. The Commission's work this year is being ably directed by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] and the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HOYER.]

In the decade that has followed, we have witnessed the unprecedented abridgement of human rights in the Soviet Union and elsewhere, as evidenced by the almost complete dissolution of the aforementioned human rights monitoring groups. Of the many courageous men and women who participated over the years, most have been sent to labor camps, imprisoned, incarcerated in pyschiatric hospitals, or exiled. Only a few remain untouched by the heavy hand of Soviet repression.

Soviet Jewish emigration, which peaked at 51,000 in 1979, has dropped to less than 900 emigrees in 1984. Arrests of Soviet Jewish Hebrew teachers and activists has increased dramatically, and the expected number of Prisoners of Conscience hovers over 30. Then number of men, women, and children who have been denied permission to emigrate, or the ability to rejoin their families in Israel has soared each year, in direct contravention to the Accord and its principles which are our topic of discussion today. Discrimination is not limited to Soviet Jews—there are hundreds of Pentacostals who have been arrested and harassed for the simple desire of wanting to practice their religion freely and openly. And the case of little Kaisa Randpere, a 1-year-old Estonian girl who should be allowed to be raised by her loving parents in Sweden, all cry out for true and proper implementation of the Helsinki Final Act.

Mr. Speaker, the first Helsinki 10 years have shown us that continued vigilance on our part is a necessity. As a member of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, I have been closely involved with an ongoing investigation into the interruption and tampering of mail going into and out of the Soviet Union. Individuals whose cases we are now investigating include the eminent scientist and Nobel Peace Prize winner, Dr. Andrei Sakharov. But there are thousands more men and women who suffer this insidious practice at the hands of unnamed Soviet officials.

We in the West cannot stand idly by as they are arrested for no real reason, harassed and beaten, their homes searched, personal items confiscated, and then sentenced to prison, labor camps or internal exile. These practices are not within the letter or spirit of the Helsinki Final Act. The people of the United States will not abide such blatant cruelty.

As we commemorate the signing of the document which gives us the inherent right to strive for the freedom of all peoples, let us look forward to the next expert's meeting in Bern, Switzerland in February 1986, with the goal that our renewed efforts will hopefully have improved the situation for all men and women, whose only remaining hope depends on what is embodied in the Helsinki Final Act.●

● Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, today we honor an agreement and a process that has had mixed success but has still succeeded in being an important means of working for human rights in the Soviet Union and other East bloc countries.

The Soviet Union has a convenient policy of abiding by international agreements as long as it is in its self-interest to do so. This is a natural policy of all governments, but in free societies, pressure is brought to bear on governments by their populations or other governments to abide by agreements even if they would rather not.

Unfortunately, the Soviet Union has been singularly free of significant pressure to abide by its commitments.

When the Soviet Union signed the Final Act in 1975, it agreed to refrain from the threat or use of force against other nations. It invaded Afghanistan in 1979.

It agreed to take effective measures against terrorism and prevent territories from being used for terrorist activities. The Soviet Union has several terrorist training camps on its territory.

The Soviet Union has agreed to assure constant, tangible progress in the exercise of human rights. It has reduced Jewish emigration from a high of 51,000 in 1979 to 896 in 1984, and Helsinki monitors, members of an unofficial peace group and unregistered religious groups, and Jewish cultural activities have all been victims of increased human rights violations.

The Soviet Union agreed to ensure individual freedom to practice and profess religion and consult with religious organizations. It is quite obvious that this freedom is violated regularly, especially for Jews.

Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union has an atrocious record over the past several years, but it is not the Final Act that is at fault. It is the Soviet Union's failure.

And perhaps the free world has not done enough to try to enforce the agreement. We write letters, we protest verbally, but what cohesive, concrete action have we taken? None.

If a country can violate an agreement without fear of reprisal, what incentive is there for it to do othewise?

Perhaps on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the Final Act of the Helsinki accord, we should begin to seriously consider what recourse signatories to that act have when it is violated on a consistent and systematic basis.●

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in today's special order commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. As founder and cochairman of the Congressional Human Right Caucus, I know that many of my colleagues share my commitment to the standards for respect for human rights expressed in the Final Act.

As a Helsinki Commissioner I had the opportunity to go to Ottawa last May and participate in the Human Rights Expert Meeting regarding compliance with those provisions of the Final Act.

Our delegation, under the leadership of Chairman Senator ALFONSE D'AMATO and Cochairman Congressman STENY HOYER, met with the Soviet delegation. As my colleagues can imagine, the Soviets were not eager to discuss our concerns regarding their failure to comply with the human rights provisions of the accords.

As we attempted to raise our concern over the treatment of Andrei Sakharov, Anatoly Shcharansky and Dr. Yuri Orlov, the Soviets insisted upon talking about our country's treatment of American Indians and our problem with unemployment.

Yet despite the Soviet delegation's unwillingness to admit to their failure to meet the standards of the Helsinki Final Act, I believe that it is of primary importance that we continue to uphold these standards. It is necessary to view the Helsinki Final Act as a symbol for the struggle for human rights for individuals in the Soviet Union and its satellites. We must remind ourselves that for the oppressed peoples of the world the U.S. commitment to human rights, particularly those specified in the Helsinki Final Act, adds greatly to their individual struggle. For the most part, the Helsinki Final Act has helped to establish human rights as a legitimate issue of international concern and discussion.

The case for upholding the standards of human rights outlined in the Helsinki accords cannot be overstated. We must view these documents in the important role they played in activating human rights efforts throughout the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

Today in my office I met with Alexander Lyakov who is currently on a hunger strike in solidarity with friends stuck in the Soviet Union. His friends, Lyudmila Nemtseva and Dmitry Marchenko, have begun an open-ended hunger strike out of their frustration regarding the Soviet Government's policy to refuse them permission to emigrate. Although I do not support their plan to fast till death, I understand and sympathize with their serious situation. Unfortunately, their story is one repeated by thousands of other Soviet citizens who have been denied permission to emigrate.

And the story of persecution and harassment is repeated throughout Eastern Europe. In Poland the authorities have clamped down on the labor movement by outlawing Solidarity. In Czechoslovakia members of Charter 77, the Helsinki Monitoring Group, including Rudolf Battek, have been imprisoned. In Romania the Christian community has been subjected to great persecution, including the mistreatment of religious leaders and the desecration of churches. And in Bulgaria there have been numerous reports of persecution of the Turkish minority.

In signing the Helsinki Accords, the U.S. and the other signators, committed themselves to periodic meetings to review compliance with these standards. We must use these accords, and all other available opportunities, to discuss with the Soviet Government our abhorrence of their treatment of human rights activists, religious believers and ethnic minorities.

I believe that the only way we will ever see progress in respect for human rights in the Soviet Union is by continuing to trumpet our concerns in this area, at every available opportunity, including the Arms negotiations in Geneva. In the past the United States has been far too willing, in my judgment, to sign agreements with the U.S.S.R. without obtaining firm commitments from them on issues of great importance to U.S. citizens. Our country has much to offer to the Soviets, including technology and grain, and I am afraid that we will give away the store without obtaining a commitment from them regarding issues of primary importance to our Nation. In the past, I have contacted President Reagan to express my sentiment that human rights must be on the agenda whenever we talk with the Soviets.

At times our most valuable tool in working on the cause of human rights is public relations—and the Soviets should never be allowed to escape from the painful exposure of public opinion. The media must recognize the value their scrutiny on this issue can bring to bear on the Soviet leadership.

The motto for U.S. representatives negotiating with the U.S.S.R. must at all times prioritize respect for human rights. The 10th anniversary provides us with an excellent opportunity to reaffirm our commitment to the human rights standards embodied in the Helsinki Final Act, and to maintain our solidarity with the oppressed peoples caught behind the Iron Curtain. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the Helsinki accords, and to use their voices to encourage greater compliance by the U.S.S.R. and its satellites.●

● Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to commend the sponsors of this important special order.

Today we commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, more commonly known as the Helsinki accords.

Signed on August 1, 1975, the accords were hailed as a breakthrough in East-West relations. Nearly every European Nation, the United States and Canada joined in support of the Helsinki Final Act which sets forth principles including respect for sovereignty, inviolability of frontiers, nonuse of force, and respect for human rights. The accords also call for cooperation in science, technology, economic issues, and the environment.

Also spelled out in the accords are standards for freedom of movement of people and information, family reunification, and educational and cultural exchanges.

Considering that there is no authority to enforce compliance, the Helsinki accords have been successful in helping to persuade nations to alter certain restrictive policies.

However, there is one area where the accords have clearly failed. Soviet compliance with the accords, particularly improvement of human rights and emigration, has been far less than we had hoped. One issue in particular is useful as a yardstick for measuring Soviet progress—emigration of Soviet Jews. From a high of 50,000 in 1979, the number of Soviet Jews allowed to leave the U.S.S.R. last year plummeted to a mere 900. There are alarming signs that official harassment and persecution of Jews in the Soviet Union is on the upswing.

In addition, informal groups, such as the "Moscow Group" led by Uri Oolov, Andrei Sakharov, and Anatoly Shchar-ansky, that have developed to monitor compliance with the Helsinki Act have been systematically disbanded by the Soviet Government.

While celebrating the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki accords, we must remember how much progress is yet to be made.●

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, on May 1, 1975, the leaders of 35 nations signed the Helsinki Final Act. Today, we mark the 10th anniversary of this unprecedented commitment on the part of 33 European countries, the United States, and Canada to respect for the human rights of their citizens, particularly for freedom of thought, conscience, religion, and belief.

Ten years later we cannot yet celebrate this anniversary in triumph. Throughout the Eastern Bloc repression has remained a constant. But even in the face of continuing oppression, the commitments made at Helsinki have inspired hope among many who are working for change. In January 1977, as a direct result of the Helsinki Final Act, 241 Czechoslovakian citizens, in signing a manifesto called Charter '77, openly demonstrated their belief that responsibility and maintenance of civil rights was the concern of individuals as much as governments.

Over the past 8½ years, spokespersons for Charter '77 and reports from the parallel, though complimentary, Committee for the Defense of the Unjustly Persecuted [VONS] founded in Czechoslovakia in 1978 have issued a constant flow of reports and updates on human rights abuses and conditions in their country. The signatories and spokespersons for these monitoring groups have borne the brunt of their Government's repressive might.

Commitment to human rights within Czechoslovakia is not a comfortable or easy position. Spokespersons and signatories to Charter '77, now numbering over 1,200 individuals risk their personal well-being, as well as the future of their children. In speaking out, Charter '77 signatories knowingly expose themselves to possible arrest, detention, interrogation, and intrusive surveillance; their children have often been denied access to the nation's educational system. Ten of the twenty-four individuals who have served in the role of spokesperson have served time in jail.

In celebrating the eighth anniversary of Charter '77, the Charter's spokespersons issued some wise observations from which we can well be instructed as we consider our continued commitment to the Helsinki process on this 10th anniversary. No one gains anything or changes anything for the better, they point out, simply by signing a document. Yet, by signing a commitment to respect for human freedoms, we can bear witness to our ideals. By focusing attention on injustice, we try to make it possible to speak the truth, and we accept public responsibility for trying to make our vision a reality. Like Charter '77, the Helsinki Final Act is not meant to be a one-time purely symbolic gesture, but rather the beginning of work which must continue.

Within Czechoslovakia, the signatories of Charter '77 have summoned great courage acting as a model of active commitment to the ideals of Helsinki. May we succeed as well as they in directing the world's attention to human rights, in struggling to create an environment where it is possible to speak the truth, and in awakening hope among those who are oppressed.●

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, this week marks the 10th anniversary of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe [CSCE], more commonly known as the Helsinki accords.

Public perception of the Helsinki accords has been based primarily on the human rights provision of the act. But they are much more than that. In the words of Charlotte Saikowski of the Christian Science Monitor, they are:

> A carefully balanced package of principles designed to provide a framework for cooperation (East-West) in many areas, including military, security, trade, science, technology, environment, culture, and education.

I would like to share with my colleagues, however, excerpts from a report, published in November 1984, of the North Atlantic Assembly's Committee on Civilian Affairs that deals with the humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki accords. The report, entitled "The Implementation of the Humanitarian Commitments Entered into at the CSCE," was prepared by Mr. Frans Vangronsveld, a member of the Belgian Senate, who is also the Rapporteur of the Civilian Affairs Committee's Subcommittee on the Free Flow of Information and People.

I believe Mr. Vangronsveld's report offers a comprehensive assessment of the overall lack of commitment to the act by Eastern bloc nations. As chairman of the Assembly's Civilian Affairs Committee, I am proud to associate myself with Mr. Vangronsveld's report, as well as with all the work done by the Committee and the entire Assembly. The Assembly, under the auspices of the Subcommittee on the Free Flow of Information and People, also puts out a quarterly publication, the Bulletin, which reports on violations of the humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki accords.

I can make available for my colleagues copies of the Bulletin and Mr. Vangronsveld's report:

SUMMARY

I. IMPLEMENTATION OF THE HUMAN RIGHTS COMMITMENTS ENTERED INTO AT THE CSCE

The Rapporteur sets out from the following observation: the signatories of the Helsinki Final Act and its follow-up do not all show the same commitment to implementing their human rights undertakings. The so-called "socialist" countries are in many cases determined not to implement them. The draft report draws up a picture, for each type of undertaking, of the violations of the Final Act. It notes that the picture is varied. Certain countries, like Hungary, have progressed, while others decline to move forward at all. Some areas—like religious freedom—seem more susceptible to change, while in others—such as freedom of association—there seems to be little likelihood of the situation improving.

To induce the signatory states to keep their promises, the draft report proposes that Western diplomacy be "conditionalised", so as to avoid the drawbacks of "linkage". In order to do this, each of the Alliance countries should be encouraged to adopt a different approach, as the various Alliance countries maintain relations of differing degrees with each of the communist countries. Care should be taken to avoid these countries reacting as a bloc, and this calls for coordinated but diversified diplomacy.

Public means represent a vital supplement to diplomacy, especially in a field which affects relations between peoples. The draft report calls for a separation between such activity and the diplomatic approach, with states resorting to public means only in the event of failure of diplomatic channels, and the rest being left to private initiative and international communication by means of orders and documents.

I. IMPLEMENTATION OF THE HUMANITARIAN COMMITMENTS ENTERED INTO AT THE CSCE

1. By the time the Madrid Conference closed some progress had been made in the field of human rights, particularly in the areas of the press and trades union rights. Since the signing of the Helsinki Final Act, however, there have been constant violations of the human rights commitments contrived therein. One is entitled to wonder what point there is in progress on paper while the actual situation has not improved.

2. The CSCE process has reached a crucial juncture. If no real progress is made in the field of human rights, the forthcoming meetings of the Conference will lose all credibility, since the Western signatories will know in advance that the commitments given by the Eastern bloc will have no practical value. This would not only tend to make our diplomacy look ineffective, but would increase cynicism both on the part of the Eastern bloc countries and even more so on the part of public opinion in the West, for which the natural tendency would be to look on these developments as an abstract game of concern to governments for reasons that have very little to do with human solidarity. It is therefore our Sub-Committee's task to see what means would be likely to bring about fuller and more balanced application of the commitments entered into the course of the CSCE process. In order to do this, we must first take stock of the extent to which these commitments have been violated, then examine the paths, both public and diplomatic, which would make it possible to bring pressure to bear on the signatories who appear to attach scant importance to honouring their promises—or indeed appear to be determined not to honour them.

a. Extent of the violations of the Helsinki commitments

3. This is not the place to detail the multiple violations of the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Final Act (Principle VII and Basket III in particular). We must settle for a brief survey of recent developments, attempting to pick out the most significant features. The Bulletin published by the International Secretariat for our Sub-Committee constitutes a sad catalogue of these multiple violations. Ninety to ninety-five per cent of them were perpetrated by governments of the Eastern bloc.

4. However if we look more closely at the events of recent years we can detect a real disparity first of all between the conditions prevailing in the various countries of the Eastern bloc, and secondly between each of these countries' and the Soviet Union. These differences serve to define the subtly shaded framework within which our countries' policies should be shaped, if they are to be realistic and effective. Actual conditions and pressures differ noticeably from one country to another, resulting in some unevenness in the degree of application of the various types of Helsinki commitment.

(g) Encourage changes

66. The Helsinki process, continued in Belgrade and later in Madrid, represented an attempt to "Europeanise" human rights questions, giving each of the signatories a right to voice their views on the matters mentioned in the Final Act, and its follow-up, even in connection with affairs internal to another state. In other words, the principle of non-interference is retained, but it cannot be invoked by a signatory to the Act to stop its partners intervening in connection with specific instances on questions dealt with in the Act. Thus there is no longer any principle of non-intervention in Europe (Albania excepted). This is why it is indispensible for the governments of the Alliance to seize every opportunity to show their concern over the violations of the human rights provisions of the Final Act. Depending on the case, this should be done discreetly by diplomatic methods, or else publicly. But it should never be forgotten that this is the major achievement of the CSCE process.

67. This opportunity opened up by the Final Act and its follow-up is rendered even more effective by the fact that societies of the Eastern countries differ widely from one another. The survey given above shows that there are now large discrepancies in governmental behaviour between countries of the Warsaw Pact, and, even more importantly, between the societies living under the "communist" regime. This variety is even more striking if one considers not only the human rights aspects of the internal situation of these countries, but on a more global level the societies taken as a whole. Their economic systems, their types of political organisation and the power of the Communist parties, for example, also vary substantially from one country to another.

68. The CSCE process cannot claim any responsibility for this diversity, but, if it is used consistently, it indubitably represents a factor making for fluidity in relations between European States. Anything that can help to transform the societies dominated by the Communist States by moving them towards greater diversity must help to make the "bloc" a less monolithic unit grouping and therefore less a bloc than an alliance. It is obviously up to the citizens of these countries themselves to consolidate these changes, but Western nations must not and cannot stand idly by. Any movement in this direction represents an advance for European peace.

69. More formal consideration should however be given to the means which might make it possible to force the signatories of the Act to register some progress towards honouring their commitments. In this respect, the first principle must be precision. The Soviets and their satellites always prefer vague and "universally" applicable formulas to precise and concrete commitments. There is nothing surprising in this. The totalitarian regimes' "Newspeak" let them interpret general principles their own way: notions which for us have a precise meaning are so distorted as to become completely malleable, serving to say anything one likes and its precise opposite. This is why the constitutions of the Communist countries detail rights which are often non-existent in practice.

70. The prime objective for the free nations must therefore be to secure commitments from the leaders of the Eastern bloc countries and the USSR that are as precise and as verifiable as possible. The objective must be a situation in which compliance with the commitments can be monitored in a manner that leaves no room for doubt. In this respect, some progress was made in Madrid. The fact, for example, that replies to requests for visas for potential emigrants must now be given within six months (and no longer "within a reasonable time") represents a veritable commitment. In the same way the provisions relating to press correspondents will make it possible to arrive at an incontrovertible verdict on the extent to which the Madrid provisions are being faithfully applied. This must be the path taken by the forthcoming follow-up conferences on human rights. It is quite obvious today that global promises have no practical value. However we should not delude ourselves: the further the countries of the Alliance proceeds along this path, the more difficult it will be to reach agreements. The Soviets and their allies will take shelter behind a restrictive interpretation of the principle of non-interference, although they themselves completely ignore this principle in waging their constant ideological war against the West.

71. If paralysis is to be avoided, the approach to these negotiations must be one that avoids confrontation between our Alliance and the Eastern bloc. We should make due allowance for the fact that the influence which the Alliance and each one of the countries of the Alliance can exert on each of the countries of the bloc varies considerably. Our influence on Soviet society is minimal, but this is not the case for all the societies of the satellite countries, with which we have economic and human relations that offer us broader scope for action. On the other hand the nations of the Alliance have more or less developed relations with the East, and any human rights policy must take account of the partners' capacity for influence. Policies that are too universal can be dangerous inasmuch as they run the risk of strengthening the solidarity between the leaders of the "brother countries", whereas the aim should be to weaken this solidarity. To make progress along this path, your Rapporteur suggests consideration, in turn, of diplomatic methods and public means.

CONCLUSION

90. Your Rapporteur would like to add that in his opinion parliamentarians from the member countries of the Alliance should be involved in the negotiations for the follow-up to the Final Act, following the United States practice, in order to make the public more familiar with these matters, which concern not only the States, but the citizens too. National delegations to the forthcoming meetings should at the very least include parliamentary observers, or better still contain parliamentarians as members of the delegation. The North Atlantic Assembly should likewise be involved in the prior consultation procedures of the member countries of the Alliance. This would make for greater consistency in the stances adopted within each of our countries, and also between the countries themselves.

91. The purpose of this report is to think of ways of introducing human rights consideration into the framework of inter-state negotiations, in order to assure them of their rightful place. All too often, questions relating to the citizens themselves are looked on as external to the normal field for foreign policy: they are then used for informational purpose or even propaganda purposes, or else in illustration of political considerations.

92. It is your Rapporteur's view that morality must have an integral place in the international concerns of democratic states and societies. This is not a matter of lapsing into other worldliness, but of making our moral objectives an integral part of our diplomatic practice. Human rights are one of the objectives of the Atlantic Alliance's international action. To come close to this objective, our nations must shape their international policy within this framework. Moral pressure must be backed up by political pressure. This is the price of consistency between our countries' foreign policies and the principles they invoke.●

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in celebrating the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki Final Act. The signing of the Final Act at the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in 1975 set forth the principles which have helped establish human rights as a legitimate issue of international concern and discussion. The process which began in Helsinki has provided additional instruments for calling attention to human rights violations and for promoting human rights.

August 1 marks the 10th anniversary of the day the heads of 33 European countries, the United States, and Canada, signed the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. This agreement obligated the signatories to work toward greater cooperation in the military, economic, scientific, cultural, educatonal and humanitarian spheres. On this day these countries also made a commitment to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms. These fundamental freedoms include a commitment to the principles of family reunification, family visits by national marriage and travel for personal and professional reasons.

I have referred to the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act on numerous occasions, in correspondence with Soviet officials regarding human rights cases of particular concern to my constituents. This agreement has provided a platform from which to express concerns about human rights abuses in the countries whose government institutions do not lend themselves to the consideration of these rights. I know that I will continue to refer to the Final Act as I express my continuing concern about individual cases, and international human rights, in general.

I share the commitment expressed by many of my colleagues today to the humanitarian principles embodied in the Helsinki Final Act and appreciate this opportunity to reconfirm this commitment.●

● Mrs. BOXER. I am pleased to be a part of this special order commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act.

I also want to commend my colleagues responsible for the special order. We must take advantage of every chance we have to speak out about human rights violations around the world. The gathering of foreign ministers from the 35 signatory states in Helsinki this week is an ideal opportunity to make our views known.

This occasion is particularly significant—not because of what has been done but—because of what has not been done. The flame of hope in the hearts of so many on August 1, 1975, kindled by some initial improvement in human rights situations in many Eastern European countries, began to dim after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and has all but gone out since.

The situation in the Soviet Union is particularly disturbing. We all know the statistics. The number of human rights violations has grown; the charges are more "trumped up"; the alleged crimes are more insignificant; the incidents of physical violence have increased; and the number of people being allowed to leave the Soviet Union has decreased.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I have risen, time after time, to speak about the plight of particular individuals. We have expressed our concern over the treatment of men like Sakharov and Shcharansky. We have also publicly raised the hardships and mistreatment of lesser known individuals like Isai Goldshtein and Roald Zelichonok. Today, however, I believe we should focus our attention, not on individuals, but on the problem at hand—the current disregard for human rights of those countries who signed the Helsinki accords.

Many people are concerned about those violations. I would like to share with you something that is happening in my district tomorrow. The Bay Area Council for Soviet Jews and several of my constituents are staging a mock funeral to "bury" the Helsinki accords. The funeral will feature a traditional coffin, and there will be several speakers. Yuri Yarim Agaev, a former Helsinki monitor and an emigree from the Soviet Union, will deliver the eulogy. I believe that funeral more accurately reflects the current state of affairs than what is happening in Helsinki.

When I spoke to this body a couple of weeks ago about the plight of specific Soviet Jews, I mentioned the meeting between Secretary of State Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze to commemorate the signing of the Helsinki accords. At that time, I urged Mr. Shultz to insist that the Soviets comply with the provisions of the treaty that they are meeting publicly to commemorate. I am today repeating that request. What better time than the 10th anniversary of the signing of a document pledging a freer flow of information, ideas, and people between the East and West to ask the signatories to live up to the terms of the agreement. I, again, here on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives, ask our Secretary of State to make known to the foreign ministers gathered in Helsinki that this country and its people expect them to live up to the provisions of the treaty that they are publicly meeting to commemorate.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for giving me this opportunity to speak out on this important and timely issue. And, again, Mr. Speaker, I publicly urge Mr. Shultz to be forceful in letting the world know that we stand firm in our belief in human rights and will not back down in our insistence that people everywhere be granted the basic freedoms that are the right of all.●

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, today we reflect on the accomplishments and the shortcomings of the Helsinki Final Act. Ten years after the signing of this important agreement, we need to make an honest appraisal of the act's contributions to the security and human rights situation in Europe.

Any appraisal must focus on basket I, the heart of the Final Act. Basket I contains what many regarded in 1975 as the Final Act's wellspring of hope—the Declaration of Principles Guiding Relations Among States. Principle 7 of the declaration enjoined signatories of the act to respect their citizens' human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion, or belief. The fact that the Soviet Union and its Eastern European allies accepted this language provided a glimmer of hope for the long-suffering people in those countries.

Sadly, however, that glimmer was quickly snuffed out. The Soviet Union, Poland, Romania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, and East Germany have buried human rights by orchestrating campaigns to terrorize those who demand the simple dignity of civil and political rights.

Symbolic of the Soviets' disdain for the Helsinki accords is its treatment of members of their Helsinki Monitoring Group. Yuri Lytvyn died in 1984 while serving a sentence of 10 years in a special-regimen labor camp. Vladimir Shelkov died in labor camp in 1980 at the age of 84. He was serving a 5-year sentence in a special-regimen labor camp. Yuri Orlov, the leader of the Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group, may be the next to die. He is presently serving a 5-year term of exile in Yakutia, where he is harassed by local inhabitants and given food rations that are insufficient to sustain him through the region's harsh winters. The vast majority of other Soviet Helsinki Monitors are either imprisoned or in exile.

Human rights advocates in other Warsaw Pact countries have been met with similar persecution. And such horrendous treatment is by no means limited to human rights activists. Ordinary citizens of all races, backgounds, and occupations have been imprisoned and destroyed for their religious and political beliefs. Minority ethnic groups have been punished for their nonviolent practices and rituals which encourage cultural and ethnic differentiation.

The unwillingness of the Soviet Union and its European allies to adhere to the principles of Basket I is clear. In fact, the human rights situation in these countries has generally worsened since the Final Act was promulgated. Some argue that this deterioration justifies our renunciation of the Helsinki accords. They would also argue that the lack of progress in achieving solid confidence-building measures through the Stockholm Conference and related fora is another reason to abandon the Helsinki process.

Mr. Speaker, I disagree and join with my fellow commissioners of the CSCE in arguing just the opposite. It is unlikely that the human rights situations in the Soviet Union or Eastern Europe would have improved in the absence of the Helsinki agreements and efforts by the CSCE; perhaps these situations might have been worse without Helsinki. Moreover, meetings of the Helsinki signatories have provided—and will continue to provide—our country and the democracies of Europe with the opportunity to bring to the world's attention the grievous human rights abuses taking place in these countries. The Helsinki process has also had the salutary effect of speeding the process of family reunification for Eastern European victims of government repression.

Ultimately, the Helsinki process serves as the foundation for improved bilateral and multilateral relations in one of the world's most sensitive regions. Although the Helsinki process has not yet produced a comprehensive framework for securing the peace and protecting human rights in Europe, it has provided a meeting place for the superpowers and their European allies, a forum where tensions can be defused and modest improvements in relations can be made. In the nuclear age, such a forum is indeed valuable.

As Flora Lewis noted in her New York Times column yesterday, Helsinki conferences "were among the few places where Soviet-American exchange continued, if only as a shouting match, in the years of broken contact." My colleagues and I recognize the importance of that exchange. And we also recognize the importance of maintaining our firm commitment, through the Helsinki process, to human rights and a secure Europe. For those reasons, we must sustain our commitment to the Helsinki accords as a means of improving them and, as a result, the prospects of lasting peace.

I commend my fellow commissioners for holding this special order and look forward to working with them to sustain the effectiveness of the CSCE, which performed so admirably under the leadership of former Chairmen FASCELL and DOLE and should continue to do so under Chairmen HOYER and D'AMATO.●

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, 1985 marks the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. I am pleased to join my colleagues in reflecting on the significance of this act and on our country's commitment to the principles set forth in that document.

Thirty-five countries, including the Soviet Union and a number of other Eastern European countries, joined as signatories of the final act. Though not a legally binding agreement, these signatures represent a commitment to improving relations between nations and promoting human rights around the world.

This act has been a beacon of hope for many who are struggling against the shackles of oppression. Unfortunately, in the 10 years since the final act was signed many of the signatory countries have been delinquent in their adherence to its human rights provisions.

Human rights violations in the Soviet Union have actually worsened since the act was signed and the situation in that country is deplorable. I have worked tirelessly in Congress on behalf of Soviet Jews who are among the many innocent victims of Soviet repression. The only crime committed by these people is their desire to practice their religion freely. For this they are unjustly harassed and mercilessly persecuted.

I am deeply disturbed by the worsening trend in human rights violations in the Soviet Union. It is important for us to reaffirm our commitment to the Helsinki Final Act and to protecting human rights throughout the world. We must continue to apply pressure on the Soviet Government to uphold the final act and end their repressive regime.

This 10th anniversary of the signing of the final act is met with the somber recognition that we have a long way to go to achieve the goals outlined in that document. It is my fervent hope that some day human rights will not have to be fought for as they are now. But, until that day we must continue to challenge those who would deny others human rights and dignity. I will continue to dedicate my efforts in Congress toward furthering that goal.●

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in this special order to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act.

Mr. Speaker, on August 1, 1975, the heads of 33 European countries, the United States and Canada, signed the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe [CSCE]. This 40,000-word document, commonly known as the Helsinki accords, was produced in the heyday of East-West détente. It is a carefully balanced package of principles designed to provide a framework for improving cooperation in many areas including military, security, human rights, trade, science, technology, environment, culture, and education.

This document was signed with the hope that relations between the East and West would improve, as would the lives of those living under oppression. Unfortunately, the Helsinki accords have not lived up to that hope. The Soviet view of Helsinki has increasingly glossed over what in western minds has become the accords' main promise, and perhaps the source of its main failing—the pledge by the 35 signatories to guarantee certain human rights, to open the flow of information, and to improve contacts across borders.

One indicator of the Soviet record on human rights, for example, is the rate at which Moscow allows Soviet Jews to emigrate. In 1979, 51,320 Jews were allowed to emigrate. That number dwindled to 896 in 1984. To date in 1985, less than 500 have been allowed to leave.

Yet, a major result of the Helsinki accords has been the proliferation of informal groups in Eastern Europe to monitor compliance with the human rights provisions. Scores of groups have sprung up to gather evidence and write reports. We are all familiar with the "Moscow group" of intellectuals led by Yuri Orlov, Andrei Sakharov, and Anatoly Shcharansky, a group now brutally disbanded.

We ourselves have become increasingly sensitive to human rights violations against citizens of all nations. A special CSCE commission composed of representatives of Congress and the administration—the Helsinki Commission—functions right here. Many ethnic and private human rights groups also keep up pressure on signatory governments to hold the Soviet-bloc countries accountable for human rights violations.

The 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act provides us with the opportunity to reaffirm our commitment to the humanitarian principles embodied in the Final Act and to maintain our solidarity with those rights are systematically violated. Although the promise of accords has not been realized, we must still pursue the ideals embodied in it, for they are worthy of our best efforts.

I commend my colleagues for scheduling this special order on this important occasion, and I thank you for the opportunity to participate.●

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with the distinguished chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, the Honorable DANTE B. FASCELL; the co-chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Honorable STENY HOYER; and the other members of the Commission, in commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act.

On August 1, 1975, 32 European countries, as well as the Soviet Union, the United States, and Canada signed the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, more commonly referred to as the Helsinki accords. By signing this document, the signators demonstrated a historic and monumental international commitment to insuring respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and at the same time encouraged nations to work together in a spirit of economic and cultural cooperation.

The Helsinki accords have enabled the Western European countries and the United States to hold the Communist bloc accountable for their blatant and systematic violations of this agreement. The accords assert that:

> The participating States will respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

And that:

> "By virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, all peoples always have the right, in full freedom, to determine, when and as they wish, their internal and external political status, without external interference, and to pursue as they wish their political economic, social and cultural development.

Yet, over the last 10 years, the world has witnesed numerous violations of the Final Act by the Soviet Union, and Soviet citizens, who have attempted to monitor their own country's compliance with the Helsinki agreement's principles, have been ruthlessly persecuted by the authorities. Sadly, all of the Helsinki monitors in the Soviet Union are either dead or are in prison, and although the Soviet Union is a principal signator of the Helsinki accords, it continues to disregard this document, engaging in illegal military manuevers, manipulating sovereign governments, and suppressing the national heritage, religion, and culture of the peoples in those countries it has forcibly occupied.

Thousands of men, women, and children living under Communist control are confronted daily with Soviet brutality, and many Soviet dissidents, standing bravely in defiance of this constant oppression, continue to be the source of strength and inspiration for all those living in captive nations throughout the world who yearn from basic freedoms and the right of self-determination.

Mr. Speaker, on this the 10th anniversary of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, let us reaffirm our commitment to work with our European allies to insure that all nations uphold the most basic principles of this act and renew our efforts to hold accountable the Soviet Union for any violations of these accords which it agreed to uphold 10 years ago.●

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords by the leaders of 33 European countries, the United States, and Canada provides us with an important opportunity to reaffirm our strong commitment to the humanitarian principles embodied in the Helsinki Final Act.

The Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe set forth principles of behavior relating to military, trade, science, technology, environment, culture, and education in the hopes of achieving a greater cooperation among nations. Despite the Soviets' inability to live up to the standards established at Helsinki, the Final Act is of great value as a political statement with which to pressure the Soviet-bloc countries to liberalize authoritarian systems and relax their repressive policies.

As a result of the Helsinki agreements, dozens of informal groups have emerged to monitor compliance with the human rights provisions. Helsinki has inspired activity such as the "Moscow Group" of intellectuals and Charter 77, a human rights manifesto and civil rights movement in Czechoslavakia. Brave individuals continue to risk imprisonment to publicize their Government's abuse of civil liberties.

These courageous efforts focusing world attention on humanitarian concerns, have created a successful forum in which to address violations of human rights. The Final Act remains a symbol of hope for those who are denied basic freedoms in oppressive societies.

Ten years later, our commitment is still strong. As we reaffirm our solidarity with those whose rights are infringed, we urge the Soviet-bloc countries to abide by the humanitarian principles to which they subscribed as set forth in the Helsinki Final Act.●

● Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 361, commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The Helsinki process began 10 years ago amid general optimism about East-West relations. Helsinki was an attempt to achieve lasting peace through a strong, comprehensive agreement on accepted minimum levels of conduct by signatory nations in fields such as economic cooperation, military security and human rights.

The United States can rejoice in this 10th anniversary of the Helsinki accords, for they represent the universal appeal of those values upon which our own Republic was founded: freedom of thought, speech and worship maintained through the exercise of civil and political rights. The great achievement of the Final Act, and the ongoing process of its review and implementation, has been the establishment of human rights as a valid and serious area for international cooperation and concern. The Helsinki process has catalyzed interest in human rights issues and provided an important forum for focusing on human rights violations. Helsinki raised our consciousness and provided hope for the greater development of human rights the world over.

The United States and its European allies have happily subscribed to the Helsinki process, welcoming it as a long-needed tool; we have honestly and fairly adhered to all of its principles. Unfortunately, others have cynically disregarded the process. The Soviet Union and many of its Eastern European allies continue to suppress the activities and members of Helsinki watch groups, harass dissidents, curtail freedom of religion and culture, and curb emigration by ethnic minorities. Perhaps nowhere is this contempt of the very spirit of Helsinki more painfully evident than in the Soviet Union's treatment of its Jewish citizens.

Still, these trangressions should neither dishearten nor discourage us. Rather, they should serve to strengthen our resolve to support and even extend the Helsinki process. We can continue to use the process to show the world the blatant disregard of the Soviet Union for global opinion and for solemn international covenants.

Helsinki serves as the last beacon of hope in the darkened world of oppressed peoples in the Soviet Union and in Eastern Europe. We must take every opportunity to renew our commitment to the Helsinki Final Act, and those principles which it represents, until these people—along with all others in the family of man—walk in the bright sunshine of freedom.●

● Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am especially grateful today to participate in this timely and important special order. The process begun in Helsinki has helped to establish human rights as a legitimate issue of international concern and discussion.

It is essential that an attempt be made to establish and maintain communication with those who are trapped inside authoritarian and totalitarian regimes. As representatives of the free world, we hope that our special order today will enable Jews to leave the Soviet Union in accordance with international law, and to help those who choose to remain in the Soviet Union live as Jews with the same rights accorded every other Soviet citizen.

Today, a significant portion of the world's population is forced to endure hunger, pain, and oppression by governments whose policies deny even the most basic of human rights. Soviet dissidents like Andrei Sakharov have endured a lifetime of oppression and often look to democratic states for support.

Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere hope that America, as the cornerstone of democracy, will continue to further the advancement of human rights, personal liberty, and perhaps most important, foster the respect among men that leads to true freedom and the development of mankind's potential.

In summary, I would like to offer my conviction that all Americans reflect on the great nature of our own freedoms, and that we earnestly endeavor among the world's oppressed to replace terror with security, degradation with respect, and tyranny with freedom.●

● Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, today, on the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords, world attention is once again focused on the failure of some nations to uphold the spirit or the letter of this international agreement.

As freshman cochair of the Congressional Caucus on Soviet Jewry, I am particularly disturbed by the attitude of the Soviet Union toward the thousands of Soviet citizens who are members of the Jewish faith.

I am concerned for those within the Soviet Union who are denied the freedom of religion and have an even greater concern for those members of this community who have made the difficult decision to leave Russia, but who are denied emigration rights. The freedom of religion and of movement are both guaranteed by the Helsinki accords.

It is very traumatic for most people to leave the nation of their birth, their friends, and their way of life. The Soviet Government uses that anxiety to further punish its Jewish citizens by making them strangers in their own land.

Those who have asked to leave are denied jobs and education and are held up to public ridicule as tools of Western imperialism or international Zionism.

Furthermore, those Soviet citizens who have attempted to monitor compliance of the Soviet Union with the Helsinki accords have faced imprisonment, exile or forced emigration.

In the years following the signing of the Helsinki accords, the number of people allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union rose to record levels. Since 1979, however, those numbers have declined dramatically.

Recent signs of loosening emigration policies for certain groups within the Soviet Union are encouraging, but the overall number of emigrants has not increased, leading me to conclude that the current policy may be merely a public relations move, not serious reform in the policy.

So, it is necessary at this time, as suggested in a recent report by the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, that we review the balance sheet on progress made in relation to the Helsinki accords. This year, not only do we celebrate the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords, we also celebrate the 40th anniversary of the end of the World War II.

In those first years after the war, for a brief period, it seemed as though the world would react to the horrors of war by creating mechanisms to promote peace and human rights for all peoples. Creation of the state of Israel and approval by the United Nations of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights gave hope that we could preserve historical boundaries and prevent repeated conflicts that threatened world peace.

The nuclear arms race and a series of territorial disputes overshadowed early accomplishments. Repeated Soviet vetoes in the United Nations and failure to enact a verifiable arms control agreement further eroded the sense of optimism.

Then, in 1975, on the 30th anniversary of the end of the war in Europe, 35 nations signed a document that rekindled the hopes of many with regard to human rights.

The Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe [CSCE] was signed in Helsinki on August 1, 1975, by the United States, Canada, the Soviet Union and 32 European nations.

The Final Act is a political statement of intent. These accords carry considerable moral and political weight since they were signed at the highest level by both a U.S. President and a Soviet leader.

Hopes have faded during the last decade, however, with repeated violations of the accords, which declare that "the participating States will respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, for all, without distinction * * *."

The Helsinki accords on human rights was endorsed in the tradition of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and held out promise that signatory nations would allow freer movement of people, ideas, and information.

However, a litany of human rights violations regarding the treatment of Jews in the Soviet Union and many others has accumulated in the 10 years since the signing of the accords. The cases which harassment of families who have applied to emigrate, including loss of jobs with little hope of future employment in meaningful positions, impoverishment, expulsion of young people from universities and conscription into military service; surveillance by authorities; physical attacks; arrest; and imprisonment on charges such as parasitism.

These cases document clear violations of Helsinki accord agreements to protect freedom of religion, minority rights, and cultural rights. It is important to remember that the unspeakable human rights violations of World War II gave birth to the process that produced the Helsinki accords.

This process has been a source of hope to citizens of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe; therefore, the meetings such as that which recently took place in Ottawa and the commemoration here today are important because they keep this process alive.

As Ambassador Richard Schifter, head of the U.S. delegation to the Experts Meeting on Human Rights in Ottawa, stated in his testimony, "We must keep in mind that a meeting such as that which was held in Ottawa was unthinkable as recently as 15 years ago. The concept of limited government, the ideas of the rights of the individual which originated with the thinkers and writers of the 18th century and which were enshrined in our own Declaration of Independence were ideas advanced first by individuals, then by groups and movements, and were then adopted by countries, but only for domestic application.

"The notion that governments might monitor the behavior of other governments toward their own citizens, that there would be international conferences at which domestic practices of participating countries would be subjected to scrutiny is one of recent origin."

So, while the results of the Helsinki accords may be meager in their beginning stage, continuation of the Helsinki process may result in more plentiful gains in emigration, religious freedom, and other basic human rights in the future.●

● Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki accords, 10 years of disappointments and dashed hopes.

The hopes of 1975, at a time when détente was proving to be more than a dream, have now suffered from a decade of uncertain leadership in the Soviet Union and an escalation of rhetoric and nuclear arms rattling by both sides.

But the Soviets are not alone in undermining the peaceful intent of those agreements of 10 years ago. The current administration has been disappointing, at best, in pursuing meaningful arms control opportunities. There have been instances where hard language has replaced cold logic in dealing with the Soviet initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, we can do better. And, the Soviets certainly can do better.

As for those of us in the United States and elsewhere, those of us who care about human rights, let us continue our own "Helsinki Watch" to put constant attention and public pressure on all governments so that we can move toward the eventual peace that was brightly on the horizon in 1975, but now is dimmed with disappointment.

Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleagues who have provided this special order so that those of us who truly care about these vital issues can speak out on this important milestone.●

● Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this month commemorates the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act.

The Final Act, signed on August 1, 1985, committed 33 European countries, Canada, and the United States toward closer government relations over a wide range of activities. The Helsinki Act is unique among international accords in that it conditions international relations on each country's respect for fundamental human rights and freedoms. The 35 signatories agreed to "promote and encourage the effective exercise of civil, political, economic, social, cultural and other rights and freedoms all of which derive from the inherent dignity of the human person and are essential to his free and full development."

Unfortunately, contrary to their pledge, several signatory nations continue to flagrantly violate human rights. In the Soviet Union and many Eastern European countries, respect for the inherent dignity of man remains only an empty promise. Citizens are repressed. Helsinki Watch members are routinely imprisoned and exiled.

Indeed, today 51 members of the Helsinki Watch Group are incarcerated in prisons, labor camps, or psychiatric hospitals, or are serving terms of exile. Three Helsinki Watch members have died after years of mistreatment in Soviet labor camps. Dr. Yury Orlov, the founder of the Moscow Helsinki Watch Group, has been imprisoned for 8 years in a strict-regime, Siberian labor camp. House Joint Resolution 357, which I introduced on July 26, 1985, appeals for the release of Dr. Orlov and other imprisoned Helsinki Final Act monitors.

Yet despite these gross violations by some signatory nations, the Helsinki Final Act is not without value, for it arms the repressed peoples of the world with the most powerful weapon they could possibly have—hope. Hope for worldwide cooperation in their quest for freedom. Hope for a future free from systematic oppression.

Last month, I visited Romania, where I met with church leaders and human rights activists. My experiences with the people there confirm that international agreements to respect human rights offer them a vision for a better future. These agreements, by showcasing international cooperation, encourage citizens to actively promote change. These agreements let the repressed know that they are not alone in the fight for fundamental human rights and freedoms. The Helsinki Act of 10 years ago shines prominently among those international agreements.●

● Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago 35 nations signed an agreement in Helsinki committing themselves to 10 principles to govern their conduct toward each other. These principles covered military security, economic and scientific cooperation, and human rights. All of the signatories solemnly pledged to observe all of these provisions.

Some would have us set aside the portion of the Helsinki agreement concerning human rights especially principle 7 which requires signatory States to abide by the U.N. Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and other international accords providing for the respect of such fundamental human rights as freedom of though, of conscience, and of religion or belief. We are supposed to simply overlook this obligation or else treat it as so much diplomatic rhetoric, nothing more than empty words.

But if the East-West dialog is to have real meaning, if we are to gain any confidence in solemn international pledges in fields ranging from economics to arms control, we cannot ignore principle 7. If we are to remain true to our common humanity, we must not be blind to questions of basic human freedoms.

It is the policy of the United States to observe fully the Helsinki agreement and it must continue to be our policy to do all within our power to see to it that all the signatories of the Helsinki Final Act, including the Soviet Union and its allies, live up to the commitments that they themselves freely entered into in 1975. We expect, and welcome, a full review of our own human rights performance by the other Helsinki signatories. At the same time we claim the legal, and moral, right to review the performance of others.

It is clear that East-European countries, most notably the Soviet Union, continue to be guilty of a wide range of human rights violations that cannot possibly be reconciled with their promises at aHelsinki.

In the Soviet Union, the most severe violations have come in the areas of suppression of political dissidents, censorship, restrictions on travel ane emigration, and denial of freedom of religion. The Soviets continue to hold as many as 10,000 political prisoners, continue to involuntary incarcerate political dissidents in psychiatric institutions, continue to systematically move against any domestic criticism of the Soviet State, continue to subject their own citizens wishing to leave the country to countless obstacles, and continue to harasss those seeking to exercise religious beliefs.

After reaching a record high total of over 51,000 in 1979, Jewish emigration from the U.S.S.R. has been sharply and steadily curtailed, dropping to only 900 in 1984. Unfortunately this discouraging pattern has continued this year. This has been accomplished in part by severe restrictions on eligibility to apply for an exit visa.

When we examine the subject of human rights, we are not talking about mere abstractions. Let us not forget that we are dealing with fellow human beings who are suffering without cause. In the truest sense, we are speaking for them as they have no voice in this matter.

A few years back from Kishinev in the Soviet Union came word of a hunger strike and an urgent appeal to the Madrid Conference:

> We are Soviet citizens of Jewish nationality, who have struggled for many years to leave the Soviet Union and be reunited with our close families in Israel. We have not been able to fulfill our dream . . . We have tried everything, without result. We have beggerd, we have asked, we have inquired and still we are no further in our desire to be united with our families. We have thus decided to exercise the only thing left for us to do and go on a hynger strike which will begin on the opening day of the Madrid conference and which will continue for as long as the Conference lasts. Our purpose is to draw the world's attention to our plight. It is our only possible protect against this shameful denial of elementary human rights which are inscribed in the Helsinki Accords. No matter what happens to us we are counting on your support and we are appealing to your conscience to help us from our bondage.

Shortly after this communication was sent, one of its authors, Vladimir Tsukerman, was arrested for "hooliganism."

When we speak out for the victims of repression, however, we are not doing so only for them. For they are on the cutting edge of freedom. They are fighting battles every day for us to make the world a more humane, a more stable and a more peaceful place.

In closing I would like to echo the words of former Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, when he spoke of American human rights policy:

> We do all this not out of a native idealism and not only because it is right. We do all this because we have domestic and international legal obligations to promote respect for human rights. As signatories of the U.N. Charter and by our own laws, we are required to work for increased observance of human rights by all countries. We also are convinced, in the most hard-headed, practical sense, that emphasis on human rights serves our national interests.

So let none of us forget our obligations to each other as nations or as hyman beings. Let us make the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act a time for renewed commitment not only to security for nations, but security for people. Let us redeem the pledges of 10 years ago to respect human freedom and hyman dignity.●

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

HELSINKI'S 10TH ANNIVERSARY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, as we commemorate the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords, it is worthwhile to call attention to those courageous individuals who, by serving as Helsinki monitors in the Soviet Union, are currently imprisoned or died in prison or died under other circumstances. These individuals' crime against the state amounts to nothing more than their desire to see the fulfillment of human rights obligations by the Soviet Union to the Helsinki agreements.

They belong, or belonged, prior to imprisonment or death, to the Moscow Helsinki Group, the Ukrainian Helsinki Group, and the Lithuanian Helsinki Group.

As the ranking Republican on the House Helsinki Commission, I strongly urge our commission to review the cases of the Helsinki monitors at its Ukrainian Helsinki Group, earliest convenience.

For many of these individuals, the future is extraordinarily dangerous and it is our obligation to seriously and expeditiously consider their plight.

IMPRISONED MEMBERS OF THE HELSINKI MONITORING GROUPS IN THE U.S.S.R. AND LITHUANIA

MOSCOW HELSINKI GROUP—SENTENCED

25. Vasly Stus—Sentenced on October 14, 1980 to 10 years in special regimen camp and five years of internal exile for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda."

DIED IN CAMP

Oleksy Tykhy—Sentenced on July 1, 1977 to 10 years in special regimen camp and five years of internal exile for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda" and illegal possession of firearms. (Died in camp from malnutrition on May 6, 1984).

Yuri Lytvyn—Sentenced in April 1982 to 10 years of special regimen camp plus five years of exile for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda." (In 1979, he got three year term for "resisting a representative of authority.") (Died in camp, probably suicide, in late August 1984).

LITHUANIAN HELSINKI GROUP—DIED

Rev. Bronius Laurinavicius—Killed (by truck) on November 24, 1981 in Vilnius. (On November 21, 1981, was subject of accusatory article in Tiesa, official Lithuanian newspaper).

SENTENCED

26. Viktoras Petkus—Sentenced on July 13, 1978 to three years in prison, seven years in special regimen camp and five years of internal exile for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda." (Petkus also joined the Ukrainian Helsinki Group in 1983).

27. Vytautas Skuodys—Sentenced on December 22, 1980 to seven years strict regimen camp and five years of internal exile for anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda." (U.S. citizen. Also member of the Catholic Committee).

28. Algirdas Statkevicius—Sentenced on August 11, 1980 to forcible psychiatric treatment after being arrested on February 14, 1980, reportedly for "anti-Soviet activities." (U.S. citizen).

GEORGIAN HELSINKI GROUP—SENTENCED

29. Merab Kostava—Sentenced on December 15, 1981 to five years in camp for "resisting a representative of authority." (Before completion of previous term of three years camp and two years exile).

30. Valentina Pailodze—Sentenced on May 25, 1983 to eight years strict regimen camp plus three years exile for "giving bribes" and for "giving false testimony." (In 1978, he got a three year term for "anti-Soviet slander.")

ARMENIAN HELSINKI GROUP—DIED

Eduard Arutunyan—Died of natural causes in late November or early December 1984. Had been arrested on November 5, 1982 and sentenced to three years strict regime camp for "anti-Soviet slander." (Had served previous three-year term on similar charges from 1979-82).●

EQUITABLE TREATMENT WITH RESPECT TO PAY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, tonight I would like to speak a little bit about the subject of fairness in pay, pay equity. Some people call it comparable worth. I do not use that term at all because I think it is absolutely so distorted that it makes no sense to use a term like that.

I prefer to talk about equitable treatment with respect to pay and then get into a little bit about the legislation that I have introduced that will be coming up on the floor this Thursday.

Before I do, I would yield to my friend from Maryland, Mr. HOYER.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Ohio for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the great privilege to serve on the Subcommittee on Compensation and Benefits under the chairmanship of the gentlewoman from Ohio. I might say that on issues of fairness to Federal employees and fairness to individuals in general, there is no stronger leader than the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

I stand with her in support of the legislation which she has forged and worked so diligently on over the years and which this House endorsed so overwhelmingly in years past and I want to congratulate her on the efforts she is making. I believe she has forged a very reasonable, a very responsible piece of legislation looking toward coming out with a study that the Congress will be able to review and make a sound judgment on fair policy toward the women and the men who work in the Federal service.

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the gentlewoman for the outstanding job she has done.

In the past 30 years, 60 percent of the people newly entering the labor force in this country have been women; and it is anticipated that in each year of the next decade 1 million additional women will join them. More than half are women with children under 18.

These official statistics reflect the notion that this so-called flood of women into the marketplace is a relatively recent phenomenon. The truth of the matter is that women have always worked; they just have not always been fairly compensated for their labor.

As far back as 1870, close to 30 percent of the households in Baltimore, MD, relied in some way on female-generated income. By 1900 that number had risen to 40 percent. While the number of women in the compensable labor force has almost doubled in the past 44 years, the reason for this entry has remained the same—economic necessity.

Despite the rapid growth of women in the labor force, they still remain concentrated in certain industries and occupations, earning substantially less than their male counterparts. The majority of working women fill only 20 percent of the 441 occupations listed in the census occupational classification system; 80 percent in four jobs fields—clerical work, service industries, retail sales and factories and plants.

Of the 10 lowest paid occupations, 6 are 90-percent filled by women—84 percent of our health aides are women; 85 percent are nurses aides; 63 percent are cooks; and 13 percent are farm laborers.

In calendar year 1984, the median wage for year-round full-time women workers was $14,997. For full-time men it was $23,718. Using these statistics, it takes women 8 days to earn what men earn in 5—and the Federal Government is no exception, where the average salary in October 1983 for men was $30,229 and for women it was $18,864.

I know that I need not go any further with these statistics, but they are staggering. Women are not marginal workers and can no longer be regarded as a limitless pool of cheap labor.

Occupational segregation is extreme and it is persistent. Within the Federal Government, there is a statistically significant inverse correlation between sex and salary in the general schedule and equivalent grade: 80 percent of the women employed by the Federal Government are concentrated at grades 7 and below, whereas, 85 percent of men are found in grades 10 through 15.

We at the Federal level have an opportunity to do something about this discrimination, and we must begin with the Federal system. We must look at the Federal classification system and make position-to-position comparisons across classification group lines. The Federal Government should be a model for others to follow in our pursuit of pay equity.

As a model, we can best begin by understanding the extent of the problem. There has never been a thorough discrimination study of the Federal civil service. It is time we had one. H.R. 3008 meets this need by mandating a study of the Federal and classification systems to determine whether they are affected by discrimination based on sex, race, or national origin.

Only Federal jobs will be studied and recommendations are limited solely to Federal civil service. This bill does not put into place a national employment-pay equity policy for the country or even the Federal Government. Nor, does this bill presume that any existing wage gap is due to discriminatory practices. It only requires a complete study of our pay and classification system.

Congresswoman OAKAR deserves to be commended for her efforts to secure a fair and reasoned approach to this study. Her bill establishes an 11 member bipartisan commission to oversee this study which will guarantee representation by both Houses of Congress, the President, and the Office of Personnel Management. This commission will hire a consultant to perform an 18-month study, comment on the study, and disband.

In this way, we will be provided with a complete and accurate review of the wage gap which exists between sexes in Federal employment and whether that gap is attributable to such factors as responsibility, effort, qualifications, seniority, education, or other factors exclusive of sex, race, and ethnicity. We can then move forward based on data and not hearsay.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Congresswoman OAKAR for her continued leadership in this field of pay equity. We should know if our Federal civil service is stained with discrimination and should quickly move to be certain that we are in full compliance with our civil rights laws. Equality and fair treatment must continue to be our goals to ensure a fair employment system supported by the high morale and productivity of all employees.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman, and of course when he was a member of the subcommittee, he was one of the absolute finest members. The gentleman is a champion for fairness as well, and human rights. I just heard the gentleman speak about the very important chairmanship that he has, as our leader to the Helsinki accords conference that is being held, and I certainly agree with you on every single word that you have said, Congressman HOYER, because I think so many people suffer from suppression all over the world; and it is especially true in countries that are dominated by the Soviet Union.

So I want to commend the gentleman for his previous remarks and thank him for the courtesy which he has just extended to me.

Mr. Speaker, let me just go into what pay equity is, and go into a little bit about my legislation. First of all, the subject of pay equity is simply the elimination of sex-based wage discrimination or minority-based wage discrimination which we have found in certain areas of our country is the case.

Why are we concerned about what women, for example, are paid? We are concerned for a lot of reasons, not the least of which is something that we ought not to be so proud of in this country, and that is that we have the poorest people in our country being older people and in particular the poorest persons in our country are older women; women over 65 years of age.

Why are they poor? They are poor for a number of reasons. Many of them were not so poor when they were younger. One of the problems is that their insurance program, their Social Security check or their pension is based pretty much on their wages, and if you are paid very poorly and not according to the value of the work that you performed when you are younger, you are really going to be poor when you are older, because we have some problems in terms of pension discrimination and we all know and agree that the Social Security system that was founded in 1936, while it is a wonderful system, has some corrections to be made as it relates to women.

So we are dealing with the subject of what people are paid; fairness issues. This is a national phenomenon. We have 45 States in this country that are in the process, or have conducted a study on how they treat their State employees.

We know, for example, that when a job is dominated, very often—it just happens to be the case, but it can happen to men as well—dominated by women, for example, we know that the work, the job in terms of what it pays is usually very, very poor.

We can take historical examples if we take a look at the worth of educators, which is a female-dominated profession that I, as a former teacher, I wish we could get more men involved in the field, but we cannot because the average starting salary for educators across the country is about $8,500 to $9,000 a year, and we know that a person with a family, it is really difficult to think of maintaining that kind of profession, even though there is nothing more important than the education of our young people.

We know the nurses, for example, spend more time with patients than any other health care provider, and yet that individual, usually a woman but certainly could be a man, is not compensated very often properly.

We know that secretaries, I think, are the absolute classic example, and as Members of Congress, we ought to ask ourselves where we would be if we did not have our secretaries.

Now I heard some of the Members, one in particular, get up on the floor the other day, and I was really kind of aghast. He said, "Well, you know, these secretaries, all they do is spend time in their air-conditioned offices."

I think the secretaries of this country who are very often the core, the catalyst for what kind of work goes on in corporations; the management very often related to the office, the eyes and ears of her boss; ought to be outraged, absolutely outraged with statements like that.

This is the stereotyping that very often goes along with professions that happen to be female dominated. Now we know that many, many States across the country are attempting to correct the manner in which they treated their own State employees.

That is why, as I mentioned earlier, there are 45 States who have or are in the process, including my own State of Ohio, of conducting a study. I am proud of my State of Ohio, for example, because they have in their budget in a bipartisan fashion, set aside some money to correct some of the inequities that exist in terms of how they treat their own State employees.

I am proud of the fact that the National Conference of Governors has endorsed the concept of treating people fairly in terms of their pay. I am proud of the fact that we live in the greatest country in the world, and one of the reasons we do is that we as Americans are not satisfied with the status quo.

When we see something that needs to be corrected, it may take us some time, but we get along with the job of correcting the problem. That is why, in 1920, half the population were finally given the right to vote, with the 19th, or Anthony amendment. It took us a little time to allow women to fully participate in the democratic process, but the fact is, as Americans we were proud that constitutionally we finally did involve women in the democratic process, in 1920.

We are also proud of the fact that in the sixties, we knew there were the problems, and this is why we passed two bills that relate to the subject at hand tonight, although they also relate to other issues.

We passed, in the sixties, the Civil Rights Act, which finally gave people, irrespective of their origin, their gender, their age, and all the other factors that sometimes were held against them, equal access, equal opportunity to the various networks of our wonderful country.

We passed the Equal Pay Act that was so important, because what it said was, and boy you should have heard the arguments in those days when that bill was being debated; but what that act said was that we think people ought to be given the same pay for doing the same work as their male or female counterparts; and we passed that bill, and we are proud of that.

Under title VII of the Civil Rights Act, we believe very strongly that you cannot discriminate against an individual based on in this case, one's gender or race, and that is all we are trying to say.

We are trying to say is that what we ought to be doing with respect to how we classify our Government employees using the Civil Rights Act and the Equal Pay Act and the Fair Standards Labor Act; using those acts that are already the law, taking a look at how we classify our Federal employees.

We do not believe that we want to change the law; we really want to use the law as our own instrument, and we feel that it is high time that we did that.

What is the issue at hand? What has caused the National Chamber of Commerce, which frankly I do not think represents businesses that well, because I know so many corporations have expressed to me their deep concern that they are using as their No. 1 issue, their full lobbying and all the money and power that they apparently have as a national lobbying organization; what are they attacking? They are attacking a bill, my bill, that relates to doing a study on how we classify Federal employees.

They are not making as their major issue the enormous trade deficit that has caused hundreds if not thousands and thousands of our people to lose their jobs; many corporations to fold; small businesses to fold; they are not looking at the enormous deficit that we have in our country which ought to be their priority.

No, they are zeroing in on a study that relates to classified Federal employees.

Well, what about this study? What can I tell the American people about it? The fact of it is, civil service took place in our country with respect to our Federal employees in 1923. We have not looked at how we classify our civil servants, who are classified on a scale from 1 through 18, since the inception of civil service in 1923. We simply have not done it. We think it is high time we take a look at whether or not sex, race, or Hispanic origin are factors in how people are paid. That is all the legislation says, no more, no less.

Does it talk about comparable worth? Absolutely not.

Who would hire the consultant and be responsible for overseeing? The study would be a bipartisan group led by the President of the United States and the majority and minority on both sides of the aisle in both the House and the Senate, along with various organizations like the Office of Personnel Management, that has direct oversight over Federal employees, and others.

So that, pretty much, is what the bill does.

We passed the bill overwhelmingly in the House in the last session by a vote, if I recall, of about 414 to 6. It was truly a bipartisan vote. We had people on both sides of the aisle who were very much supportive, and I am proud to say that in the bill that I reintroduced some time ago, we have more than 105 cosponsors. We are proud of that. Many Members have said to me, "We are delighted that you are not only including the area of gender, but you are including a study on those who are Hispanic in origin and those who are minorities," because we know that those individuals, as well, need to be included in this kind of a study, so we expanded that area.

Mr. Speaker, the issue is, basically, fairness. I mentioned that the National Chamber of Commerce is opposed to it. Let me just review some of the groups who are supportive of the legislation, proud that the congressional caucus for women's issues, which is comprised of Republicans and Democrats, men and women, are supportive of this bill: The Congressional Black Caucus is supportive of this bill, the Congressional Hispanic Caucus is supportive of this bill; the Older Women's League is supportive of this bill; the National Federation of Business and Professional Women; the National Education Association; the American Nurses Association; the League of United Latin American Citizens; the National Political Congress of Black Women; the American Federation of Government Employees; the American Association of University Women; Service Employees International; Federally Employed Women; the League of Women Voters.

I have heard groups or certain Members say that this is radical, and so on. I do not think the League of Women Voters and the Older Women's League and groups like that are in any way radical. What they are talking about, basically, is the issue that it is high time we did a study.

At this time I would be delighted to yield to one of our distinguished Members, my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. MARTINEZ], if he would like to make a statement at this time.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in expressing my support for H.R. 3008, the Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985. This bill requires that a study of the pay and classification systems for Federal employees be conducted to determine whether, or not, or to what extent, sex, race, or ethnicity is used in setting wages.

For the past 20 years the Federal Government has been one of the driving forces behind the advancement of civil rights in this Nation. The Supreme Court took a leading role in 1955 with its decision in Brown versus the Board of Education, which ruled that segregation was unconstitutional. With this landmark decision came a commitment on the part of the Federal Government to protect the rights of all its citizens, regardless of sex, race, or ethnicity. The Pay Equity Act of 1963 and the Civil Rights Act of 1964 are tangible examples of this commitment, and are illustrative of the pivotal role the Federal Government can play in eliminating discrimination from our society.

The Federal Government should not be afraid to examine its hiring practices to determine whether or not discrimination exists. Shunning this social responsibility indicates that the Federal Government is not truly serious in its commitment toward civil rights, I would like to remind my colleagues that the Federal Government is not above the law and should be subject to those very laws it passes to govern the rest of society. The Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985 will merely examine hiring practices, without making any changes or remedies in the system.

As of late, there has been much confusion surrounding the issue of pay equity. Many of my colleagues from the other side of the aisle have mislabled it as "comparable worth," when in reality there is an important distinction between the two. Pay equity means equal pay for equal work. It forbids employers to discriminate on the basis of sex, race, or ethnicity when setting hiring and promoting standards. Although blatant cases of discrimination have become rare, the problem is far from eliminated.

Discrimination has become very sophisticated and is often masked in job titles and job descriptions. Women and men are paid different salaries for alleged job differences that include filing versus folder maintenance. With practices such as these occurring it is clear that the Federal Government cannot and must not relinquish its role in rectifying discrimination.

Comparable worth, on the other hand, goes far beyond the Pay Equity Act of 1963 by stating that all workers, regardless of sex, should receive equal pay for work of comparable worth to an employer. Embedded in this notion is the belief that women have been traditionally discriminated against in the marketplace. Thus, jobs that are predominately held by women are lesser paid for that very reason. Whether you support or oppose the concept of comparable worth, it is important that you make the distinction between it and pay equity. The bill before us today, H.R. 3008, is a pay equity issue. As legislators we must not cloud the issue at hand and, consequently, jeopardize the right of millions of our fellow citizens to receive equitable compensation for their work. I strongly urge my colleagues to refrain from distorting this issue and join with those who support pay equity.

Ms. OAKAR. I thank my colleague, and at this time I would just like to simply say that one of the great joys of having this legislation on the floor in the past has been the number of men who support the legislation. Men care about how their daughters and their mothers and their grandmothers and their sisters are treated. And that is the concept. It is a family issue, how people are treated, and whether or not they are treated fairly. In the 1970's, two Congresswomen, Peggy Heckler, our current HHS Secretary, and LINDY BOGGS, in a bipartisan fashion, had an awful lot to do with passing the Fair Credit Act. And all of the arguments against the Fair Credit Act are the same arguments you hear today: If you are fair to people in terms of taking a look at how you treat them, somehow you are going to upset the marketplace.

As a matter of fact, we put a marketplace study in our legislation to refute that argument, that somehow the sky is going to fall, and so on.

The truth of it is, after all of the scare tactics that are used currently to divert people's attention from the substantive issues, the same concerns and the same kinds of radical notions that were perpetrated on the floor of this House in the 1970's—they said you cannot give women the opportunity to buy their own car in their own name or to buy their own home in their own name or to indeed hold a credit card. The fact of it is, after women were given equal access to credit, guess what the banks found out. They found out that indeed, in general, women are the best credit risks, and it has stimulated the economy and increased the opportunities for women to participate in the economy.

We know from States that have done their studies and implemented their studies, like the State of Minnesota, we know from the testimony that we received, that it did not in any way hurt their economy, it not only stimulated their economy by making some few adjustments on how they treat their employees, it not only did that, but it added to the morale and to the productivity of their workers. Everyone feels a lot better about that situation.

I am pleased to have a number of Members, all male Members, who have asked that I submit their statements for the RECORD tonight, from all sections of the country. I am proud of these men, just as I am proud of all of the Members who have in the past supported this legislation. I think the women of this country, the minorities of this country, will be very grateful if we can pass this simple study this Thursday. It seems to me that what we are talking about, very basically, is fairness. It is that simple. And that is the American dream, to be fair to every single person in our country, and that is why we are the greatest country in the world. We want to continue to be the greatest country in the world, and that is why I think it is high time we took a look at how we classify our Federal workers.

So I want to thank the Speaker and I am deeply grateful to all my colleagues who have been so considerate in this legislation. I would like to include my friends from the other side of the aisle as well.

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS].

Mr. KINDNESS. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

For those of us who do not serve on your committee, there may remain some questions, and one that I would like to understand better is that there does not appear to have been a full-grown study since the origination of the civil service system of the categories of jobs.

Is it the case that there is an ongoing review and annual adjustment or periodic adjustment that does occur or has occurred during that period of time or is it a case of having no real adjustment during that 60 years?

Ms. OAKAR. The problem is that in 1923 you had less than 5 percent of the Federal work force who were classified who happened to be women or minorities. So the stereotyped notion of classifications has not been removed. I could give the gentleman a series of examples. One good example is the fact that in certain categories it is capped and they usually are female-dominated jobs so you could work 40 years for the Federal Government and never have your salary raised by an adjustment that we, in fact, in Congress, occasionally vote ourselves a raise. So they do not have, in many cases, that access.

This is the kind of thing we are talking about. Any reasonable person would want a study done if you have not had a comprehensive one done in 62 years. It is that simple.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KINDNESS. It causes me a little concern that we have had over the years a Civil Service Commission and now an Office of Personnel Management, and there has not been any study and adjustment from time to time, incrementally over the years, that would put us in a reasonable posture today.

Did your committee or subcommittee consider whether there is a need for any basic change in the way that we are handling our civil service categories and job classifications for the future, following on such a study?

Ms. OAKAR. I think that is what we are trying to do. I have been chairing this committee for about 4½ years, and that is one of the real frustrations. That is that when you try to deal with something comprehensive so that the Commission, which is a bipartisan commission, would make recommendations to the Congress, someone or other, very few I might add, uses inciteful tactics that really do not relate to the issue.

I think you should be concerned. I am concerned too. As you know, the system is pretty much overseen by whoever is in charge of the Office of Personnel Management. To me it is not a partisan issue. I am not casting any aspersions on the current Office of Personnel Management Director, whoever that may be.

Mr. KINDNESS. I guess this has been going on for 60 years.

Ms. OAKAR. Yes; that is the point. I think it is high time we took a look at it and let the bipartisan commission make recommendations if they have any. I would not want to presume anything because I think that is the purpose of this study. Just as they did, if I can say to the gentleman, in the city of Los Angeles, Mayor Bradley implemented some adjustments. We know that in the city of Colorado Springs, a very fine Republican mayor implemented some adjustments after looking at how his employees have been classified over the years. We know that corporations have done this. Corporations like AT&T and United States Steel, J. Byron & Son, a department store chain. This an evaluation that most good corporations do every day of the week. We really are a little bit behind the times in terms of taking a look at how we treat our employees relative to this issue.

That is what it is all about and no more or no less. I happen to feel very strongly that we should not pit men against women in this issue because that is not it at all. In fact, the study would recommend that we, and I put in the legislation purposely that we do not recommend changing a person's salary in terms of lowering it because that would be against the law if there were not proper need to do so.

We want this to be fair and objective and hopefully, the gentleman and many others on his side as they did last Congress in support of the legislation. Let us take a look at how we relate to this classified system.

Mr. KINDNESS. I thank the gentlewoman for the response to that question, but I am left with a bit of concern about whether the Office of Personnel Management ought to be changed somehow structurally for the future so that we do not find ourselves in the same situation a few years down the road, and would certainly hope that the committee might pursue that.

Ms. OAKAR. There have been several studies but never one really dealing with the comprehensive issues at hand. That is what we are after, and we want it to be cooperative, and we do not want it to be hysterical or confrontional or erratic in terms of various arguments.

You know, I find that the same people who oppose Social Security oppose this legislation. The same people who oppose fair credit to women oppose this legislation. It is an interesting phenomenon over the years that have gone by, and I do not think the issue is really fair credit or Social Security. I think it really is should we do a study on how we classify Federal employees that are part of the civil service classification system. We have not really taken a look at this since 1923.

I want to thank the Speaker for his indulgence, and I certainly hope that we will not distort the issue; that we will simply tell the truth about what the issue is. That is what it is all about.

● Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a cosponsor of H.R. 3008, Congresswoman OAKAR's bill which would mandate a study to examine Federal wage classifications.

Unfortunately, this study has been wildly distorted and portrayed as a potential threat to free enterprise, and as the vehicle for implementing comparable worth in the private sector. This simple piece of legislation is under attack by those who seem to have a hysterical fear of a study of Federal pay systems. Why this hysteria?

Let's take a look at exactly what this legislation proposes to do. The Federal Government, the largest employer in the United States, has not examined its wage classification system since its inception in 1923—over 62 years ago. Surely no business would or should conduct their operations in this manner.

The bill introduced by Congresswoman OAKAR simply and succinctly mandates an examination of the Federal Government's wage practices. Perhaps the study will determine that gender and race issues have invoked discriminatory policies. Perhaps not. But should we fear finding out the truth—nothing more, nothing less—by supporting the mandate of this study? The Post Office and Civil Service Committee's Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits, the expert subcommittee of jurisdiction, did not allow such a fear to prevent its endorsement of the study. The full committee has also shown bipartisan approval of H.R. 3008. We should all be happy and proud to do the same. Let's support H.R. 3008 when it comes before the full House for a vote.●

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the House will consider H.R. 3008, the Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985. All but six of my colleagues supported similar legislation introduced by my colleague and friend from Ohio, Congresswoman OAKAR last year. I would like to urge my 412 colleagues who voted for a study of Federal pay practices last year to join me in saluting the gentlelady from Ohio for her leadership on one of the most important issues this Congress will address.

Having done that, I am sure my colleagues will once again reaffirm that factors of sex, race, and ethnic background have no place in the determination of how Federal employees are paid. As the Nation's largest employer, the Federal Government must abide by the requirements of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and section 6(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. To do less, in my opinion, would be to endorse the hear no evil, see no evil approach to enforcement of our equal employment opportunity laws that threaten to undermine our commitment to economic justice.

Principles of economic justice extend to those who serve the public and enforce our Nation's laws.

A SOUND APPROACH TO A SOUND STUDY

H.R. 3008 establishes a bipartisan Commission that includes Presidential and congressional appointees and the Comptroller General and the Director of the Office of Personnel Management. This group in turn selects a qualified consultant to conduct a two-part study. The first part of the study examines the job-factors of male and female dominated jobs in order to isolate the factors that appear to make the most difference. The second part of the study, an economic analysis, examines the three major economic factors that determine pay.

This approach adopts the recommendations of the General Accounting Office [GAO], in its report "Options for Conducting a Pay Equity Study of Federal Pay and Classification Systems," March 1, 1985. I believe that Members who have reservations about the study proposed in H.R. 3008 ought to read this report carefully. It addresses just about all the questions and criticisms that have been raised about and leveled at this legislation.

My colleagues who attribute the fact that federally employed women earn $0.63 for every dollar earned by federally employed men to such "facts" as: One, women voluntarily select lower paying job categories because they derive nonmonetary satisfaction from such choices; two, married women have work histories that are shorter and less consistent than men; three, the supply of women for certain occupations exceeds demand and drives wages down; and four, women have a greater tendency to take dead-end jobs or similar temporary employment—ought to read this report and understand that all of these factors are going to be examined and taken into account.

The study is going to look at some factors that I disagree with and that my colleagues disagree with, but it's going to be comprehensive, thorough, objective, and statistically accurate. We are going to have the facts to explain why the average woman who works for the Federal Government earns $12,000 less than the average man.

JOB CONTENT ANALYSIS

Three-fourths of all major employers in both the public and private sector set wages by using some type of job content analysis. The most typical kind of job content analysis is the point-factor rating method which breaks a job down into its various components and subcomponents and assigns points to these factors based upon the value of each element to the employer. Factors include education, training, skill, experience, and relative convenience of working conditions.

For example, a Federal classifier may assign 100 points to a general skill, and add between 0 and 50 points for a particular technical skill, assign 0 to 30 points for managerial skills, and additional points for human relations skills the job requires. The analysis yields a total point value for a job that can be compared against another job.

The National Academy of Sciences reports that job evaluations "do provide a systematic method of comparing jobs to determine whether they are fairly compensated" and confirms that pay studies have served to reduce discriminatory differences in pay. So much for the theory that dissimilar jobs cannot be compared. Employers have compared dissimilar jobs for years.

The purpose of the job content study, then, will be to help isolate factors used in rating job content that are clearly gender related.

ECONOMIC ANALYSIS

Opponents of H.R. 3008 have charged that the legislation intends to isolate gender related factors and attribute the entire wage gap in Federal service to such factors. The economic analysis required by H.R. 3008 utterly refutes this contention.

The study would examine the three major factors that contribute to setting pay: First, the "human capital" an individual brings the job—his or her skills, experience, institutional memory, willingness to work certain hours and in a certain location, that is the sum of what the employee offers that an employer can use. Previous studies have demonstrated that human capital accounts for over 40 percent of the gap in wages between men and women; second, the relationship between occupational characteristics and wages. Whereas the job-factor study will isolate gender based characteristics, this part of the economic analysis will examine why men and women tend to dominate certain occupations. This analysis attempts to distinguish discriminatory from nondiscriminatory factors that go into this process of gender-based selection, factors including personal choice, oversupply, lack of access, and prejudice; third, the "institutional" elements of wage determination including the effects of supply and demand on pay. We know that supply and demand operate imperfectly in labor markets. For example, entry level jobs are far more influenced by supply and demand than positions an organization fills from within its own ranks.

Promotional systems, including how employee performance is evaluated, will also be examined to determine whether agencies have established male or nonminority dominated career ladders.

FISCALLY RESPONSIBLE REMEDIES

With all the factors that go into setting Federal pay before us, the Commission will recommend remedies to discrimination where it is found to exist. The Congress can then take action similar to that taken in States and localities that have completed studies of equitable pay practices. Working with employee representatives and other interested parties, fiscally constrained jurisdictions have developed long-term phased-in remedies that balanced taxpayers interests against the need to bring discrimination to an end.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to confirm what we did last year when we took an important step toward economic justice. I might add that this step, when taken by both public and private employers, has generated a spirit of liberation, good will, and cooperation that has enhanced productivity and served the employer well.●

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my friend from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] for calling this special order on the critical issue of pay equity and commend her for the outstanding work she has done in this area.

A number of my colleagues have devoted an extraordinary amount of time and effort to state their opposition to H.R. 3008, the Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985. There has been implications of exorbitant costs, an over-turned marketplace, and a disastrous system of wage setting reaching far beyond the Federal Government into the private sector. This sort of over-reaction and exaggeration serves to make clear that these colleagues of mine have not spent a great deal of time familiarizing themselves with the exact provisions of H.R. 3008.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3008 does not give Congress the power to set the wages of employees in the private sector nor does it establish any sort of mandate for a national system of wage setting. What this reasonable and necessary legislation does do is simply call for a study of the Federal wage and classification system for evidence of discrimination based on sex, race, and ethnicity.

The Federal Government is the largest single employer in our Nation. Yet, in the more than 60 years that it has been established, the Federal job classification system has never been thoroughly studied for evidence of discrimination. As legislators, we have an obligation to battle discrimination wherever it may exist. What better place to begin than in our own front yard.

The Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985 will provide us with one valuable element—information. Based on the information the study provides, we can begin to make certain our own Government workers are free from job bias. The elimination of discriminatory practices at the worksite is a goal every employee and employer should strive to attain. Pay equity legislation such as H.R. 3008 brings us one step closer to achieving this goal and creating a more just society for ourselves, our children, and our grandchildren.●

● Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in this special order to offer my support for H.R. 3008, the Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985.

I wholeheartedly support the concept of pay equity and believe that individuals performing jobs involving similar types of training and responsibility should receive the same pay. The Federal Government, as the single largest employer in the United States should set an example in promoting equitable pay practices.

The American taxpayers have invested millions of dollars over the years in the Federal Government's job classification systems to ensure uniformity and accuracy. Yet, for as long as we have been developing these pay-setting systems, we have never done a review of them to determine their impact on women, minorities and ethnic groups. We have never tried to explain, for example, why the average pay for women who work for the Federal Government is $18,864, nearly $12,000 less than the average for men, $30,229.

I believe we also need to explain why women are clustered in the lower Federal ranking grades. The General Accounting Office reports that in 658 of 885 Federal job classifications, men hold 70 percent of the jobs. Women dominate just 77 job classifications—all at the lower end of the pay scale. H.R. 3008 says that Congress, as the Board of Directors of the Federal service, cannot simply shrug off these facts, but must join 34 State governments that have accepted their responsibility to answer similar questions.

H.R. 3008 would require the establishment of a bipartisan Commission of Presidential and congressional appointees that includes the Director of the Office of Personnel Management and the Comptroller General of the United States. It requires the Commission to select a qualified consultant to complete a two-part Federal pay equity study.

Please join me in supporting this measure and the concept of pay equity. As the distinguished chair of our Compensation and Benefits Subcommittee has been telling us all along, this study breaks no radical new ground. It simply puts us on ground already broken by most of the States. It does not rely on blue smoke and mirrors to engineer unwarranted and exorbitant pay increases for women, it simply requires the use of established statistical methods to examine the factors that contribute to the wage gap and to review the Federal Government's method of determining how job factors influence pay. It serves our right to know if the Federal Government's pay policies conform with title VII of the Civil Rights Act and with section 6(d) of the Federal Labor Standards Act.

I urge my colleagues to join ranks once again to take an important step on behalf of all Americans.●

● Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to voice my strong support for Congresswoman OAKAR'S Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act. As an original cosponsor of this legislation, I am proud to be part of this bipartisan congressional effort to continue this country's long tradition of eradicating discrimination of any kind in the workplace.

In considering this bill, I would like to remind my colleagues that it is not the radical measure which some of its opponents would have us believe. Rather, H.R. 3008 represents a recognition of the fact that women working in the Federal Government still earn far less than their colleagues and seem to be represented disproportionately in the lowest-paying jobs.

While many people assert that male/female wage discrepancies are due to historic tendencies to undervalue female labor, H.R. 3008 makes no such assumption. It tries, instead, to understand the reasons behind these discrepancies and to determine whether the Federal Government's official method of pay and job classification is in keeping with the Government's own statutes prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex, race, and ethnicity.

In its evaluation, a professional consultant will take into account both job content and economic factors which interact to affect a particular job's level of pay. Job content and economic analysis were recommended in the General Accounting Office's report on methodologies for conducting pay equity studies. The economic analysis, in particular, should allay the concerns of those who feel that market forces be taken into account in evaluating pay and classification scales.

Finally Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3008 will not mandate salary levels either in the Federal Government or the private sector. It will merely provide the Federal Government with the knowledge it needs to eliminate wage differentials stemming from discrimination. Additionally, it will bring the Federal Government into the forefront of efforts to root out the last vestiges of workplace discrimination.

I urge my colleagues to support this most important piece of legislation.●

● Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my support for H.R. 3008, the Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985. As an original cosponsor of what I believe is an improved bill over that passed by the House of Representatives last year, that now includes not only a study of Federal pay practices for women, but for blacks and Hispanics as well, I am urging my colleagues to offer their full support when this measure is considered.

There are those who question the need for examining the classification and payment practices of the Federal Government. There are those who attribute discrepancies between what men are paid and what women are paid to attitide differences between the sexes on work and achievement. And, there are those who contend that the predominance of blacks and Hispanics in lower paying positions is related only to qualifications.

But for myself and many others, however, these opinions are not sufficient. We need to know why these differences still exist.

Given the fact that 80 percent of all women employed by the Federal Government are concentrated in the lowerst paying positions, and that 85 percent of all men are concentrated in the highest paying positions, is an opinion really enough? Do we simply accept the fact that all three of these groups are overwhelmingly clustered in lower grade positions?

As those responsible for shaping this Nation's policies, how can we ignore these facts without questioning if, perhaps, the Federal Government classification and payment practices are discriminatory. I do not think that we can in good conscience.

That is why I believe that an objective study of the Federal wage and classification system is needed. Our society has changed dramatically since the classification system was established in 1923, and yet this system has not been reviewed since that time. H.R. 3008 would mandate a study using job content and economic analysis of Federal positions which are held by men, women, and minorities predominantly. It would also establish a bipartisan Commission to hire an independent consultant to carry out this study. It does not give the Congress the power to set wages, nor does it put into place a national employment or pay policy.

The Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985 can help provide us with vital information that we need to effectively address issues of equal opportunity now and in the future. It can provide us with an objective measure of our progress. And, it displays a commitment from this Congress that we will continue to work toward a democratic society that encourages all of its citizens to achieve their full potential.●

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, this week we will be voting on H.R. 3008, the Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act. I urge my colleagues to vote for this bill to ensure that our civil service wage and classification systems are free of bias.

H.R. 3008 would commission a study of the Federal pay and classification systems to determine if they are affected by discrimination based on sex, race, and ethnicity—Hispanic. It would empanel a bipartisan commission to choose an independent consultant to perform the study. The study would consider all compensable factors—including job content and market factors—to determine whether any wage differentials identified may be due to discrimination. The bill does not presume that any existing wage gap is due to discriminatory practices.

I would like to share with my colleagues this Washington Post article describing the experience of the city of Colorado Springs, which has committed itself to end sex-based wage discrimination for its city employees. As Mayor Robert Isaac said: "We did something fair and just, and in return we got ourselves great employee morale, lower turnover and higher productivity. Isn't that what the private sector's always looking for?"

[From the Washington Post, Mar. 25, 1985]

CITY NEAR PEAK NO PIKER ON PAY

(By T.R. Reid)

COLORADO SPRINGS.—Can a staunchly conservative, heavily Republican nonunion city government find happiness with a bold new policy championed mainly by organized labor and feminists?

"You're darn right we're happy with comparable worth," says Robert Isaac, the loyal Reaganite who is mayor of this thriving city of 250,000 at the foot of Pike's Peak.

"Some of my Republican friends back in Washington have been pretty tough on this idea," says Isaac, immediate past president of the Republican Mayors' Conference. "But I tell them, if they'd try it, they'd like it."

Some government officials and business leaders back in Washington have indeed had harsh words for the concept of "comparable worth"—the idea that women working in traditionally female jobs should get the same pay as men in different jobs requiring comparable skill and responsibility.

Former White House economic adviser William A. Niskanen Jr. has called comparable worth "a truly crazy proposal." Clarence M. Pendleton Jr., head of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, said the concept is "the looniest idea since Looney Tunes."

"Yeah, I heard that," says Isaac with a shake of the head. "We wouldn't call it loony here in Colorado Springs.

"But what we had before—where a secretary is doing a job that's just as hard and just as important as a truck mechanic, and she's getting $300 [a month] less—now, that was loony. It's just basically unfair."

The liberal notion of comparable worth hit this conservative city four years ago. A group of 36 City Hall secretaries, all women, went before the City Council to complain that city auto mechanics, all men, were scheduled to get a much higher raise than they were.

"I was sitting at that meeting and—boom! There was the issue," recalls Richard Zickefoose, the city's personnel director. "We didn't expect it to come up, but all of a sudden we were faced with comparable worth."

Zickefoose knew that the federal Equal Pay Act requires equal pay for the same work, regardless of the worker's gender. But the law does not apply to workers doing different jobs, no matter how "comparable" the jobs may be.

As the second-largest employer in town (the federal government is No. 1 in this military city), the city government was under minimal competitive pressure to take on the problem, and there was no public employes' union here to force the issue.

But as Zickefoose and Isaac looked into the secretaries' complaint, they came to agree that the city had no choice but to set up a comparable-worth pay scale.

"It was fundamentally a moral issue," Zickefoose says. "Sure, supply and demand would have provided us a clerical force at the lower salaries. But that market fact was a result of years of discrimination against women workers. We felt we had no right to take advantage of it."

That settled, Colorado Springs faced the problem that many critics of comparable worth consider insoluble: figuring out which jobs done mainly by women are comparable to different jobs done mainly by men.

"The question is, 'Is a secretary's job the same as a tire repairman's? Is a payroll clerk comparable to a tree trimmer?' And, sure, that's a tough question," Zickefoose says.

Colorado Springs drew its answers from the "Hay Guide-Chart Profile" devised by the Philadelphia consultants Hay & Associates. It assigns points to each job in four areas: know-how (the knowledge and skills required); problem-solving (the ingenuity required); accountability (the degree of supervision required) and working conditions (the degree of danger present).

This "Hay Scale" showed, for example, that the jobs performed by a secretarial supervisor and a probation counselor each totaled 208 points. In 1980, though, the traditionally male probation job paid $1,709 a month, while the female supervisor received $1,389. The women earned 23 percent less for "comparable" work.

In 1981, the city committed itself to eliminating almost all of that gap in four years. The comparable-worth scheme took full effect in January. Today, the secretarial supervior's pay is within 4 percent of the probation officer's.

The change brought considerable raises for about 500 female employes and increased the $90 million city payroll by about 2 percent—a relatively small burden for this fastgrowing, prosperous metropolis.

For this price the city earned deep appreciation from its female workers. "Morale is sky high," says Betty J. Ketterson, secretary to the public works director and one of the original 36 petitioners. "And when I need to hire somebody, our applicants are the pick of the crop."

But the government has earned the enmity of the local Chamber of Commerce and many businesses. They say the city bought a liberal bill of goods, flouted the free market and raised the pay scale for clerical workers here to astronomical levels.

Mayor Isaac, a real estate lawyer in private life, says the Chamber of Commerce should stop carping.

"We did something fair and just, and in return we got ourselves great employe morale, lower turnover the higher productivity," Isaac says. "Isn't that what the private sector's always looking for?"●

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, our esteemed colleague MARY ROSE OAKAR recently introduced legislation which would establish a bipartisan commission to study the executive branch wage and classification systems for sex, race, and ethnically based wage bias. Today, I would like to applaud Representative OAKAR's strides in bringing the struggle for civil rights into the 1980's and urge my colleagues to lend their support to this innovative piece of legislation.

In 1963, Congress passed the Equal Pay Act. In 1964, the Civil Rights Act. Yet, 20 years later, we are still trying to ensure equal pay for equal work among employed persons in this country without regard to sex, race, national origin, or religion. Is this such a difficult concept to accept?

Some people would have us believe that pay discrimination and any other inequities should best be left to market forces. Those same people would also have us believe that women in America are paid 64 cents on the dollar because they desire to work in jobs that are traditionally compensated for less than their male counterparts. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Representative OAKAR's bill would examine to what extent wage gaps exist between male and female workers. An economic analysis of pay differentials could provide the Congress with factors such as educational level, experience, and occupational differentials by sex in the Federal Government. Such information could be used to identify any unexplained cases of wage differentials.

Mr. Speaker, I find it hard to believe that my colleagues are opposed to a bill which would require a scientific, objective study to gauge the effectiveness of our attempts to eliminate wage discrimination. The criticisms that have come to light concerning this issue only serve to further cloud the simple intent of this legislation: to conduct a study that would determine where wage differentials exist. Are they afraid of finding out the truth? H.R. 3008 would not make "comparable worth" a nationwide regulation. It would merely determine what kinds of pay differentials exist within the Nation's largest employer, the Federal Government.

I strongly urge my colleagues to take rational, well-reasoned action on H.R. 3008. We should not have to wait another 20 years before taking the next step in the fight for civil rights.●

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague from the State of Ohio, Congresswoman MARY ROSE OAKAR, for reserving this special order to discuss H.R. 3008, the Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985. Tomorrow, the House will vote on this legislation. I urge my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, to vote in favor of H.R. 3008.

H.R. 3008, introduced by Congresswoman OAKAR, calls for a long overdue review of the Federal pay and classification systems to determine whether discrimination based upon sex, race, or ethnicity exists. The Federal classification system has never been reviewed since its establishment in 1923—62 years ago.

The House of Representatives cannot afford to delay this review process any longer. As the single largest employer in the Nation, the Federal Government should be a model for equal employment opportunities compliance with Federal laws. H.R. 3008 attempts to move the Federal Government to that point.

Last year, the House and Senate agreed to a GAO study on this same issue. Preliminary figures compiled by the Government Accounting Office as an outcome of this report indicate that there is still much to be done to ensure equitable pay for all Federal employees. The GAO study concluded that a more indepth review by the Congress is warranted.

At this time, I would like to share some of the findings of that GAO report with my colleagues. GAO auditors reported that the average earnings gap between men and women working for the Federal Government is $9,000 per year. The report also notes that federally employed women earn an average of 62.8 cents for every dollar earned by their male counterparts. GAO found that black women fared worse with their average earnings being 62.2 cents for every dollar earned by men.

Furthermore, even though women comprise almost one-half of the Federal work force, approximately 78 percent of the female employees are clustered in the lower paying slots—grades 1 through 6. Eighty-five percent of the men employed by the Federal Government are concentrated in grades 10 through 15.

Mr. Speaker, these startling GAO figures should be enough incentive for the Congress to pass H.R. 3008. The 18-month study mandated by H.R. 3008, will give us a conclusive indication if certain Federal employees are victims of discrimination. By conducting this study, the Congress will reaffirm its commitment to the law of the land, which states that sex, race, and ethnicity are not factors that may be used to determine the rate of pay for any individual or for any position.

In closing Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleague, Congresswoman OAKAR for her diligence in pursuing the issue of pay equity. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this legislation.●

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order tonight.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. CAROLYNE DAVIS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment a distinguished Federal employee in the employment of the President who is retiring. I want to take a few minutes to compliment a very distinguished public servant who is here tonight, Dr. Carolyne Davis. She is retiring after 4½ years.

Dr. Davis has spent 4½ years as the leader and the Administrator for the Health Care Financing System in America, principally on Medicare and Medicaid which now exceeds a budget of over $100 billion. I understand, if my figures are correct, that it is in the top five nations of the world as far as large budgets and responsibility of administration of critical health programs that have been directed by Congress and have undergone substantial reform in recent years.

She has been given credit for being at the helm of that ship under the direction, obviously, of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Peggy Heckler.

Tonight I just wanted to indicate my personal remarks about knowing her, as a Congressman from the Second Congressional District in Michigan, in which is held one of the largest world-class institutions, the University of Michigan, of which Dr. Davis was formerly a vice president and dean of nursing.

Since her appointment to the directorship and administration of our health programs here in America, coming from the University of Michigan, she has brought with her credentials of outstanding capability in the area of finance and budget reform, public policy changes in health, and also her extensive background in nursing as a former dean of nursing at the University of Michigan and her ties with the national nursing associations and Johns Hopkins University.

I believe it is very unusual that we have outstanding women who are in the field of developing public policy in the Federal Government at this high level. I personally think of her opportunities not only as an administrator but a potential in the years to come possibly at the Secretary level in the health field or some similar field related to developing good public policy for this Nation. It is very unique to find people of talent and budget skills and in development of legislation who have the tenacity and the long determination to offer testimony before many hundreds of congressional committees both in the House and in the Senate.

So it is with great pleasure on behalf of myself and my colleagues in the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States to congratulate her for a job extremely well done, with future potential in years when she will return to public service for this great Nation.

Several Members have offered statements, Congressman JAMES BROYHILL, a letter from Margaret Heckler personally, a statement from Congressman BILL BROOMFIELD, a statement from Congressman GEORGE O'BRIEN of Illinois, a statement from BILL GRADISON of Ohio, a statement from HELEN BENTLEY of Maryland, and statements from RAY MCGRATH of New York, MATTHEW J. RINALDO of New Jersey, GEORGE C. WORTLEY of New York, CLAUDE PEPPER of Florida, and DAVID E. BONIOR of Michigan.

Dr. Davis is an outstanding American. We were proud to have her with us. We are sorry that she is leaving the office of the Secretary of Health and Human Services as the Health Administrator. Her opportunities in the private sector are great and I am sure that she will make a great contribution to whatever endeavor she looks at in the future in her professional career. I have been proud to have her serve this Nation.

Mr. ARMEY. If the gentleman will yield, let me take just a moment to express to the gentleman for his thoughtfulness to come down to the floor this evening at this late hour and to bring this to our attention. I appreciate the gentleman's concern and his commitment.

Mr. PURSELL. I thank the gentleman.

I know on behalf of Congressmen BOB MICHEL, and TRENT LOTT, BILL NATCHER, chairman of our HEW Subcommittee on Appropriations, and others, particularly in the House of Representatives, she has had a great forum here and they really appreciated her testimony, her credibility and her leadership and we are forever grateful for that effort on her part as one of the great leaders of this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I include in the RECORD at this point a letter concerning Dr. Davis from Margaret Heckler, the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES,
Washington, DC.

To my former colleagues in the Congress:

Today it is my great privilege to extend my heartfelt thanks and best wishes to Dr. Carolyne K. Davis, who soon will be leaving the Department of Health and Human Services after a distinguished four-and-one-half year "tour of duty" as Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration.

Dr. Davis' sustained leadership has enabled our Department to inaugurate the most significant reforms in the 20-year history of government health care financing. She has been President Reagan's staunch ally in maintaining high quality health care for America's elderly, poor, disabled and others in need, while improving the cost-efficiency of health care delivery.

Today, the estimated 50 million Americans served by the programs Dr. Davis had administered since 1981 can rejoice in the realization that these programs are better managed and more quality-conscious than ever before.

During her tenure at the Department of Health and Human Services, Dr. Davis has earned the admiration and respect of all of us who have worked with her. Her testimony "on the Hill" has been forthright, lucid and informative. She has kept the communication lines open between our Department and health care providers and consumers. She has been a constant source of knowledge and support to me; her counsel has been sound and thoughtful.

With a profound sense of gratitude and with all sincerity, I ask you to join with me today in thanking Dr. Davis for a job well done and in wishing her the very best and brighest future possible.

Thank you, Carolyne!

Sincerely,

MARGARET M. HECKLER,
Secretary.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I also include in the RECORD the biography of Dr. Carolyne Davis.

The biography is as follows:

CAROLYNE KAHLE DAVIS, ADMINISTRATOR, HEALTH CARE FINANCING ADMINISTRATION, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

EDUCATION

Ph.D., Higher Education Administration, Syracuse University, Syracuse, New York, 1972.

Master of Science, Nursing Education, Syracuse University, Syracuse, New York, 1965.

Bachelor of Science, Nursing, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland, 1954.

Liberal Arts Studies, Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania, 1949 to 1951

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

Administrator, Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), March 1981 to present

Major Responsibilities

Management of the Medicare and Medicaid health care insurance programs which provide for the health care needs of 50 million Americans who are elderly, disabled or poor. Development and implementation of detailed operative guidelines on reimbursement, eligibility and coverage, and management of the agency's budget which for FY 1985 was $99 billion, amounting to 10% of the total Federal budget and 29% of all health care expenditures in this country.

Administration of a $35 million research and demonstration budget focusing on long range policy development.

Supervision of 4,100 agency staff and 60,000 regional and State fiscal intermediary staff who coordinate HCFA programs at the State level.

Response to Congressional and other governmental agency requests for information, research studies, and testimony concerning HCFA programs.

Communication with provider and health industry groups, the media, and consumer groups regarding HCFA policies and directions for health care cost containment.

Specific Accomplishments

Reduced Medicare and Medicaid spending increases and improved agency efficiency through the successful efforts listed below:

Prospective Payment System (PPS): Implemented PPS using Diagnostic Related Groups (DRGs) as a new method for paying for hospital care under Medicare. Implemented in five months after passage of 1983 Social Security Act.

Medicaid State Flexibility Waiver Program: Implemented waiver program for States in 1981 (i.e., Home and Community-based; Freedom of Choice).

End Stage Renal Disease Program (ESRD): Implemented prospective payment rates.

Peer Review Organizations (PRO): Implemented new program assuring necessity, appropriateness and quality of care for Medicare beneficiaries.

Health Maintenance Organizations (HMO): Expanded access by implementing new provisions under Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA).

Hospices: Developed regulations and certified 110 hospices for participation in the Medicare program.

Early and Periodic Screening Diagnostic Treatment (EPSDT): Developed proposed regulations to eliminate burdensome requirements which impede health screenings and following-up care to children under Medicaid.

Intermediate Care Facilities for Mentally Retarded (ICF/MR): Reformed Federal surveys of large public ICF/MRs and required corrections of such standard conditions.

Common Billing (UB-82): Established a common billing term form for Medicare hospitals and another for physicians for all third party payors.

Medicare Physician Fee Freeze: Implemented legislation within three months after passage.

Participating Physicians and Physician Assignment Rate Lists (PARL): Expanded beneficiary information of suppliers and physicians who accept assignment.

Common Procedure Coding (CPT-4): Implemented common procedure coding for Part B billing under Medicare.

Third Party Liability (TPL): Reduced Medicaid costs through joint project with the Social Security Administration for improved collection of information on Supplemental Security Income (SSI) recipients.

Admission Pattern Monitoring (APM): Established a system to assure that only patients who need hospitalization are admitted.

Ambulatory Surgical Centers: Developed rules for coverage and reimbursement of ambulatory facilities as a cost-effective alternative to inpatient hospital services.

Medicare Contractor Performance: Improved peformance through enhanced audit and medical review criteria; more stringent performance standards; workload consolidation; and intensified overpayment collection and prevention procedures.

Improved Audits: Achieved reduction of $2.1 billion in reported costs by completing audits of PPS base period used for setting hospital rates.

Parenteral and Enteral: Simplified administration by designating two contractors and setting national instructions and pricing guidelines for these supplies.

Paper Reduction: Reduced paperwork burden on public by more than 25 percent.

Publications Cost Reduction: Reduced publication costs by 67 percent without affecting any beneficiary publications.

Reduced Agency Travel: Reduced agency travel by $500,000 (net) by expanding audio/video teleconferencing.

Centralized Freedom of Information Act (FOIA): Centralized FOIA activities, increasing workload from 2,000 to 30,000 yearly requests without increasing staffing.

New International Activities Program: Began International Health Briefings program in 1983 in coordination with State Department briefing over 30 nations and their representatives.

Technical Assistance to States: Began program helping States implement DRG type prospective payment systems for Medicaid programs.

Improved Ageny Productivity: Reorganized the agency, iproved HCFA productivity by raising work levels 30%, and improved timeliness in agency review and response to State Medicaid waivers.

Associate vice president for academic affairs (Inter Collegiate and Intra College Programs), the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan, May 1975 to March 1981

Major Responsibilities and Accomplishments

● Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, at a hearing before the Select Committee on Aging this morning, Dr. Carolyne K. Davis delivered her final testimony in a long and distinguished career as Health Care Financing Administrator.

In her own words, Dr. Davis has been the "caretaker of Medicare and Medicaid over the past 4½ years.

What Dr. Davis modestly declines to add, is that she has had the longest tenure of any Health Care Financing Administrator since the agency was founded.

I first became acquainted with Dr. Davis and her impressive command of health policy when she testified many years ago at a Health and the Environment Subcommittee hearing on the Nurse Training Act. Subcommittee members were quickly impressed with the abilities of the nurse from Michigan, and over the years we looked to her time and time again for well thought out and reasoned testimony on health issues.

The President also recognized those outstanding qualities, and in February 1981 Dr. Davis was appointed Health Care Financing Administrator.

The position of Health Care Financing Administrator is not to be taken lightly. Surely it must outrank even the heads of the largest corporations in duties and responsibilities.

As the head of HCFA, Dr. Davis commands over 4,000 agency staff and scores of regional and fiscal intermediary staff. Fifty million citizens count on her to get their benefits—and I might add these citizens are among the country's most elderly, disabled, and poor.

In the coming fiscal year, the Health Care Financing Administration expects to spend almost $100 billion in benefit payments. Its research budget will be $22 million. Imagine the machinery to run an organization that large.

Imagine the grasp of policy to run programs as diverse as end stage renal disease and Medicaid State flexibility waivers.

And imagine trying to run an agency that large, with so many programmatic responsibilities, during such an important period in the reform of health policy.

It is without question that Dr. Davis' stewardship of HCFA was the linchpin upon which the Medicare reimbursement reforms, the prospective payment system, were formulated and implemented. Under the steady management and capable command, this radical change in Medicare reimbursement has been implemented successfully, injecting a long-needed measure of competition into the health care marketplace. And under Dr. Davis' supervision, the law mandating this new PPS system was implemented in only 5 months.

By her own estimation, Dr. Davis has testified before the Congress almost 70 times. The majority of those were as Health Care Financing Administrator.

It is seldom that the Congress has an opportunity to benefit from the viewpoint of one who is so capable, confident, or persistent. Dr. Davis has run HCFA tirelessly for 4½ years, and has done a superb job. I join with my colleagues today, on the 20th anniversary of Medicare and Medicaid, in thanking Dr. Davis for her selfless efforts and for wishing her well in her future endeavors.

With her past record, I am certain Dr. Davis will continue on the path of success—and I know the Energy and Commerce Committee will continue to count on her for cogent, compelling, and now seasoned testimony.●

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, on the 20th anniversary of Medicaid and Medicare, it is especially appropriate that we should recognize the achievements of the retiring head of the Health Care Finance Administration, Dr. Carolyne K. Davis.

Dr. Davis manages a $99 billion budget, which accounts for 10 percent of the total Federal budget and 29 percent of the Nation's health care expenditures.

More importantly, Dr. Davis's performance has been in every way commensurate with her responsibilities. When Dr. Davis took office in 1981, the Medicare trust fund faced the prospect of bankruptcy by 1986; Dr. Davis, however, has significantly prolonged the life of the fund.

Dr. Davis has overseen a thoroughgoing reform of her agency. She has implemented the prospective payment system, an innovative approach to cutting health care costs. She has also reshaped peer review organizations, expanded access to health maintenance organizations, and accomplished myriad other reforms which have produced a more efficient and cost-effective agency.

Dr. Davis has arguably managed to improve the Nation's health care while simultaneously cutting costs.

Mr. Speaker, as the senior member of the Michigan Republican congressional delegation, I am particularly proud of the role I played in helping my colleague Congressman PURSELL to bring Dr. Davis from the University of Michigan to the Federal Government. I commend her for the outstanding job she has done and wish her every future success.●

● Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in speaking of the Honorable Carolyine Kahle Davis, Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration.

In the next few days, the Reagan administration will lose one of its unsung luminaries when Dr. Davis leaves Federal service after 4 years at the helm of one of the most important agencies of the Government.

Dr. Davis has shouldered the responsibility of managing the system that plays a crucial role in serving the needs of the 51 million elderly, disabled, and poor who depend upon Medicare and Medicaid. The agency budget which for fiscal 1985 was $99 billion, amounts to nearly 10 percent of the total Federal budget and 29 percent of all health care expenditures in our country. The agency staff which she supervised totals 4,100 individuals and another 60,000 regional and State fiscal intermediary staff who coordinate HCFA programs at the State level.

During her tenure, she has overseen the institution of a major Federal Government reform program and process—the prospective payment system—which has had, and will continue to have, a profound impact on the Federal Establishment and, naturally, the beneficaries of Medicare. Dr. Davis began the implementation of the system in October 1983, and by October 1984, roughly 5,400 hospitals were being paid under the new system.

Dr. Davis, a distinguished public servant, began her career as a registered nurse. She moved into administration at Syracuse University and later as associate vice president for academic affairs at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. She earned her Ph.D. at Syracuse University and has been honored with doctorates from Adelphi University, University of Medicine & Dentistry of New Jersey, Georgetown University, and the University of Evansville. Her awards, honors and publications are too numerous to list. Suffice it to say that she has made a impressive contribution to the literature of health care in the United States.

Dr. Davis has been in the forefront of developing a new awareness and appreciation of the public policy implications of rising health care costs, and has been the spokesman and general of the revolution to bring health care costs under control during this administration.

The Reagan administration is losing a loyal and experienced administrator, but I am sure that Dr. Davis will continue to make her mark on public policy in her new endeavors.

Her friends throughout the executive branch, the Congress, and the industry wish her well, and look forward to her future assistance to the task of bringing health care costs under control.●

● Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, it is entirely appropriate that we have chosen today, the 20th anniversary of the Medicare and Medicaid programs to honor Dr. Carolyne Davis.

Not only has Carolyne Davis served as administrator of HCFA, the agency that oversees these two important programs, longer than any other individual, but she has done an outstanding job in what is certainly one of the most challenging and difficult positions in this town.

In 1981, which was when Carolyne Davis arrived at HCFA, the Social Security trustees predicted that Medicare's hospital trust fund would be bankrupt within 5 or 6 years. Earlier this year, the trustees projected that the trust fund would be solvent through 1998.

While this encouraging trend cannot be attributed solely to the efforts of Carolyne Davis, it has been under her leadership that these two massive health programs have undergone their most sweeping changes.

Under the intense pressure and scrutiny of numerous interested parties including other Federal agencies, health industry groups, consumer representatives and Congress, Carolyne Davis has developed and implemented far-reaching, detailed operative Medicare and Medicaid guidelines. She has managed an agency that provides for the health care needs of 50 million Americans who are elderly, disabled or poor. HCFA's current budget of $99 billion amounts to 10 percent of the Federal budget and represents nearly one-third of all health care expenditures in this country.

As ranking Republican on the Ways and Means Health Subcommittee, I have worked closely with Carolyne Davis. My admiration and respect for her have continued to grow. In short, she is going to be a very tough act to follow.●

● Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to honor Dr. Carolyne Davis this evening. She is not only one of the more prominent graduates of Johns Hopkins University in our State, but she has also served on the university's board of trustees with distinction.

We are proud of her work as administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration—from a point of near bankruptcy in 1981—she has brought the program to fiscal stability. It has been a grand job which reflects well on her education, her experience and her character.

I am always impressed by the performance of most appointed officers in government, having been one myself. It is the most difficult of chores to come into an on-going operation, fully staffed, picking up programs and problems—already in place—and be effective.

Carolyne Kahle Davis has obviously been effective and that is what good governance is all about.

We owe Dr. Davis for her service to the country. We thank her and wish her Godspeed.●

● Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in saluting the efforts of a dedicated public servant, Dr. Carolyne Davis, who will soon leave Government service.

During my freshman term in Congress, Dr. Davis made her first appearance at a congressional hearing before the Government Operations Subcommittee on which I served. She spoke then on a complex and volatile Medicare issue. Since that time, she has distinguished herself in numerous forums as an articulate and informed leader in the field of health care.

Under the stewardship of Dr. Davis, the Health Care Financing Administration has assumed tremendous responsibility in reshaping Federal programs to meet stringent fiscal requirements while maintaining quality services for millions of Americans. Dr. Davis has responded to these challenges with great vigor and attention to detail.

While we have lost a tireless and trustworthy ally in the executive branch, her legacy of service and accomplishment will remain. I wish her the best of success in future endeavors, and extend my heartfelt gratitude for her efforts.●

● Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this special order to commend Dr. Carolyne Davis for her work over the last 4½ years as head of the Health Care Financing Administration.

She has done a tremendous job working under terrific pressures. She has not only had to work to keep the Medicare system solvent, but she also brought to her job a commitment to providing the senior citizens of this Nation the health care benefits they need and deserve.

Only 2 years ago, it was predicted that the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund would be broke by the end of this decade. Today, however, the system is predicted to be solvent nearly to the end of this century.

This improvement is due in large part to the reduction in health care inflation.

More importantly, however, the new DRG system offers us the prospect of long-term relief in holding down health care costs, and Dr. Davis was instrumental in getting Congress to approve this system.

While she has headed the Health Care Financing Administration, Dr. Davis has overseen innovative new programs go into effect, such as the 2176 waiver program under Medicaid, the preventive health demonstration grants under Medicare, the hospice program for terminally ill Medicare recipients, as well as the fundamental change brought about by the prospective payment system.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Davis has clearly left her mark at HCFA.

She has served longer than anyone else in that position, and she has done so with distinction and a dedication which deserve the commendation of Congress and the administration.

I wish her the best of luck as she returns to the private sector, and wish to extend my heartfelt thanks for a job well done.●

● Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to participate in this special order honoring one of the ablest administrators that the Health Care Financing Administration has ever had.

I have known Carolyne Davis since she was a professor of nursing at Syracuse University in the early 1970's. She has been a friend, neighbor, and volunteer extraordinaire.

Carolyne has always been at the forefront of good causes, bringing her enthusiasm, knowledge, and leadership capabilities to bear on community efforts. I had the honor and the privilege of serving with Carolyne as officers of the Upstate New York Heart Association. She also served with distinction as the associate chairperson of the United Fund at Syracuse University. As an elected member of the Fayetteville-Manlius School Board, Carolyne played a major role in shaping the school district into one of the finest in New York State.

Administrator Davis has shown the same dedication and perseverence at the Health Care Financing Administration. During her 4½ years, she has promoted and overseen dramatic changes in the Medicare and Medicaid systems. In very difficult circumstances, HCFA under her leadership has succeeded in curtailing the rate of growth in the cost of the Medicare and Medicaid Programs while at the same time serving more people than ever before.

Specifically, Carolyne has overseen the design and implementation of the prospective payment system, the Medicaid State Flexibility Waiver Program, and peer review organizations. Access to health maintenance organizations have been expanded, regulations, for hospice participation in Medicare have been developed, and the paperwork burden on the public has been reduced by more than 25 percent. These are just a few of the accomplishments of HCFA under Carolyne Davis.

As a member of the House Select Committee on Aging, I have especially appreciated all of the times Carolyne has testified before the Aging Committee and its various subcommittees. It has been a long and hard battle from her first appearance before the committee to her farewell appearance at today's hearing honoring the 20th anniversary of the Medicare and Medicaid Programs.

August 8 is officially Carolyne's last day as Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Her strong work ethic, managerial expertise, and extensive knowledge and deep concern about health issues will be missed. I hope she will return to government service in the future to give us the further benefit of her talents. America needs such talented people in her service.

In closing, let me just say, "Well done, Madame Administrator."●

● Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to take this moment to recognize the fine work of a dedicated public servant, Dr. Carolyne Davis, Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration who has recently announced her plans to leave the Department.

Dr. Davis. has led a distinguished career at the helm of an agency of great importance to all senior citizens. For in the hands of the Health Care Financing Administration is the Medicare Program which today protects some 31 million elderly and disabled Americans from the high costs of health care. She has lead this agency admirably through a tenure of turbulent times. Dr. Davis served her country for 5 years in this position, longer than any of her predecessors.

On many occasions I have had to call upon Dr. Davis personally for assistance with problems faced by my constituents. Her door has always been open. In every instance she did everything in her power to best assist me. This goes beyond partisanship. Dr. Davis has proved not only a dedicated and talented administrator by a compassionate and understanding person.

I wish Dr. Davis the best of everything in whatever future endeavors she may undertake. I know that she will carry with her those personal and professional characteristics which marked her distinguished service at the Health Care Financing Administration.●

● Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Carolyne K. Davis, after 6 years of distinguished service at the University of Michigan, joined the Health Care Financing Administration [HCFA] in 1981 as its Administrator. Dr. Davis took charge at a time when the agency was in the throes of a nearly complete overhaul, the revamping of a major American industry—health care financing. Under her leadership, Medicare and Medicaid underwent the most sweeping changes since their founding. In spite of the stormy seas she has had to sail, Dr. Davis has held her ship on course.

Dr. Davis is not only a leader but a health care professional who knows how to lead. Originally a nurse, she earned a Ph.D. degree in higher education administration, and went on to run nursing departments at Syracuse University and the University of Michigan where she ultimately served as associate vice president for academic affairs before joining HCFA in 1981.

Today, July 30, 1985, marks the 20th anniversary of Medicare and Medicaid. It seems fitting to me that on this day, Dr. Carolyne K. Davis should be honored. I would like to add my voice to those honoring Dr. Davis and wishing her continued success in her future endeavors.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago today, President Johnson signed into law one of the most important pieces of legislation ever enacted—legislation to establish the Medicare Program which created a system of affordable health care for senior citizens in America. I was privileged to have been in Congress in 1965 when this legislation was passed, and was pleased to be able to vote in favor of it.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, nearly 95 percent of senior citizens in this Nation are entitled to Medicare benefits under part A of the program. Over the years, the program has expanded from hospital benefits (part A) and physician services (part B) first enacted in 1965 to include home health care, skilled nursing facility benefits, hospice care, and health maintenance organizations. And, over the past 20 years, Congress has made changes in the administration of the program to make it more responsive to the needs of its beneficiaries. Perhaps the most notable change was the 1983 amendments, which established the prospective payment system.

Clearly, the Medicare Program has lived up to its noble goals. Health care costs for the elderly—while still a significant percentage of income—are much lower than they would have been had Congress never enacted the Medicare Program. The compromise struck in the 1965 legislation—hospital care under part A for all beneficiaries financed by a small portion of the Social Security tax and part B for those beneficiaries electing to pay a small monthly premium—has insured that our senior citizens need not fear that their health problems can not be taken care of because of huge medical costs. Medicare was a natural and logical extension of the Social Security Program.

Mr. Speaker, over the past 4½ years, the Health Care Financing Administration, which administers the Medicare Program, has been under the able stewardship of Dr. Carolyne K. Davis. Dr. Davis has served with distinction as the director of HCFA, longer than anyone has ever held that position. It is appropriate today, on the 20th anniversary of Medicare, to commend her for her efforts.

Earlier in this decade, the predictions were that Medicare, the cornerstone of health insurance for older Americans in this Nation would be bankrupt by 1986. Those dire predictions have been proven wrong, and the wolf at the door has been put off for many years, and the reason is the leadership provided by Dr. Davis.

She has taken it upon herself, with remarkable success, to restore fiscal rationality to Federal health care programs. She has presided over the most fundamental restructuring of the Medicare system since it was created, the prospective payment system. She has sought, through regulatory reform, to curb excessive growth and abuse, saving billions of dollars, without compromising the health care of the American people.

She has gone after these goals with intelligence and determination, all the while under tremendous pressure from all those rightly or wrongly threatened by change, under constant pressure from the Congress to do more or to do less, and under constant pressure from other agencies of the Government like the Office of Management and Budget. She has performed admirably, and this Nation owes her a debt of gratitude.

As the ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee and of its Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education, I have had the privilege of working with Dr. Davis on the budget for the Health Care Financing Agency, and of having her appear before the subcommittee each year to testify on the Health Care Financing Administration's proposed budget. Because of her knowledge and expertise, Dr. Davis had the complete confidence of the subcommittee. Every year, it was Dr. Davis speaking on behalf of the provision of health care to millions of older Americans and disadvantaged Americans, and I can tell you that those millions of Americans slept better at night knowing Dr. Davis was speaking on their behalf.

Four and a half years is a long time for anybody to serve in as pressurized an environment as Administrator of HCFA. That represents a tremendous sacrifice of salary and personal life that Dr. Davis made in the service of this country of ours in one of the most important positions in the Government. We have been tremendously fortunate to have someone as skilled as Dr. Davis in this position, doing such good work, and we will all miss her very much.

I have often said that people who make the sacrifice of public service deserve a medal, but, Mr. Speaker, Dr. Davis deserves a bushel of medals for the service she has performed.

I want to wish Dr. Davis Godspeed in her future undertakings, but most of all, I want to say thank you, Dr. Davis, for a job well done. It has been a real pleasure to have worked with Dr. Davis. I will miss her, and I know the American people join me in wishing her the best.●

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order tonight.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

COMPARABLE WORTH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, let me address the question of comparable worth. We just heard, I think, a very interesting discussion of the subject a few minutes ago and certainly in the last couple of weeks we have heard a good deal about this notion. One of the gentlemen who discussed the notion not long ago confused me even further, because as I sat and listened to the discussion, I heard the gentleman make the point that this is not comparable worth, this is pay equity, and yet, as I listened to the discussion, the comparable worth language continued to come up.

I think this was reflective of the kind of curious circumstances of confusion we have here. I am very well aware of the comparable worth concept. It has been around for many years. If I can take a minute to present it in a nutshell, it is true that not too many years ago in this House we did pass legislation that gave to all Americans, irrespective of sex, or race, or religious conviction the guaranteed right to achieve equal employment opportunity and equal pay for equal work within the job category. That is to say, we have guaranteed to American citizens individual that they cannot be asked to work alongside another person in the same or even a similar job and suffer a pay differential that is based on some criteria such as sex or race.

The fact of the matter is, the legislation that we passed historically that guarantees equal employment opportunity opened access to jobs of all categories by all people, irrespective of race or sex, and that guarantees equal pay for equal work within a job category, irrespective of race or sex.

This legislation has had a tremendous impact on employment practices in the Nation, bringing about a changing occupational pattern for all Americans, patterns that have had enormous impacts on the home, such things as time-sharing arrangements, leaving not only mothers who feel compelled by economic circumstances to work, but also fathers to have greater opportunities to spend with their families.

Women in America in the last 10 years have broken new ground in larger numbers in a greater variety of new occupations not traditional to women in America, as have men broken new ground in nontraditional occupations. The freedom of the American individual, male or female, to cross traditional sex-determined occupational roles has been exemplified by the fact that they have been doing it, enormous progress that must be respected.

In all of those cases, we have given the fundamental guarantee that this Nation was founded on—equality of opportunity and freedom from discrimination that is based on arbitrary preferences regarding sex or race, and the progress has been felt.

Now we have a new concept, and it is fundamentally different in two ways. One, this new concept which emerged as comparable worth, existed as comparable worth, was debated as comparable worth, not only here in this body but in bodies across the Nation, and only recently has earned the new name—pay equity. It is the proponents of H.R. 3008 who changed the name of it, not us, who are asking for time to consider.

But what has happended here? We have made two fundamental changes. No. 1, we are talking about changes in the administration of wage by the Government, not the market. Wages would not be determined by the market forces reflecting the free will of individuals moving freely between jobs, changing supply, affecting the demand, and resulting in a price—a market that has served us so well and built the country so strongly.

When I see any piece of legislation that tampers with the fundamental market economy by which this Nation achieved such unparalleled prosperity, I have a sense of caution, a reserved sense of question: What is this legislation? Whom may it help, and whom might it hurt? What are the benefits to the national economic well-being, and what are the potential dangers?

We know very fundamentally indeed that it is impossible to take an economics course in this country, even at the most elementary level, without realizing very clearly that when you set a price that is different from the market price, depending on whether or not you set that price higher or lower, you are bound to create either a shortage or a surplus. And indeed this Government should have drawn that lesson from its meddlesomeness in its administration of price in a hundred other categories and markets so they would not risk it so cavalierly with respect to that very important labor market where clearing of the market goes hand in hand with the realization of equality of opportunity, along with equal pay for equal work.

So I have a sense of caution, then, Mr. Speaker, regarding anyone who would want to shuttle the market aside and put in its place a government price control agency.

Now, my second point: As we look at the possibility of implementing this new concept of wage determination by Government fiat, we are not talking about equality for individuals within jobs, but we are talking about setting equal pay rates for different jobs. We are now suggesting that we can endow this Government agency with the wisdom, and the understanding, and the ability to measure the worth of competing jobs, and to issue a fiat statement of the worth of those jobs. So that they may, as they have done, suggest that laundry workers and truckdrivers performed work of equal value; that librarians were almost twice as valuable as carpenters; that nurses held in the State of Washington the most valuable jobs of all—all of these decisions made arbitrarily on the basis of a model that had within that model only four variables, Mr. Speaker, of wage determination. So yes, I have a sense of caution.

Now let us address how this has emerged in this session of Congress. During the Fourth of July break, while I was working in my district, I found out that the emergence of comparable worth on this floor was imminent, that a bill had been introduced by the gentlewoman from Ohio and been assigned to the subcommittee that she chaired, and that it was going to be passed through that subcommittee posthaste.

Mr. Speaker, I grew up in the West, and in the West we saw railroads moving fast, many, many times, and we learned to recognize them. This had all the symptoms of the Great Northern moving westward. It was going to happen, I was sure, so I decided that I had to come back, because of my concern and my commitment and see if we could slow that train down and see if we could get some investigation, some examination. And, yes, I did speak to some of my colleagues, and, yes, I did get 20 or so of these colleagues to give 1-minute speeches raising questions and raising reservations. I did have another 20 or so of my colleagues talking to other Members and asking: "Do you know what this is? Do you have any idea what the potential of that might be?" Perhaps we have slowed that train somewhat, but it is moving forward now.

There are a lot of questions I would like to address. No. 1, let me point out that it is simply not true—and this is important—it is simply not true that the Office of Personnel Management has not performed a study. They have performed a study in the last year. According to the Washington Times in an article just in the last week, the sponsors of H.R. 3008 are well aware of and have in their possession the study that was done by the Office of Personnel Management.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. First, let me finish this point.

I have seen that study. I have it in my possession. I have read it. It has a lot of conclusions. One question I must ask is: Did the committee that reviewed this subject review the study done by the Office of Personnel Management, or did they shunt it aside, as they did the 400-page study done by the Civil Rights Commission?

We do not know the answers to these questions. Here is a study that is bought and paid for. It is done, it is completed. The study, by the way, has a regression model of 27 variables, not 4 variables. It is a rather thorough and scientific study. A regression model of 27 variables is a pretty impressive regression model.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to that in a moment, but let me for a moment yield to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just wanted to stay on top of this and ask a couple of questions. Do I understand that what the gentleman is saying to us is that despite the fact we are going to have a bill before us that indicates we ought to spend thousands of dollars, perhaps millions of dollars, on a study, that study has already been completed by the Office of Personnel Management? Is that what the gentleman is telling us?

Mr. ARMEY. Not only am I telling the gentleman that a study has been completed, but I also have no way of knowing whether or not the committee has examined that study or taken it into consideration because I have not yet even been able to see the report of the committee. It has not been issued yet.

Mr. WALKER. That is a problem, and we ought to deal with that in a moment. But let me ask the gentleman this:

Did the study done by the Office of Personnel Management come to the conclusion that the Members sponsoring the legislation would like it to come to?

Mr. ARMEY. Quite the contrary. As a matter of fact, it came to the conclusion that I spoke about earlier today. And it was a rather interesting conclusion, because it came to the conclusion that if you try to implement such a program, you will have a class conflict that can be generally described as a conflict between white-collar workers and blue-collar workers.

Mr. WALKER. All right. So I think the gentleman is telling me that the study has been done, but it did not come to the conclusion and did not come out the way the Members sponsoring this legislation on the floor would like it to come out. That is also true of the study done by the Civil Rights Commission. Is that not the case, that the study was done, but it did not come to the conclusion the Members who are sponsoring this legislation would like it to come to? Is that not right?

Mr. ARMEY. Absolutely. Here we have two cases where studies have been done. It has been studied by university professors and by think tanks. How many of these studies have been considered?

Mr. WALKER. The point I am driving at here is that both of those studies were done at taxpayer expense; is that right?

Mr. ARMEY. That is right.

Mr. WALKER. So it seems to me that what we have here is a bill that is being brought to the floor that is telling this House that we ought to spend as much money as necessary to come to the conclusion that the Members who are sponsoring this legislation want us to come to. It is not a question of whether or not it has been studied.

It has been studied, and we have gotten conclusions reached at taxpayer expense, but what these Members are saying is: "We don't like the conclusions, so, therefore, it becomes important for us to have another study." So it seems to me that even in a time of multibillion-dollar deficits, what we have is a House of Representatives that is saying, "Well, we don't like the outcomes of those other studies, despite the fact they have been done by the Office of Personnel Management and despite the fact they have been done by the Civil Rights Commission. We simply don't like the conclusions, so we are going to continue to spend the taxpayers' money until we get conclusions that we want."

Mr. ARMEY. As a matter of fact, the conclusion the gentleman has just come to is not too farfetched if we look within the bill and take a look at the mandated commission within the bill, the mandated requirements for Members to be on the commission, 11 commissioners. It is absolutely imperative by the language within the bill that 6 of the 11 commissioners will have to be people who have already been on record as being proponents of comparable worth. It is quite likely that what they are looking for then is a study that might generate their conclusion that it is a desirable alternative.

Mr. WALKER. Well, if I understand the gentleman, then what we have got happening here is we have an impartial study done by the Office of Personnel Management. You have got an impartial study done by the very distinguished Civil Rights Commission, a commission that we have often referred to on this House floor over a period of years as being the ultimate arbiter of what is needed to be done in civil rights. You have got those two studies already in hand, paid for by the taxpayers.

Now we have this study that is also going to be paid for by the taxpayers if we pass this legislation where they are driving the conclusion with the bill they are writing.

In other words, it is not really a study. It is really an outcome that is predetermined by the legislation that we pass here so that they can trump the two studies that were done by impartial panels. Is that what I hear the gentleman saying?

Mr. ARMEY. Well, that is a conclusion that I think is not at all illogical, given the facts as I have seen them.

Again, there is a missing link. I have no information by which I could argue against the gentleman's conclusion because I have not seen the committee's report. I have no idea what the committee did examine by way of information before coming to the decision to vote this bill out and on to the floor.

Mr. WALKER. Well, now, wait a minute. We have to have that report before we are going to consider the bill. Does the gentleman mean we do not have a report from the committee?

Mr. ARMEY. No.

Mr. WALKER. Even though the bill has been scheduled on the calendar?

Mr. ARMEY. No, because the chairwoman of the committee asked for and received a rule from the Rules Committee today that waives that requirement.

Mr. WALKER. That waives the rules of the House?

Mr. ARMEY. Yes.

Mr. WALKER. Well, the rules of the House are very, very clear. We are suppose to have a report 3 days before we consider the legislation.

Is the gentleman saying that the committee did not prepare that report so that we would have it to look at?

Mr. ARMEY. Well, the committee making the request for the rule obviously felt there was no need for the Members of the House to see the report that they made and apparently the Rules Committee agreed with them that we could go ahead with this legislation, whether the rest of us here in the House saw their report or not.

Again, I have so many questions that I would like to have answered regarding even the proceedings of the subcommittee.

Mr. WALKER. Well, does the gentleman suspect, as I do, that there might be things done in that report that they just as soon the Members of Congress not see?

Mr. ARMEY. Well, the gentleman from Texas recognizes that when the Great Northern goes by at 70 miles an hour it is pretty hard to see every dimension of that train that is sweeping on by. If you cannot slow down the train so the passengers can get on and take a look at what you are running, it is pretty easy to come to the conclusion that perhaps whoever is running the train does not want to look at it very carefully.

Mr. WALKER. Well, let us understand now that we have a bill being brought before us that is an attempt to spend taxpayers' money to trump two studies already done at taxpayers' expense. It is being brought to us under a rule that waives the rules of the House with regard to the 3-day rule so that the Members will not have adequate time in order to study the committee report and that it is a bill being brought to us under circumstances then that are less than desirable, just before the House is due to go on recess, so that the pressure will be not to even examine it very carefully with the amendment process.

This gentleman begins to suspect that there is more to this than meets the eye. The gentleman from Texas has been most articulate in presenting to the House I think reasons for raising questions about comparable worth.

I will tell the gentleman that the comparable worth bill flew through here in the last Congress just like the speeding train to which he referred. I think the bill was more than 400 to 6.

I would tell the gentleman that I was one of those who made a mistake and voted yes when that train was coming through the last time.

In large part, I think the gentleman has helped define some of the issues for us and he is to be congratulated for that.

I must say, I am shocked beyond belief at the kind of process that is being used in order to deny this House an opportunity to fully study this issue before we get sucked into the process once again.

I want to thank the gentleman for taking this special order. He has done a tremendous job in terms of outlining the issue.

I think this body should understand that the proponents of this bill simply cannot allow their concept to stand the scrutiny of any particular body. When the Civil Rights Commission looks at it, when the Office of Personnel looks at the concept, they find out it is pretty bad, so they write reports saying that we have to come back with another report that we have to waive the rules of the House to consider it on the House floor. I find it disgusting, and I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. ARMEY. Well, I thank the gentleman for his comments. I certainly would not disagree with them.

Understandably, each and every Member of the House moves forward with their programs, with their initiatives, with the greatest amount of conviction and oftentimes courage, but it is the tradition of this House that we always give everything very careful and close scrutiny. That indeed is what I am working for here is to suggest to the Members of the House that we ought to hold up on this, study it, get the report of the committee and perhaps even see what these other commissions have studied.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. Yes.

Mr. KINDNESS. Would the gentleman be able to tell me what the rationale is for the appointment of a commission to contract to have a study done, a commission that does not exist today, other than what has been discussed here, that is, creating a commission that is aimed toward a particular result, I suppose. At least that has been inferred. If the Congress or a committee of it does not trust a study that has been done by an existing commission or contracted to be done for an existing commission for two or three or however many of the years may have been done, the Congress could contract for its own study, could it not?

Mr. ARMEY. Yes, it could. I think committees could do so. We could do so I am sure in other ways.

The gentleman raises an interesting question, why commission a study? I do not know why that is necessary. I can think of a couple reasons that we may want a bipartisan commission and on the surface this looks like it could be that.

We may want a commission that is composed of a definitive balance of the membership that are comparative worth advocates.

On careful examination, it is almost impossible to come to any conclusion that this commission would be anything other than that, so it is possible that we might suggest that the franchising of a commission is an effort to shroud a little smoke around the whole venture.

We have to remember that in Washington State a commission was authorized by the State legislature. It carrier out the study. It reported back the study. The State legislature accepted the study. Then an interest group, a collected body of workers, filed a class action suit against the State of Washington and got into a case under the jurisdiction of District Judge Tanner where the plaintiffs made their case and the State's 11 witnesses were disallowed from testifying and indeed the implementation of comparable worth was compelled onto the State of Washington by the district judge, on the argument that the authorization of the study and the acceptance of it was an admission of guilt.

It is conceivable to think in terms of somebody understanding this process well enough to realize that if we could get this House to commission a study and move fast before, by the way, the appellate court looks at that Washington case during the month of August, that we might be able to drop the Federal Government into that same tar pit that the State of Washington now finds itself. That is a possible explanation for why we need the commission study and need the bill passed before the month of August.

Mr. KINDNESS. Is the gentleman aware of any costs being associated with the appointment of a commission, other than the contract cost for the study to be done?

Mr. ARMEY. Well, again this is something I pored over in the bill and I did not find very clearly stipulated. It is language that runs in the basic genre of "such sums as are needed" kind of language, so the cost of the study is not clearly specified nor limited in the bill, or the resolution, as I read it.

Mr. KINDNESS. But it is specified, is it not, that there would be one contract for one entity to do the study. Is that correct?

Mr. ARMEY. The commission is authorized to hire up to 5 expert witnesses.

Mr. KINDNESS. But they would function together to perform this study, is that correct?

Mr. ARMEY. That is not clear to me, and again, having no information on the manner in which these issues may or may not have been discussed within the committee, I have very little information by which to respond to the gentleman's question.

Mr. KINDNESS. Well, you are going to be considering this on Thursday, are you not, and so am I. We should know, should we not?

Mr. ARMEY. Absolutely. There is no question about it.

We have an hour for debate and time to discuss such amendments as one ruled germane.

Mr. KINDNESS. I want to express my thanks and appreciation for the work the gentleman has done, if he will yield for just one moment further, in bringing these questions to light. Frankly, I do not feel very satisfied with the preparation that may be made by any of the Members of the House of Representatives between the time the measure came out of the committee and the time it is to be debated on the House floor with such a fuzzy picture presented on some pretty basic questions. So I appreciate the gentleman's work in bringing these questions forward, and for taking this special order to emphasize them to the Members.

I appreciate the gentleman yielding and thank him.

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman and I appreciate his comments.

I hope it is fair to characterize the gentleman's comments as that you feel perhaps a little befuddled or perhaps overwhelmed. Let me remind you that I have a Ph.D. in economics, and I have studied the concept and the various notions and applications and arguments for comparable worth for several years. And it falls exactly into my research area that I had at the university for 20 years. The dirth of information about this particular resolution, these particular hearings, these particular amendments that move so fast has me, even with all of the substantial background that I have, and professional training that I have, feeling somewhat befuddled. So the gentleman should not feel that the fault, or the confusion, or the reason for the confusion lies within himself. It lies in the very fundamental thing that this House is being asked to make a decision that is basic to the nature and structure of the American economy and we do not have the information to make the decision. That is critical.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman ever been told when we are going to get this report?

Mr. ARMEY. No; I am sorry, I have not been.

Mr. WALKER. Do you think from what you hear that we might have it available by the time we consider the bill?

Mr. ARMEY. It is altogether possible, and I do not anticipate having the report of the committee before we look at the bill on the floor. But again, we are not talking here about a very simple, easy, cut-and-dried issue. We are talking about an issue that people wrote Ph.D. dissertations on.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman himself, who is a Ph.D., might have some ability to understand the language of the report if we had a report in front of us. But if I understand the gentleman, we may not ever get a report because we are waiving the requirements to have the report here.

Mr. ARMEY. Certainly. And I would have the ability to understand the report if I could have the report, as I did finally when I got the report, by the way. By the way, it is not an easy thing to get your hands on the report that was done by the U.S. Office of Personnel Management with the new Director or Acting Director that we have there. This report is not emerging in full view of everybody.

But even then we were only made aware of the existence of this report by the Washington Times last week.

Mr. WALKER. When did the committee, if I can ask the gentleman, when did the committee complete its deliberations on this bill?

Mr. ARMEY. I believe the full committee completed its deliberations, which were very accelerated, on perhaps Thursday or Friday of last week.

Mr. WALKER. Thursday or Friday of last week. So normally around here if you have a weekend like that, the committee goes ahead and prepares its report. By early in the week, we have a report available to us.

I mean, that is done all of the time. As a matter of fact, we have had instances where conference committees have finished the night before and we have had a conference report on the floor by the next day.

So this is not taking place here. We have got them hiding the report; is that what is going on?

Mr. ARMEY. With all due respect, I think we want to be fair here because the sponsor of the bill, the subcommittee chairwoman I am sure, did not, if my understanding is correct, did not anticipate that the House would have a need for this report, because it was their anticipation that they would have this bill on the Suspension Calendar for today. So I am sure they felt there would be no need to get this information out to us, since I am confident that their original plan was to have this moved very quickly on the suspension calendar where we would not stop and ask questions.

Mr. WALKER. I think the gentleman raises a point, however. The schedule was announced last Friday and the bill was announced last Friday on the schedule as being a bill that was not going to be on the suspension calendar, but was going to be on the regular calendar, subject to a rule being granted. That is the way in which I got the calendar last week.

So having known that, it seems to me that under the normal process around here what you would have done is have the committee staff work this weekend getting the report ready, getting the report printed, and having it available to the Members at least by today when we went to the Rules Committee to ask for a rule. I mean, that is the way the normal process works. If they are not working under that process, then I have to believe that there is some attempt to try to hide from the House the information that is in that report, so that people like the gentlemen that might have some ability to understand what it is they are saying, cannot, in fact, have a chance to read through it thoroughly.

Mr. ARMEY. I believe there would be some reality base for such a conclusion, and I certainly have no information by which to take exception to the suggestion the gentleman has made.

Mr. WALKER. The Rules Committee was not worried about that today?

Mr. ARMEY. The motion was made and voted on, and the majority of the Members of the Rules Committee obviously had no concern because they voted to go ahead and waive the 3-day rule.

Mr. WALKER. That is a problem we have around here too many times when the people who run this place and are concerned with scheduling, and concerned about rules, could care less about the rules of the House.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to commend the gentleman for his appearance and testimony before the Rules Committee. I had the good fortune of hearing the gentleman's testimony.

While I was there, though, I was puzzled by part of the bill I saw, and that is specifically in section 7, paragraph 3 of the bill, there is a restriction on what this commission, once formed, can and cannot do. Specifically, if I remember the language correctly, the commission is prohibited from reducing salaries. Am I correct in that?

Mr. ARMEY. It can never reduce the salary, correct, or recommend the reduction of a salary.

Mr. SWINDALL. Is that not kind of loading the deck on the front end? In other words, we asked for a commission to bring back a disinterested, objective report, and yet at the front end, there is a restriction that requires something irrespective of the conclusions that this commission may draw.

Mr. ARMEY. And if you are an economist, and you are aware of the possibilities of the cost-push inflation, and especially the relationship of that through Government expenditures, a red flag immediately goes up that there could be a detrimental impact on the American economy from such a provision that allows Government employees to have only pay increases.

Mr. SWINDALL. If the gentleman will yield further, that is the kind of thing that concerns me. That type of language, I would dare say, most folks are not even aware is in the bill. I for one did not know it, but for the fact that I accompanied the gentleman to the Rules Committee, and for the first time saw a copy of the bill as proposed, and that jumped out at me simply because it does seem to appear that they are really not asking this commission to go out and come out with a disinterested, objective conclusion when you ask on the front end that certain things be restricted.

Mr. ARMEY. I could not agree with you more. I have personally felt the handicap of the lack of information. I have pored over this resolution, word for word, and I have looked at it from every possible way trying to see anything such as you have mentioned. I feel rather inadequate. I have only been able to come up with 14 amendments. I wonder if I had full information such as the committee report perhaps if I might be able to make even more improvements in the legislation.

Mr. SWINDALL. One other quick point that I wanted to raise, and that is under the rule there will be some issue as to the germaneness of a number of the issues, I would assume, that the gentleman intends to introduce. And unless you get a specific waiver in advance from the Rules Committee, which must be voted on by the Rules Committee, you may well be hampered when you come to the floor, even under an open rule, in terms of offering a number of the 14 amendments that you have already drafted.

The rule does have a germaneness requirement. Of course, any amendment we offer we also have to consider may be potentially ruled out of order. Again even trying to determine the germaneness of a suggestion I might have could be facilitated if indeed we had the report of the committee to check the considerations that were given in committee proceedings on this.

Mr. SWINDALL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ARMEY. It is a pleasure to yield to my good friend from Texas.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I want to thank my distinguished colleague neighbor in Texas for hosting this special order. I was back in the cloakroom and heard what Congressman SWINDALL was talking about and I assure you I plan to offer the amendment tomorrow or Wednesday or whenever the bill comes up for consideration, to delete section 7, paragraph 3, which prohibits the commission from doing anything that would require a decrease in pay or decrease in grade in this study. If you are going to have a study and try to come up with some sort of a pay equity or comparable worth or whatever terminology you wish to use, if you really are trying to do if properly, obviously there are going to have to be adjustments made, and some of those adjustments would be downward as well as upward. So when you go in and load the deck that the only changes that could be made are up, you are not really being aboveboard, scientifically accurate or anything like that. I want to assure the gentleman I do plan to offer that amendment. I cannot imagine it would not be ruled germane, since it is an amendment to strike something from the bill. I believe that is about as germane as you can get.

I am going to work hard to make sure the amendment does pass.

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman from Texas and appreciate your perceptiveness in spotting that and getting right to it. Let me again thank all you gentlemen for helping to clarify these issues. Let me address some of the things I am concerned about.

I want, in fact I demand and I require for people that are so close to me and for whom I have so much love as my own wife and daughter, that we have equal employment opportunity and equal pay for equal work.

If there is anybody in this country today that is not receiving that, that is having the right abused, then I think it is incumbent upon the Federal Government and its agencies to enforce that law and if indeed there is a failure of the agencies of this Government to enforce that law, then that is where we should direct our energies.

My concern is that the Federal Government has limited resources. That is not a point always recognized around here, but nevertheless it is one that is true. If indeed we dissipate our resources in extending the scope of the law in an ambiguous and in an ill-defined and a controversial manner, will we not risk taking all of that Federal energy and all of that ability and all that authority that we could use to guarantee the right for equal pay for equal work and equal employment opportunity, could we not lose that trying to do what is impossible to do when we failed to do what it is imperative that we do? It is the working men and women of America and their rights, fundamental, guaranteed rights that were worked for so hard by so many that are in jeopardy by a continued pursuit of this initiative.

I will give you an example: In the State of Illinois, where they have tried this concept, it was determined that the nursing profession that was over 70 percent staffed by women was suffering from discrimination in comparison with the profession of prison guard, which was over 70 percent staffed by men.

And even though the prison guards' union had negotiated them a raise in pay for the following year, through the intervention of the equal pay, or the comparable worth act in that State, those guards lost their wage increase and their wages were frozen while the wages of the nurses were being raised. Now the people that suffered the most were the women guards, those women who had broken with tradition and found in the pursuit of higher wages a nontraditional female occupation, in response to the promise of all that legislation earlier passed.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Is the gentleman saying that in this case the collective bargaining process was broken by the comparable worth concept?

Mr. ARMEY. Again, this is another one of the questions we are addressing here. Apparently the whole process of collective bargaining can be in jeopardy here at least insofar as Federal contracts direct are concerned—Federal employees direct are concerned. But then who knows where it may go from there?

Mr. WALKER. Let me understand. In other words, a union can go out and negotiate with their employer, come to some agreement within the collective bargaining process that has served this Nation pretty well over a period of time, with some problems but nevertheless served the Nation pretty well, then go out and negotiate, and then some paper-pushing bureaucrat from the Government can come along and simply negate the collective bargaining process using comparable worth as the hook on which to interfer?

Mr. ARMEY. Absolutely. I mean, again we know that this problem has prevailed in areas where they have tried it in the past. We do not know for sure what will happen with this because we do not have any information to make a decision or to make an examination.

Mr. WALKER. Well, is there a protection in the bill?

Mr. ARMEY. None whatsoever.

Mr. WALKER. There is no protection in the bill that we are going to have to protect the collective bargaining process against this kind of situation?

Mr. ARMEY. No.

Mr. WALKER. Let me make my point. I will tell the gentleman I am going to offer that amendment. I will get that amemdment drafted and I will get that amendment passed because we are going to make doggoned certain that the collective bargaining process is protected under this thing. That is an atrocity that you are going to have a bunch of bureaucrats sitting around in Washington, DC, taking a look at contracts negotiated in good faith between employers and employees and then some bureaucrat is going to come along and say, "Oh, no, baby, you are not going to be able to do that, because we are beaking that contract before you even get a chance to have it go into effect." There are a lot of people with a lot of hopes riding on that contract they negotiate in good faith and there is no way that some idiot here in Government sitting back with his comparable worth paper ought to be able to break that. And I think that is an amendment that is needed.

Mr. ARMEY. I applaud the gentleman for his commitment and his conviction. I can only say please do offer the amendment. If, indeed, it is not ruled nongermane you may, in that case, have a chance to protect these people who have chosen this bargaining process and their right to continue with that process.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman thinks if I would offer an amendment that would attempt to protect the collective bargaining process against interference by the comparable worth advocates, that they would rule that nongermane?

Mr. ARMEY. Of course I could not begin to speculate on what would be the decision of either the Parliamentarian or the Rules Committee. But it is possible, in my estimation it is possible, even probable, that your amendment could be ruled nongermane if you were to offer it. Now again that is my judgment.

Mr. WALKER. We are going to try very hard to come up with a germane amendment in that case, because if the gentleman is correct that we already have examples where the collective bargaining process was broken by the comparable worth concept, and if in fact we are creating a study here that could lead to further interference with the collective bargaining process, we had better stem that flood right away and we had better make doggoned certain from the outset that you do not get that kind of interference. You know, it is my understanding that a bunch of the union bosses around this town are supporting this bill. I cannot understand, with their support, that they have not at least gotten the workers out across the country who are tied to those collective bargaining processes, some protection. In other words, what did they get for their support if they cannot even protect their workers against the interference of a bunch of Government bureaucrats?

Mr. ARMEY. Do you not suppose it is altogether possible: First, that either the train left the station so fast they did not know what the cargo being carried was; or second, since indeed some of these people, perhaps some of the people here in town that would be quickest to spot these problems are some of the people who would be on the commission?

Mr. WALKER. They probably have not seen the report, either.

Mr. ARMEY. Well, again, I do not think that it is hard for me to understand who has got what information. All I know is that I have got very little information.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ARMEY. And I am making a decision on Thursday that is going to affect the fundamental structure of employment practices of this country whether it be in the free market without unionization, or in the market where we have collective bargaining, any market system by which we traditionally negotiate wages either individually or collectively, is in jeopardy by this Act.

Mr. WALKER. I bet there are a lot of union workers around the country that have not been told by their union that a bill is being endorsed that has the potential of breaking the union contracts that have been signed in plant after plant after plant across the country, where people may have walked a picket line in order to get a contract signed, and then you can have the Government bureaucrat step in and say, "Forget it guy, that contract is not valid because it does not meet our comparable worth criteria."

I will bet you that blue-collar workers and white-collar workers around the counry have no idea that the bill that we are about to consider on this floor jeopardizes that process and I think that they would be appalled to find out that it does.

Mr. ARMEY. The gentleman, by the way, has given a graphic illustration of exactly the kind of class conflict that the Office of Personnel Management suggests may happen with respect to blue collar and white collar, because the evaluation procedures that we have seen so far in efforts to test this idea have demonstrated a clear bias in favor of white-collar workers and the credentialism.

That is to say, if indeed you have a college degree, you get more points than you would get if you had served an apprenticeship as a tool and die maker. You may be a very skillful machinist who can cut an important piece of equipment down to the one one-thousandths of an inch and never make an error, that all the years of skill and training that went into that get very little consideration in this process that puts so much emphasis on the kind of credentialism that goes along with such things as college degrees and so forth.

Mr. WALKER. I know the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] is waiting, but let me just say to the gentleman: That is the problem. The paper-pushing bureaucrats who make these evaluations are white-collar workers themselves, and they tend to see things from their own standpoint rather than from the standpoint of the guy who works and sweats for a living in a factory somewhere or in a machine shop or in a foundry and so on; many of the people who are going to make the decisions have never been in a foundry, and have never been in a casting mill, or have never done any of that and have no idea what that job is all about and have no idea of the amount of training that might go into those kinds of positions and so they are making decisions based upon a lack of experience.

So sure, they end up ruling for the kind of thing that they know, and not the kind of thing that they do not know.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ARMEY. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Let me yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KINDNESS. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I realize his time is limited at this point, but I may have missed something, and I want to be sure that I understand how this legislation could have an effect in the private sector.

I had not realized that it had the potential for being a union-busting bill until this discussion was being carried forward.

How would the bill affect these relationships of employer and employee in the private sector?

Mr. ARMEY. First of all, by the extension of the market. You know, the market is going to be there whether we try to overrrule it or not, in the first instance, even if it is confined to Federal employees.

We have to understand that the Federal Government competes in the same labor market for the same people, the same skills, as General Motors or anyone else. So by extension, the Federal Government being as it is such an enormous employer, hires a large share of the market for any labor category out there, and any wage determination they make is going to affect that market.

Second, as we know, and it is tradition in this country that every, as it were bad practice that the business community obtains is one they learned from the Government; whether it be cost-plus pricing or any number of bad practices.

The Government first takes a bad idea, or one that is counterproductive; innovates it, and then in effect projects that idea, either by way of gentle persuasion or sometimes by gentle fiat.

We have to understand there are at least two references to civil rights legislation in H.R. 3008. Civil rights legislation is not directed at public employees alone, but affects public and private employees. The passage of this may very well be construed, then, as an extension of existing civil rights legislation, a new concept of implementation for existing civil rights legislation; I dare say it has even been suggested to be that in some of the discussions I have heard on the floor.

And if that be the case, then we are all going to be stuck on the same stick, whether public or private.

Mr. KINDNESS. Would the gentleman yield further. Would he care to explain the possibility or potential for involvement of the employees of Government contractors as an essential fallout of this legislation and whether perhaps the Davis-Bacon Act, which requires prevailing minimum wage being applied in Government contracts came into play directly, too?

Mr. ARMEY. The gentleman has gotten into a real circular area here; in this case of the Government setting the wage and then the Davis-Bacon Act requires prevailing wage, which is generally understood to be a union-negotiated wage, but if the union-negotiated wage is overridden by the comparable worth wage, it is difficult to see how anybody is going to come up with any wage except, I can almost predict, the blue collar worker is going to get a lower wage or a frozen wage, while some white collar worker gets some benefits.

SCHOOL PRAYER AMENDMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, earlier this evening we heard from our colleagues about the anniversary of a very important agreement that is supposed to uphold the basic human rights. I refer to the Helsinki agreements that were signed 10 years ago today.

Of course, it has been made clear earlier this evening, the Communist countries of Eastern Europe, led and forced by the Soviet Union, have cynically and blatantly violated the basic rights of free speech, free press, and the free exercise of religion. For this we rightly condemn them.

The rights of the majority have been taken away by a tiny, ideological minority that is backed by the terrifying power of the state; the historic traditions and practices of nations and peoples have been declared null and void by the fiat of a dictatorial body.

This came home to me, Mr. Speaker, in a very personal way 3 years ago when I had the privilege to serve as a White House fellow for President Reagan. As part of that experience, myself and the other 13 White House fellows took a tour of the NATO countries in Western Europe.

Part of that tour was a stopover in West Berlin where we were able to view the Berlin wall "up close and personal" as they say on television, and we had a breakfast at a newspaper office that is built right on the wall; the newspaper building itself is a 13-story building. At the top of that building is a room with plate glass windows where you can look out; and the building is within 100 feet of the Berlin wall.

We went up, before the breakfast, and we were able to look out; you could look over to the right and there was East Germany, East Berlin, and people were standing in lines; everybody was dressed in gray; there did not appear to be much friendliness, we did not see too many people smiling.

We looked to the left and could see the people of West Berlin, and they were driving many makes and models of automobiles, modern clothes, and a lot of laughing and it just really brought home to me the difference between living in a free society and the difference in living in a controlled society.

At the end of the breakfast, our West German host said, "You Americans are always complaining about us here in Europe, that we don't take our freedom seriously; that we don't back you up." He said, "You don't have to worry about us, because every day we live with the fear and the threat the Soviet Union is going to come across that wall, or East Germany is going to come across that wall."

Well, we are involved in a situation here in our own country that I think potentially could lead to the sort of situation that we have behind the Iron Curtain. We are here tonight to discuss a blatant violation of one of our basic rights, and that is the right of free speech and free exercise of religion. And keep in mind that in a totalitarian society, as controlled by communism, there is no such thing as religion, there is no such thing as free speech and the exercise of religion.

We, on the other hand, in this country have always had a history of allowing free speech, free exercise of religion. Our country was founded on that tradition. But we have gotten to the situation where, because of some very restrictive court rulings, the first one beginning in 1962, where our Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional the right of our school children to pray in the public schools, that one of these basic tenets of our free society has been taken away from us because a very tiny minority of our population is opposed to the free exercise of prayer in the public schools. When I say a tiny minority, I would like to point out that many national polls, the latest one conducted last September, show that the American people favor by an over 80-percent margin the ability of our schoolchildren, if they wish voluntarily, to pray in public schools.

In my own district, a recent poll that I conducted back in the spring, shows that 68 percent of my district, the Sixth District of Texas, favors vocal voluntary prayer in the public school system.

Because the American people have traditionally allowed and encouraged the free exercise of religion and the free exercise of speech, which included the ability to voluntarily pray in the public schools, and because some of our court cases have restricted that right, many of my colleagues in this Congress and in previous Congresses have begun to try to reconstruct, to resurrect that basic American right. So far we have not been successful. My colleague from Ohio, the Honorable TOM KINDNESS, has got a constitutional amendment that is supported by the Reagan administration that would allow this basic right to once again be exercised in public schools. I would like to read Congressman KINDNESS' amendment. Very briefly, it states:

> Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prohibit individual or group prayer in public schools or other public institutions. No person shall be required by the United States or by any State to participate in prayer. Neither the United States nor any State shall compose the words of any prayer to be said in public schools.

So this amendment does not establish a state religion; this amendment does not require anyone to pray in school who does not wish to; this amendment does not allow the Federal Government or the State government or any government to determine what shall be said or how it shall be said or even whether anything shall be said. It strictly and simply states that nothing in the Constitution shall be construed to prohibit individual or group prayer in the public schools or other public institutions.

Now, many may ask: Why do we have to resort to a constitutional amendment to accomplish such a simple and obvious task that so many of our citizens in this country approve of? And, quite simply, we have to resort to such a situation because this tiny minority in our country that I spoke of earlier, through parliamentary procedures and other artifacts, have been able to prevent the Congress and the legislative bodies from doing what needs to be done. So I think it is very important this evening as we debate the issue that we highlight some of the things that need to be highlighted.

This is not something that has just come along. The Northwest Compact of 1789, which was legislated and approved by our Founding Fathers, who also wrote our Constitution, very specifically allows for religion in public schools that are created in the Northwest Territories.

Many of our Presidents down through the years, both Republican and Democratic, have encouraged prayer. I would like to quote from President John F. Kennedy, in his inaugural address of 1961. He said:

> I have sworn before you and Almighty God the same solemn oath our Forefathers prescribed nearly a century and three-quarters ago, and yet the same revolutionary beliefs for which our Forebearers fought are still at issue around the globe, the belief that the rights of many come not from the generosity of the State, but from God.

Last evening I had the honor and the privilege to host the second annual prayer vigil in our Nation's Capital. Last year Congressman DUNCAN HUNTER from the great State of California instigated this vigil, and we had decided that we are going to conduct a prayer vigil at least once a session in this body, in this building, until we are able to overturn the restrictions that are on the ability to party in the public schools. And at this second annual prayer vigil last evening we had students from all over the United States. We had some students from the State of Alabama that had come, that had been prevented from praying in their schools on a voluntary basis, in spite of the fact that they got 545 signatures out of a potential 549 signatures in their school. This is in Leeds High School, in Leeds, AL. And because an attorney from the American Civil Liberties Union threatened a lawsuit if they continued the voluntary expressions of their faith, they were unable to do so.

We had students from as close as McLean VA, right here near our Nation's Capital, who tried to put a poster up on the school wall, telling other students that they were having a prayer group at an individual's home in the evening, and they were prevented from doing that, they were not actually engaging in any kind of voluntary prayer or religious ceremony or religious meeting in the confines of Langley High School, they were merely putting a little poster up telling students where to come later in the evening if they wanted to participate in a prayer group. They were prevented from doing this.

These kinds of examples could go on and on. But the main point is that we have got to realize that if we are going to maintain our freedom, we need to maintain the basic freedoms, and one of the basics is freedom of religion, freedom of expression, and to do that I think that we are going to have to get this constitutional amendment before this body in public debate. And if we can do that, we will be able to pass it overwhelmingly.

Now, some may ask: What is the problem? Why can we not debate the issue in the Halls of Congress?

The reason is because in order to get the amendment out into the public debate we have to get it out of committee, and for reasons that are unknown to myself we have not been able to do that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. I yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank my colleague from Texas for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman, also our fine colleague, Mr. KINDNESS, and Mr. SWINDALL and our other fine colleagues, for calling this special order tonight.

You have put together a very fine factsheet, not only stating the legalistic arguments, but the commonsense approach and reference to why our children should be allowed to pray in school.

I asked the gentleman to yield because I would like to take part in the debate tonight and have my remarks directed toward what we can do.

Let me state at the outset that there are many on my side that want to vote for this amendment. However, we find ourselves in a position that we are being forced now to walk down to the well and sign a petition of discharge. I want you to know that I have signed that petition of discharge. It takes a little bit of courage to walk down and do that, because it tends to put one in disfavor with many of the committee chairmen. But at this point in time, if you look at the history of this institution, if you look at the history of our Federal judiciary, one has to draw the conclusion that the Judiciary Committee and the Federal courts complement each other.

One could say well, why are we not down here introducing legislation under article 3, section 1, which gives us the power to determine what the Federal courts can review. That all sounds good, but the truth of the matter is when one introduces a bill that deals with the Federal judiciary, one immediately finds his bill going into the "Graveyard Committee;" the Judiciary Committee. I certainly am not casting any aspersions toward the Judiciary Committee. We have some liberal Democrats as well as liberal Republicans on that committee. I am not just necessarily picking on them tonight, but the truth of the matter is the liberals cause most of the bills to be bottled up and buried in that committee.

In my opinion, we have a responsibility at this point in time to bring this on the floor for a vote, because if we do not, I think the people of this great country, and we are only a couple States short at this time of the needed number, to call a constitutional convention. Once that happens woe be unto the Judiciary Committee and to the Federal courts. I make mention of that because I do not think that is necessary. When it gets to that point, it is a clear indication that we are not doing our jobs. That is truly representing the people of this country.

Gentlemen, let me share with you, and I truly believe this in the bottom of my heart, the people are right more often than we politicians and Federal judges, and they are crying out. Our young people, as you mentioned, are crying out: "Let us pray in the schools." They are teaching us everything, basically, in school that we do not want to know anyway, about all the other secular problems. We want an opportunity to acknowledge that there is a God. We all grew up in schools in which we prayed. We even pledged allegiance to the flag. Our flag; our country.

I want to close then allow any of my colleagues to ask me questions, by saying that I am proud tonight to be here. I know it is very seldom that we see someone on my side participate in a special order on that side, but I want to assure you, gentlemen, our party is made up of a lot of fine men and women, fine Christian men and women who want to do right. But they are a little bit concerned about what will happen to one if you step up and step out and you sign that petition.

I want to assure my colleagues of one thing: Nothing is going to happen to us. The people of the Second District of Arkansas elected me to represent them. They did not elect the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and he is a fine man; I do not have anything against him. I just do not agree with him politically; I do not agree with the way he runs his committee.

I want to say this, and I am directing my comments to my colleagues. The people of this country deserve the right to vote on this amendment. They can vote on the amendment through their Representatives. I want to encourage all of my colleagues please sign the petition of discharge. I hate that we have to go to this length to bring this bill out, but the truth of the matter is we do. We are going to see more petitions of discharge until some on that committee wake up and realize there are some of us sick and tired of a Judiciary Committee only looking out for the minority viewpoint. That is what we are confronted with here today.

The Supreme Court could care less about the majority of the people in this country and their viewpoints. They are more concerned about the minority. You brought up the ACLU. I had a strange letter from them and I am going to interject this. I made some reference back in my district, about homosexuals. I got this scathing letter from ACLU, the same ACLU that went to Skokie, IL, and defended the Nazis, chastising me for making reference to homosexuals.

After I thought about it, I started to call up the director of the ACLU and remind her that I had first amendment rights, but gentlemen, we are wasting our time when we argue with people like that. It is sort of like some of our judges. I have watched some of them up here. They walk around with these very expensive, $150 U.S. Government briefcases, and they have got four U.S. Government pens in their pockets, and they have got a big, fat paycheck for the rest of their life, no matter what they do. When they open up their briefcases, there is nothing in there but a ham sandwich.

Those are the type of people that are telling us that we cannot pray to God. Gentlemen we need to demonstrate to the Supreme Court and the people of this land that we are a responsible body, both on my side and on your side. I think it is time that we vote on school prayer. I will guarantee you, if we ever get that bill out of committee or any other bill and it comes to the floor, it will be like the vote today to stop funding abortions in the District of Columbia; it is going to pass.

I want to commend you. I think you are doing something that should have been done a long time ago. It is not in a partisan way. I want to commend the gentleman. All of my colleagues should read your factsheet. I never knew that an "Aggie" could put something together as well prepared as this. You did a commendable job, and I want to thank you for allowing me once again to interrupt your special order. I, for one, have signed the petition, as I have stated. I, for one, if the bill is brought to the floor of this House, will very vociferously help you in debating for approval of this amendment.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I want to commend the gentleman from Arkansas for participating in this special order and I want to assure the gentleman that I have personally visited with many Members of your party, and this is a bipartisan effort. It has support on both sides of the aisle. I am very confident that before this legislative session is over, we will have the 218 signatures necessary to get the amendment discharged from the Judiciary Committee, and we will be able to debate it. I look forward to working with my distinguished colleague from Arkansas on the bill. I am sure that we will have much success.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I thought it was significant that he started off his remarks referring to the Berlin Wall, because the opponents of school prayer have also erected a wall. It is called the wall of separation between church and state.

They have said that we have a "constitutional" wall of separation in this country. Well, I have gone back to the Constitution on numerous occasions, and I have read the phrases in the Constitution that refer to religion in the first amendment. It says, and I have it right here in front of me, it says:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

Now, what the opponents of school prayer have done over the years is they have taken the first phrase there, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," and they have said that that erects a wall of separation. Now, the wall of separation was in a letter that Jefferson wrote at one point in his career. He referred to a wall of separation. They have taken that letter and transposed it into the Constitution, ignoring the second part of the first amendment with regard to a religion, where it says: "* * * or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The part of the amendment to which the gentleman from Texas referred.

I think it is important to recognize that the opponents of school prayer want to ignore the fact that Congress is supposed to make no law prohibiting the free exercise of religion, and have concentrated purely on the clause with regard to establishment of religion. And have said that the clause with regard to establishment is far more important than the free exercise.

I would contend that if you go back and look at the whole history of the Constitutional Convention, if you take a look at the entire pattern of the formulation of the Constitution and of the laws of the land early, you find out that the free exercise clause was, in fact, what our forefathers were attempting to put in place as a permanent part of the body, and that the establishment clause was tied directly to the free exercise clause; that their experience with the Church of England was such that they wanted to make certain that there was no doubt that there should not be a state religion that prohibited the free exercise of religion.

We have turned the whole thing on its ear in recent years in this country. We have had the establishment clause driving the free exercise clause and, in fact, driving it out of existence, because with regard to public institutions and with regard to public bodies, we now have a situation where we are saying that the free exercise of religion is to be prevented.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I would agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania and would think that if our Founding Fathers were here today, they would be appalled at the way the Constitution has been interpreted by the Supreme Court. As it is, I would assume that they are turning over in their graves because a nation that was founded on religious freedom, that our Founding Fathers, many of them, came to this country because they could not have religious freedom in Europe, and to realize that in our public schools today we cannot even recite nursery rhymes, and I have some examples that later in the evening I am going to recite that have been ruled as unconstitutional and as some sort of a prayer, they would be totally appalled, and I am so glad to have the support of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for this amendment and throughout this great country, because as the gentleman from Arkansas stated, if we can get the amendment onto the floor of the House, it will pass because the people of this country so overwhelmingly support it.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and I thank him for taking this special order to help define the issue.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I would like to yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SWINDALL].

Mr. SWINDALL. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want to thank you for taking this special order because I am one of those individuals who is on the Judiciary Committee. One of the reasons that I selected the Judiciary Committee as a choice among the various committees in this House was my concern about this specific issue, as well as my concern about the abortion issue. Both of those, as the gentleman from Texas knows, presently are before our Judiciary Committee.

I came tonight to speak for the simple reason that I have yet to have the opportunity to address the bill of my colleague from Ohio in that Judiciary Committee, so I come here tonight and I would like to just expound a little bit more on the point that the gentleman from Pennsylvania made with respect to understanding the first amendment, because unquestionably, if you look at the first amendment, and I found this in running for office as I would talk to individuals, there is a great deal of misunderstanding about what the first amendment says to begin with. As he pointed out, it says Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.

When I first read that in my constitutional law class a number of years ago, the first thing that I decided to do was to check to see what the word "establishment" meant. One of my habits is not to go to some great legal treaties but, rather, just to go to a common dictionary. I went then to the Webster Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary, last edited in 1970, and I found there under the word "establishment" that the first definition was "something that has been established," and the second definition is, "established church."

I did not know exactly what established church meant so I went and found right above it established church, and it says, "a church recognized by law as the official church of a nation and supported by civil authority."

In that context, it became very obvious what the drafters of the Bill of Rights intended. They did not want to see repeated in these new states the same problem that they had had in England where there was, in fact, an established church supported and financed by the state. But also they were concerned about the freedoms of religion and exercising it, and there is a world of difference between freedom of religion and toleration of religion. We did not want to be merely tolerant of other religions; we wanted individuals to be able to exercise their particular religious beliefs and creeds without any restraint, and it was for that purpose that the first amendment was drafted.

It was ratified in 1789, in September 1789, in this Congress, and on the same day that it was ratified, interestingly enough, Congress also established a national day of prayer and fasting. I say that because another lesson I learned in law school was, if you want to find the intent of a bill, lest there be any ambiguity about the bill itself, look at the surrounding discussion at the time the bill was passed.

When the first amendment to the Constitution was passed, on the same day if they established a national day of prayer and fasting, very clearly it could not have been their intent for the first amendment to mean what the Supreme Court has now read into it.

I would like to show you the absurdity of the most recent Supreme Court decision by reading just the first page of Chief Justice Burger's dissent, because I think he says it far more eloquently than I could. There, and I am quoting, he says:

> Some who trouble to read the opinions in this case will find it ironic, perhaps even bizarre, that on the very day we heard arguments in this case the court session opened with an invocation for Divine protection.
> Across the park, just a few hundred yards away, the House of Representatives and the Senate regularly open each session with a prayer. These legislative powers are not just one minute in duration, but are extended thoughtful invocations and prayers for Divine guidance. They are given, as they have been given since 1789, by clergy appointed as official chaplains and paid from the Treasury of the United States.
> Congress has also provided chapels in the Capitol at public expense where Members and others may pause for prayer and meditation, or a moment of silence.
> Inevitably, some way is bound to say that the court's holding today reflects a belief that the historic practice of the Congress and this court is justified because Members of the Judiciary and Congress are more in need of Divine guidance than our schoolchildren. Still others will say that all this controversy is much ado about nothing, since no power on earth, including this court and Congress, can stop any teacher from opening the day of school with moment of silence for pupils to meditate, to plan their day, or to pray if they voluntarily elect to do so.

The point I would like to make is, that is an argument that we hear quite frequently, but I would also like to remind individuals who make that argument that that argument is equally applicable today in the Soviet Union, behind the Iron Curtain, where in fact you may pray wherever and whenever you want to, provided you do not let anybody know about it.

That is precisely the problem that we are trying to deal with here tonight, and that is, America was founded on the precept that you do not have to do these types of things in secret.

One of the points that I would also like to make is that there is a great deal of lack of understanding about what we mean when we use the term "prayer in school." Are you for prayer in school? I found that because I have found that for as many individuals who asked me my opinion on school prayer, there are probably at least that many separate definitions of what prayer in school means.

Let me just take the correspondence that I received only last week from one of my constituents, and in it she was basically chastising me for a statement that had appeared in one of the local papers, and in it she says, "The interview reads 'He thinks everyone agrees there should be prayer in schools.' The question is what form it should take," and then at that point she goes on to blast me about making that statement and being presumptuous. But then in the same paragraph, she says, "A child can pray individually in school any time he or she likes, and I agree with that," she says.

My point is, after telling me that my statement when I said that we all agree that children should be able to pray in school, it is just a question of in what form, she then goes on to say that she disagrees but then says she does agree that children should be able to pray in school.

What I am trying to get at is that we have this misperception, because in reality I think that what people are dealing with are two extremes of the argument. There is one extreme, and it is an extreme that we must admit that we took in this country for a number of years where we decided the verbiage, the time, the method and the manner of prayer. Obviously, that is something that I disagree with because I do not want my children praying based on what some legislative body may dictate to be the verbiage of a prayer. Some might ask why I would do that, and I would say that it has to do with Scripture. If you go back to Matthew 6—and I will be very brief—there is an admonition there. In verse 5 it says, "When thou prayest, thou shall not be hypocritical, for they pray standing in synagogues and on the street corners that they may be seen by men." It goes on to say that basically we should not pray with vain meaningless repetition. I agree with that.

But there is a further extreme and that is the extreme that the pendulum has now swung to where basically we say, "You may not pray because of this cloak of neutrality that the Jaffry versus Wallace court decision deals with." And as Justice Burger goes on to state, he says we have taken that cloak of neutrality and in fact turned it into a sword of hostility, where now, again, without getting into great detail, it is very obvious that the examples you mentioned here tonight are happening throughout the United States.

I was a young life leader in the Atlanta area for 8 years. In that position I dealt with a least five separate high schools, and in each of those high schools I was told that the administrators and the teachers were operating in a climate where they were very uncomfortable because they were not sure under this new state of the law as interpreted by the Federal courts—and there was a Federal court decision in Atlanta, in Clayton County that went far further than the Jaffry case—and under those circumstances they were uncomfortable and, as a result, in spite of the fact that they did not want to do so, they had to begin to restrict religious freedoms and activities.

And it is for that reason that I came tonight to say that I do not want to support either extreme. But what I do want is to see that basic freedom return to this country, and the President's language that has now been offered by way of an amendment by Mr. KINDNESS states it exactly the way I believe 99 percent of all Americans, if they are fair and honest with it, would like to see it stated.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I would like to thank the gentleman for his comments.

I would like to point out that one of the problems that we have when we mention the word "prayer" is what is the definition of prayer. Some view a silent meditation, a silent thought to be a prayer. Others feel that prayer involves a vocal expression of religious sentiment.

And what Congressman KINDNESS' amendment does is it says we do not have to worry about the definition basically, that we cannot prohibit it, nothing in the Constitution shall prohibit. That way whether you believe as some do that silent meditation is prayer or whether you feel that you need to vocally express one's self in order for it to be a prayer, it really does not matter.

I am thankful that the gentleman from Georgia would come and quote from the most recent Supreme Court case, and would hope that if we have time he could actually quote the law from the State of Alabama that was struck down.

Mr. SWINDALL. If the gentleman would yield, I think that it would be very relevant right now because that law was simply for a moment of silence or in the disjunctive, voluntary silent prayer.

So we are not dealing with the same issue that came before the Supreme Court in the Engel versus O'Hair case in 1962. We are now talking about the precise issue. Can you voluntarily and silently meditate or pray in a school? And the Supreme Court says that in this country you may not.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. That is a very good point.

I would be happy to yield to my distinguished colleague from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding and for taking this time, and also all my other colleagues for the efforts they put out.

As I walked into the Chamber I was listening to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SWINDALL] and it appeared to me that he was talking about the confusion that presently reigns throughout America's school systems about what you can and cannot do. I think it is the most misunderstood concept in America today in our education system. It is, what is the separation between church and state? That is what makes the teacher feel constrained to stop the little girl from saying her rosary on the school bus on the way to school, because somewhere she heard about the separation between church and state and there is a symbol of church, and this is the state and, therefore, I must stop her.

I think that is the precise reason that we need Mr. KINDNESS' resolution to pass, so people know what you can do.

Many times Members get up on the other side of the aisle and say, "But you can already do this." Well, that may be true that you can do a lot of things in school. Perhaps I think that JOHN MCCAIN mentioned in his prisoner of war camp in North Vietnam they had the right to silent prayer essentially. But most teachers do not know what you can do and what you cannot.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. If I may interrupt, one sometimes wonders what some of our colleagues would do if they could control the mind. It is impossible even given our highly advanced state of technology to control what one thinks. They have to allow us to pray silently now. But one does wonder if we had the technology and the ability as in George Orwell's 1984 to read people's thoughts, there might be an effort by some in our society to also control that.

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SWINDALL. I would like to respond to something the gentleman said about the separation of church and state, and it was raised previously by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, about the origination of that phrase.

It was originated in 1802, in January when Thomas Jefferson wrote to a Baptist church in Danbury, CT, that was very concerned about the Federal Government, this new creature that was little understood, coming in and getting involved in their affairs.

Interestingly it was that phrase that was years later drafted by the Supreme Court, but at the time that the Constitution and the Bill of Rights were drafted, Thomas Jefferson was not even in this country. He was in France. So he certainly could not have intended for that to in any way be implied into the first amendment as now the Supreme Court has so generously done for us.

One other point I would like to make is it says, "Congress shall make no law respecting establishment of religion." Congress had never made any laws in this area. It is the Supreme Court that is making these laws. I think that is a very relevant point. Why in the world is the Supreme Court making these laws, and why is it that some of our liberal friends who believe that this is the greatest debating society and should be open for all types of debate using this closed rule that will not even let us bring forth things here in the regular business, when in fact they are the ones that so frequently say that we ought to debate these issues openly.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I think that is an excellent point the gentleman makes, and it brings out the point that the reason that we feel, some of us feel, we must resort to a constitutional amendment because we have decided that is the only piece of law in this country that the Supreme Court holds higher than itself and, if we could change the Constitution, then they would have to agree that our school children could voluntarily pray in school.

Mr. SWINDALL. Is it not true that if we were to pass a bill other than a constitutional amendment that under the various lines of cases from Engel versus O'Hair forward that it itself would be held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. That is my understanding, although I am not an attorney, but in reference and in conversations with those who are, that is the understanding that I have.

I see the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire. I understand the gentleman has some very specific comments that the gentleman would like to make about this issue. Before the time gets away, I would like to give the gentleman that opportunity.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I thank the gentleman.

I am very pleased to participate and I want to commend the gentleman for bringing this matter to the national attention, and I commend my colleague, Mr. KINDNESS, for introducing this amendment.

I think that one of the frustrating things that I dealt with not only as a Member of Congress, but for years watching the operation of Congress before I had the privilege of being elected to serve here was watching this particular issue be thwarted by a small group of individuals in this Congress. I point out that I believe the American people are very much aware of this.

It is ironic that just today I received my own survey back in my district on this particular issue and I share this with the gentleman and some of my colleagues. Our polling came back, and the question was very simply, do you support the right of voluntary prayer for children in public schools? The answer was 84 percent in favor. I think that pretty much falls in line with the statistical information that you gave at the beginning of your special order.

I think that the interesting thing when we look at it—Mr. WALKER made the point about we should not be denying the free exercise thereof—when you really stop to think about this it goes much beyond denying the free exercise of little children to bow their heads in voluntary prayer at the beginning of a school day. We are really saying if we cannot support this amendment and we cannot even allow it to be debated on the floor of this Congress, what we are really saying is that these children are threatening, these little children who cannot pray in school and cannot bow their heads in silent prayer or bow their heads and say a vocal prayer voluntarily, we are sayng that they are a threat somehow to the U.S. Constitution.

Think of that. With all of the problems we have today in Central America, and the Soviet Union, and all of the deficits, and all of the problems we have we are now saying that little children saying a voluntary prayer in school is so critical, and is such a threat to the constitutional process that we will not allow it to be debated on the floor of Congress.

I hope that the American people are going to be looking at this situation and looking at individuals who are serving in this body and judge them on the basis of this kind hypocrisy. I would be specific and say when I say hypocrisy, I mean hypocrisy.

The President of the United States takes an oath of office. He is a part of this Government, elected by the American people, and at the end of that little oath, he says, "So help me God."

Right behind the gentleman and behind the Speaker's chair are four words "In God we trust." That same phrase "In God we trust" is on our coins.

When we go into court, we swear to tell the whole truth, nothing but the truth, so help us God.

You know, it really is hypocrisy, and many Members in this body attend a prayer breakfast pretty much on a weekly basis. I find it ironic that some of those Members who attend that breakfast cannot see fit to support our discharge petition.

I think the hypocrisy runs rampant, and I really believe that the American people want this bill. And I certainly commend my colleague for putting it out here for all of us to see, and I would encourage all of us to devote our energies to getting this discharge petition signed, and get this thing out on the floor, as my colleague from Arkansas, Mr. ROBINSON, said earlier, get this thing out on the floor where we can get a vote on it up or down. I think that one of the real problems in this body is the fact that there is a reluctance on the part of some people in it to not allow us to have our say on an issue.

As I said earlier, if little children bowing their heads in voluntary prayer is a threat somehow to American society, or to our whole constitutional process, then we are really in bad shape.

Again, I want to compliment my colleague for calling this special order, and I am pleased to be a participant.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I would like to thank the gentleman from New Hampshire for participating. I would like to point out to some of my colleagues who may not know what a discharge petition is, that basically all one has to do, if you are a Member of Congress, and you are in favor of a particular piece of legislation, you merely go to the desk, right over here to my right, in this particular case it is discharge petition No. 1, and you sign your name on the line, and that says that you agree with whatever the piece of legislation is that you are attempting to get discharged from the committee. And you feel that it should be debated on the House floor.

There are evidently some of the Members of this body who do not understand that, and I am sure that once they do, they will be happy to sign the discharge petition.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I am happy to yield to my distinguished colleague from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. Something that my colleague from New Hampshire [Mr. SMITH] said, raised a note in my consciousness. I know I have a number of military bases in my district, and we have a number of churches in our military bases which I think, strictly speaking under this interpretation that has been in place on our school system with regard to school prayer probably are considered unconstitutional under that interpretation, because there is nothing more representative of the State than a military installation. Yet, we could not survive but for our churches on our military installations and bases, and involving our churches, and our synagogues. We could not survive because those people have to go out on a daily basis, even during peacetime, and undertake very strenuous, very dangerous activities.

If you have ever watched a carrier operation, night operation when the crew is out there on the decks of a carrier, and those F-14's are shooting off of there, very few ships or carriers go their tour of the Indian Ocean without having at least one plane go down and one or two people killed. It is a part of the job. One of our Blue Angels was killed the other day in a collision during one of their shows that they put on just in peacetime.

And yet, if you look at the challenges that our school children are facing now that we never saw, the drug challenges, and the challenges of promiscuity, and all of the things that they are facing, that are driving young people to a high rate of suicide, and high rates of pregnancy, high rates of drug addiction, they face immense challenges at least equal to those faced by our military people who we realize must have, even though they are on military, State-owned bases, must have access to a place to worship. Yet we deny our children that sort of faith and strength.

They made a sweep in my schools, some of my schools in San Diego recently. We did not think we had a big drug problem. We found an enormous drug problem. We found an average of one dealer per classroom. So in some San Diego high schools, there is one dealer per classroom, but you cannot have one prayer per classroom.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Or Bible either, as I understand it.

I thank the gentleman from California. I especially want to thank him for beginning last year the prayer vigil. I say to my colleague from California, Congressman HUNTER, that was a tremendous idea on your part, and it is something that earlier I said I would host this year, and I am willing to host it as many years as necessary until we can get this issue resolved. I want to thank you for your leadership.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman will yield further, it looks to me like you have the swing of things now.

I understand the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DELAY, is going to recite some of the Federalist Papers here shortly, and so we can all understand a little bit more about our Nation and our roots.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. We all wait with anticipation to hear the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. DELAY].

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. At this time, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I think it is interesting to point out some of these local decisions, and some of these decisions that have been effected at the local level in these last 15 to 20 years in this so-called movement away from prayer in school. It is interesting, in an effort to avoid disputes around the country, local jurisdictions have passed statutes which have, among other things, forbidden a minister to pray at a public school sporting event. That is one. Secondly, forbidden religious leaders to attend a public school function. And thirdly, barred religious-affiliated counselors from meeting with public school students.

I think a constitutional amendment is necessary to reverse these atrocities, and I cannot believe that we have to have it to do that. That in itself is a disgrace. But we need it.

I would just point out one final comment. I know my colleague is anxious to speak.

I pointed out earlier the phrase "In God we trust" is up on the wall behind the gentleman in the well. If the gentleman would look straight ahead, back up over the gallery, the greatest lawmaker of all time's picture is on the wall, Moses. Again, repeating my point of hypocrisy, I think it is hypocrisy, and any individual who stands in the well of this body and opposes what we are trying to do, which is merely have voluntary prayer in public schools, in my opinion, is guilty of hypocrisy when they can stand between those two, one a phrase and one an individual who was the greatest lawmaker of all time, stand between those two and make those comments. I think it is a sad commentary on America. I think it is a sad chapter in a book on America, and I think we ought to close it, and get Madelyn O'Hair out of the book. Let us end the chapter, and let us start the new chapter in a new book, and get on with the problems that we have to deal with in this country that are critical problems, and not have to worry about something that we should never have lost in the first place.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I totally agree with the gentleman's sentiments, and I would like to point out that the first order of business every day that this body meets is to begin with a prayer. Sometimes it is a Protestant prayer, sometimes it is a Catholic prayer, sometimes it is a Jewish prayer. Whatever, but that is the first order of business every time this body is opened for business.

I thank my colleague from New Hampshire for his comments.

Mr. COBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I recognize my distinguished colleague from North Carolina [Mr. COBEY].

Mr. COBEY. I thank my colleague for the recognition, and for taking this special order, for caring so much about your country that you would provide leadership on this issue.

It is difficult to even comprehend the fact that we are even having this special order and having to debate this issue given the rich religious history of this country and how God has so blessed this country. But I think it is symbolic of the very moral erosion of our country which is reflected in all sorts of perversion that we are having to deal with. Our Pledge of Allegiance to the flag acknowledges "One Nation under God." We have heard our colleagues say earlier that our motto, "In God We Trust" is right above the Speaker's chair there tonight. It is also on our coins. Today both the Congress and the Supreme Court invoke God's name and ask his blessings at the opening of their session. And until 1962 there was a widespread practice of allowing prayer in our public schools.

This practice was not performed, I believe, to coerce anyone to any particular beliefs. It is a significant part of our Judeo-Christian beliefs upheld in this country. Prayer was banned from the public schools in 1963 by a Supreme Court decision. Madelyn Murray O'Hair filed the suit which brought about the banning of school prayer in our public schools. She was furious that students had to recite a prayer at the beginning of each day. Now the reference I have is on this little card that I have carried around as to the school prayer that they had to recite. It was: "Almighty God, we acknowledge our dependence upon thee and beg Thy blessings upon us, our parents, our teachers, and our country," followed by a silent period.

Her son, Bill Murray, was a 14-year-old freshman at Woodburn Junior High School in Baltimore. Bill Murray recently revealed in a news conference that his mother's real basis for the suit was her own active commitment to the Communist causes and encouragement from the Soviet Embassy officials. And this same Bill Murray whose name was used in the suit is actively, I might say, fighting to restore voluntary prayer in the schools. And he has exciting testimony and witness to what has gone on.

In 1960, Mrs. O'Hair renounced her American citizenship and tried to emigrate with her two sons. The Soviet Embassy personnel intercepted them in Paris and persuaded this atheist leader to return to the United States where "her efforts on behalf of the world revolution were more needed."

Mrs. O'Hair was involved with the Socialist Workers Party, the Communist Party, the Communist Workers Party, the Fair Play for Cuba Committee, and other organizations of that type.

In fact, to finance her school prayer case up to the Supreme Court, the Communist Party actually provided a job for Mrs. O'Hair, now known as Mrs. Murray. She was the manager of the New E-r-a, New Era Bookshop in Baltimore which her son, Bill Murray, identified as an official bookshop of the Communist Party in the United States. The first amendment of the Constitution provides, "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." This provision was never intended to restrict Americans from making religious observances in the course of their daily lives or was it intended to protect people from religion.

Yet the Supreme Court has drawn a broad and inaccurate conclusion in the Engel, which in 1962, and Shemp in 1963, decisions forbidding a State from fostering prayer or Bible reading by students in public schools.

What this amendment is proposing to do, and I really commend my colleague, Mr. KINDNESS, the text reads, "Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prohibit individual or group prayer in public schools or other public institutions. No person shall be required by the United States or by any State to participate in prayer. Neither United States or any State shall compose the words of any prayer to be said in the public schools."

So the issue is not even this little card that I had this prayer that was recited, because we are saying that this type of thing cannot happen anymore, where a prescribed prayer is said in vain repetition every day. Even as innocuous as this is, I do not see that this would harm anybody and certainly we are not talking about that.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. I totally agree with my colleague from North Carolina. I would like to thank him for his views. We have about 1 minute left to go and I would like to finish, if I could. I appreciate your participation and look forward to working with you on this issue.

I would like to spend this last time by reading a prayer that was declared unconstitutional in the case of Despain versus DeKalb County School District in 1966. Kindergarten children in a public school in DeKalb County, IL, were required by their teacher to recite the following poem before their morning snack:

We thank You for the flowers so sweet,
We thank You for the food we eat,
We thank You for the birds that sing,
We thank You for everything.

Now that was declared unconstitutional. And when we reach the state of affairs that something like that is declared unconstitutional, it is time to amend the Constitution. And I would like to finish this special order by sharing with my colleagues the prayer that I say every evening before I retire for the evening. It is very simple. It is:

"Dear God, give me the wisdom to know the right thing to do, give me the courage to attempt the right thing, and the strength to accomplish it. Amen."

We need the wisdom to determine what is the right thing to do in this issue. We need courage to attempt it, and the strength to accomplish it.

I thank my colleagues.

SCHOOL PRAYER AMENDMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. KINDNESS. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the hour grows late, the expressions that have been made concerning House Joint Resolution No. 279 and Discharge Petition No. 1 are important expressions for all Members of this body to think about, I think, but I would like to just take a moment, as we continue our discussion of those matters, to focus on all of the first amendment to the Constitution, article 1 of the Bill of Rights. Bear in mind that a number of the States, the original States would not ratify the Constitution without an assurance that the First Congress would put forward a Bill of Rights which included, most importantly, the first amendment, which in its final form reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion"—we have heard about that this evening—"or prohibiting the free exercise thereof"—there has been discussion of that—"or abridging the freedom of speech"—and there is much more to be said about that, although it has been mentioned, that is "or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

There in a nutshell are some of the most important concepts that were felt so deeply by leaders in the formulation of our country's Constitution that they were a necessary part of the Bill of Rights before the Constitution would be ratified.

We have heard about the establishment clause, the free exercise clause, and not enough really about the free speech clause. I would like to focus for a moment on the free press clause, the freedom of the press clause.

I think it is incredible that there is such a lack of attention paid by the fourth estate to those elements of the first amendment that have been seriously undermined by Supreme Court decisions and other Federal court decisions concerning school prayer, and most particularly by that decision of the slim majority of the Supreme Court in the Alabama case which has been discussed here earlier; its most recent school prayer case.

It is ironic that an institution that is so ready to take up the call when the basic right of freedom of speech, or press is imperiled would be so reticent to adequately analyze and publicize the potential effect that the Court's recent Alabama decision might have on those rights.

In other words, surrounding the freedom of the press are these issues that we have been discussing right there in the first amendment. In other words, we might also say in common experience, when someone else's ox is being gored, ladies and gentlemen, look out, you are liable to be next.

If the courts are willing to limit the right of freedom of speech in the first amendment, and the right to peaceably assemble, and the right to free exercise of religion, if the words of prayer are involved, if that is the manner of speech, and if the setting where peaceable assembly takes place is a public school setting, then what is next?

What is next in terms of freedom of the press? It is a little hard to imagine that the Court would rule that a newspaper did not have the right to print a prayer, perhaps daily, in its newspaper; on its masthead perhaps.

However, if we allow the deterioration of our constitutional rights, court decision by court decision, then perhaps we will face that prospect in the future.

There is more that can be said about the position of the fourth estate, but I would certainly like to recommend to the members of the fourth estate that they look closely to their freedom of the press in relation to what has happened in court decisions affecting the freedom of speech, the freedom to exercise their religious practices, and the right to peaceably assemble in that part of our Nation's life that involves public schools and words of prayer.

I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBEY].

Mr. COBEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] for bringing this issue forward, having this special order; bringing this constitutional amendment to the attention of this House, and getting the discharge petition moving.

As I said earlier, it is hard to believe that we are even here, but I guess the price of freedom is eternal vigilance, and all of our freedoms are likely to be under attack if we do not reverse what we have here.

Because we have to recognize that this is an open, hostile act; that this has been promoted from day one by people who reject God; athiests, acknowledged atheists. Madelyn Murray O'Hair. They want God out of the public schools.

If you wanted to send this country down a road without God, without acknowledging God, make it an atheist state, that is exactly where you would want to drive out God from would be the public schools.

I would like to warn them when they do that sort of thing that they may in fact destroy our country. Because we have been uniquely blessed by God; this has been acknowledged as one Nation under God ever since its inception, and I think that we ought to recognize that this has been hostile aggression on this country in the form of these suits that the Supreme Court has upheld, and it is essential to the prosperity of our country; spiritually, morally, economically, militarily, whatever; the very survival of our country depends on our acknowledgement of God and it is important that we restore this right to the schools and give these children the opportunity to initiate prayer and Bible study.

This is a right that is protected under the first amendment. They are being discriminated against. As I have heard said recently, this is a students rights issue, and I hope the students of America recognize that, and will speak out. We have case after case after case of where they have been openly discriminated against; not allowed to freely assemble in their schools for prayer and Bible study.

Again, I want to commend my colleague for taking this leadership on this issue, and I am glad to be able to support the gentleman in his effort and sign this discharge petition and get it out of that black hole we call the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. KINDNESS. I thank the gentleman for his participation, his support and his leadership also in this matter, but I trust that the gentleman would agree that there is a law of physics which I think applies also in social conduct, or the interaction between people that says something to the effect that, for every action there is a equal and opposite reaction.

Over the years that I have served in the Congress and that the school prayer issue has been building, I have observed that the equal and opposite reaction has been dispersed, as Supreme Court decisions and other Federal court decisions have come along, further restricting the free exercise of religion.

I think we have seen that if there is an equal and opposite reaction, it has been spread out and not brought together. I think the Supreme Court's decision in the recent case coming out of Alabama has brought forth the coalescence of those who are greatly concerned and deeply and conscientiously interested in this issue so that we are going to get that equal and opposite reaction concentrated; that is what we have been missing.

The time is at hand, I think, for us to really pull it together, all of those various elements that have been perhaps dispersed in recent years. We have now got a focus that is much clearer.

I might mention that there was a time in this House of Representatives when my colleague from Ohio, CHALMERS WYLIE had gotten the school prayer issue to a vote in the House. It was different, a constitutional amendment. In fact, many thought it was flawed in its wording.

I have to believe that it was not perfect and it failed of passage because many could not support it in its form at that time.

This proposed constitutional amendment has been so thoroughly worked over by legal scholars, by theologians and religious leaders and people of all walks of life who are interested in the subject that I think we finally have another part of the puzzle put together, a coalescence of support behind that approach.

Let me just take one more moment to make a comparison. With all due respect to those who support a constitutional amendment that would provide for the freedom of meditation, silent meditation, that would be limiting our freedom of speech guaranteed in the first amendment. We would be constitutionally reducing our first amendment rights. I do not support that approach. Those who do I am sure do so in good conscience. But they do so without regard to our first amendment right of free speech. That, I think, is too important to pass up.

I would yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DELAY. I thank the gentleman from Ohio mainly for his courage and work in developing and writing his constitutional amendment and staying up at this late hour. It is now 10:20 in the evening. And I asked myself as I was standing here: Why are so many Members of Congress staying up so late at night on such an issue?

And I think it brings out many, many issues. If I may, trying to summarize a little bit about what I have heard this evening and get a little philosophical and a little more basic and fundamental about what we are talking about, the gentleman from Ohio has pointed out in the Constitution that our freedom of religion and our freedom of voluntary prayer in schools are based on freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion. And I think it gets even more basic that that.

Why are we up at this late hour, so dedicated to such a basic premise of freedom? And that is what we are talking about here—freedom. I do not know whether we are really talking about prayer in schools. I think we have coalesced around prayer in schools, but it is more basic than that, and it comes down to freedom and not only freedom but the Constitution, and it comes down to, I think, ever since 1936 in the Butler case, a total disregard of our Constitution. This Congress, the Supreme Court and indeed the President of the United States have all disregarded the Constitution and the rules by which we play.

When you go out there and play on the football field, what kind of a game would it be if we did not play by the rules? And ever since 1936, when the Supreme Court, stacked by FDR, decided that whatever, under the Constitution and the statement "the common good," whatever the Congress decided, that is good in the common good of the people of America. And we come back to that one premise. We have spent money, we have developed programs in violation of our constitutional rights, and now we have pulled away one of the basic freedoms that founded this great, great country of ours, and that is our freedom to express ourselves in whatever religion we are talking about.

Is it not sad that Americans right now are fighting for their religious freedom against their own Government, whether it be the Supreme Court or this Congress because we cannot get a constitutional amendment to this floor to be voted on? It really is a testimony of where we have come from since 1936 and that we do not have the ability to play by the rules and we have to fight and stay up at these late hours fighting to bring your amendment to this floor. It is a sad day for Americans when we have to fight our own Government. We are just talking about freedom. We are not talking about creating a government religion. We are not talking about making it the Baptist religion of the United States of America or the Methodist religion of the United States of America. We just want to be able to practice our religion wherever we deem and see fit.

If I want to put up a nativity scene in the courthouse in Houston, TX, I should have the freedom to do that, and I should not have the right to stop someone else from putting up a Star of David or someone celebrating the Koran in that same courthouse.

It was just recently that we—"we" being members of Harris County, in Houston, TX—wanted to dedicate a park to our Vietnam veterans, and part of the monuments of this park were crosses and Stars of David. People who see fit in restricting our freedom, the ACLU, in particular, came along and sued us and stopped us from dedicating a park to our veterans of the Vietnam era. What was so sinister about dedicating a park to our veterans of the Vietnam war, even though we put up crosses and Stars of David to commemorate those who died for our freedom in Vietnam?

What is so bad about a little child praying in school? The Boy Scouts of America recently, in their own creeds and oaths, being violated by a court. Just recently I saw on television, I think it was yesterday, that a Boy Scout decided that he would refuse to use the Lord's name in the oath of the Boy Scouts, and our own Government is coming to the Boy Scouts and saying you have to remove those kinds of names or you have to let this boy into Boy Scouts, a private organization. That is now far it is going. I think it is a sad day in America when we do not have the freedom to exercise our religion wherever we want to exercise it.

We are not talking about shoving religion down children's throats. We are talking about basic freedom that this country was built on.

If I may take just 1 more minute, and I may be criticized for this, I think the Constitution was divinely inspired, because there are stories that are told about the writing of our Constitution back when, and they came to an impasse, and Benjamin Franklin—well, I have to back up a little bit. You had to pay preachers at that time to pray, and the Constitutional Convention had no money, so they could not pay preachers to open the Constitutional Convention every day, so they went on, among themselves, and they came to an impasse, and it seemed that it was all over and they could not write the rules under which to govern themselves. And Benjamin Franklin stood up and said, "Let's all go home and pray to the Almighty God that we may be able to write this Constitution for the good of mankind in the future." They did. They went home and they prayed, and the Constitution was finished in 3 weeks and ratified within a year.

It just goes to show you that our country was built on religion, whether it be Christianity or Judaism, or whatever it is. It is built on the freedom to express ourselves to some moral being or some truth, all truth, whatever you call that. And when individuals come and try to destroy that for Americans, I think it is a travesty to this country and it also points out that we are trying to destroy the basic freedoms provided to us by the Constitution because we have total disregard about our Constitution.

In going to many town meetings that I have held every month in my district, people are asking me, "Well, we sent you there, but what else can we do? What can we do?" And those Americans who are watching this special order and watching the courage of the gentleman from Ohio, I tell them that if they really want to do something, if they really want to make an effect, if they really want their freedom back, then they should write their Congressman—and I think the gentleman from Ohio will agree with me—and demand that their Congressman sign this discharge petition so that we can bring basic freedoms back to the American people.

Mr. KINDNESS. I thank the gentleman very much. I acknowledge that fact that under the rules and operations of the House of Representatives it is not always easy for Members to make the decision that they should, to sign a discharge petition. But I think it is abundantly clear that House Joint Resolution No. 279 will not come to the floor for consideration without a discharge petition procedure. It requires 218 signatures of Members. But there is nothing heretical about signing a discharge petition. It is my belief that there are among the Members of the House of Representatives many who are fairminded people who will sign the discharge petition even though they may not be persuaded that they would vote for the adoption of House Joint Resolution No. 279.

In the belief that it must be debated, it must be considered, and it must be voted upon. Fairmindedness, and we hear so much about fairness in the political arena these days, fairness certainly includes allowing such an important subject to be decided upon by the elected Representatives of the people from throughout this country.

Discharge Petition No. 1 sits at the Clerk's desk awaiting the signatures of about 203 more Members. I think what people can do throughout this country is to persuade their elected Representative that they should be among those signing Discharge Petition No. 1.

Whether they believe that House Joint Resolution 279 should be adopted by the House of Representatives or not, in fairness, it should be debated and voted upon. Our courts have their part of a three-part government to conduct. I respect our court system as I do our Constitution, and I respect those who earnestly endeavor in the Federal judiciary to reach the right decisions. But they are not infallible.

In the present circumstances that we are discussing, the only way for their judgment, that is a judgment of the majority of the Members of the Supreme Court to be changed or overridden is by a constitutional amendment. That is why it is necessary. It is not through disrespect for Federal judges or for the Federal judiciary system. But it is only one of three parts of our Government. A system that is ingenious in the way that it was established in our Constitution.

The Congress and the President together enact legislation. Or the Congress can do it alone by overriding the veto of a President. The courts are there to interpret and apply the law and the Constitution. I cannot agree that they have done so correctly in some of the decisions affecting school prayer. The infallibility of the courts is not in question, because they are fallible. They are human institutions.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DELAY. If the gentleman would permit me, they are humans that sit on that court, and sometimes we let our own prejudices come out no matter who we are, and I agree with that. But would it not be a wonderful day and I think the gentleman would agree that over the years, and I have only been here a short time, the gentleman has been here a long time. Over the years, you have seen when the people want something bad enough, if they write enough letters, things will change.

Just recently, around February, there was an overwhelming letter writing campaign on what seems to be a small issue and that was contemporaneous recordkeeping. This Congress was inundated with letters against contemporaneous recordkeeping. It was passed by both Houses and signed by the President in less than 60 days.

A year ago, for instance, the Harris poll indicated that 60 percent of the surveyed population favored a constitutional amendment to allow us the freedom to exercise our religion. It was recently sustained by a poll a few months ago, that the entire poll sample, 61 percent, supported religious freedom. If only that 61 percent of the Nation would write their Congressman, I think the gentleman would agree that this amendment and religious freedom would come to the floor of this House immediately.

Mr. KINDNESS. It is a matter in which the people throughout this country play the most important role as usual; if they will but act, I think we will see the kind of action that needs to be taken in this House of Representatives on this issue.

I thank the gentleman so much for his participation at this late hour this evening.

Mr. Speaker, I have two kinds of discomfort inside me this evening: one is the lack of dinner, and the other is a hunger for the opportunity to have this matter debated before this House of Representatives and I feel confident that we will reach that goal through diligence and hard work and the help of the American people getting their elected Representatives on board as a part of this effort.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to discuss the incredible lack of attention paid by the fourth estate to those elements of the first amendment that have been seriously undermined by the Supreme Court's recent school prayer decision.

It's ironic that an institution that is so ready to take up the call when the basic right of freedom of speech is imperiled would be so reticent to adequately analyze the potential effect that the Court's recent decision might have on that right.

One need only focus on the language of the first amendment to see that it guarantees the free exercise of religion, the freedom of speech, the freedom of the press and the right to peaceably assemble. The scribes, who freely debate the issues of the day on the pages of our Nation's newspapers, sit idly by while fundamental rights that are similarly situated, in the Constitution and conceptually, are routinely infringed on by the Federal courts.

Is the right to free exercise of religion protected by a Supreme Court that declares words of prayer to be illegal? Is the right to free speech protected by a Supreme Court that says that words of prayer are not sanctioned under the Constitution when said in the confines of a public school? Is the right to peaceably assemble protected by a Supreme Court that denies that right to our schoolchildren? Is the fourth estate oblivious to these infringements. Perhaps they'll react when the Supreme Court rules that the right to a free press is limited when the words to be printed are those of a prayer.

It would seem to me though that our first amendment rights are in danger and that the journalism profession is one that has as much to lose as anyone if such limits are allowed to remain the law of the land. The conceptual proximity of those rights, curtailed by the Court's decisions, to freedom of the press and the failure of the fourth estate to champion those rights raises serious questions as to how sincere the national community of journalists is about protecting those rights as a matter of principle.

I would ask my friends in the fourth estate to look closely at the language of the first amendment and to consider how their freedom of the press will look 20 years from now if the present trend goes unchecked. I submit that it would be well worth their time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

PRESIDENT OF TIME INC. CALLS EXCESSIVE MILITARY SPENDING THE ROAD TO ECONOMIC RUIN

(Mr. SEIBERLING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I recently obtained a copy of a speech delivered by J. Richard Munro, the president and chief executive officer of Time, Inc., to the Robins School of Business of the University of Richmond, on April 10, 1985. Charging that U.S. military spending has gotten out of control, Mr. Munro called upon American business executives to bring "the same critical judgment to bear on defense policies as we do to our own corporate policies." The alternative is economic stagnation and ultimately less military strength, he said.

Mr. Munro noted that defense spending in constant dollars is now as high as it was at the height of the Korean war and the Vietnam war and by 1990 will be a third more than it was in either war. He added that if the economy falters and growth falls short, the defense share could easily reach 10 percent of GNP.

The effect of the increasing militarization of our economy will be to "find guns winning not only over butter—but over factories and machinery, capital formation, and skilled labor supplies." The effect of the severe cuts in education and human service programs is that "we are disinvesting in people, disinvesting in our future work force," he said. He went on to note that the share of GNP spent on education in America has fallen steadily from a peak of 8 percent in 1975 to an estimated 6 percent next year, yet "education is hands-down the single most important engine of productivity growth."

Worse yet, Mr. Munro notes, military projects are absorbing an increasing share of resources like industrial capacity, research and development funds, and scientists, engineers, and technicians. While the Japanese are marshalling their research laboratories to take on our computer and other high-technology industries, our research laboratories are making new weapons.

In addition to reforms in defense procurement and staffing and the military retirement system, Mr. Munro concludes that the most important need is the achievement of mutual arms reduction agreements to stop the arms race with the Soviet Union. This conclusion has seemed obvious to many of us for a long time. Perhaps these words of a hardheaded businessman will begin to penetrate the thinking of those conservatives who have up until now been favoring more and more military spending.

Mr. Speaker, the full text of Mr. Munro's address follows these remarks:

REMARKS BY J. RICHARD MUNRO

Thank you for the kind introduction. I'm delighted to be here, for what is now my third visit to this campus as CEO of Time Inc. There's something about a polite invitation that I find irresistible.

Being here also reminds me of something that happened recently in a third world country.

Rebels had captured three businessmen—one French, one Japanese, and one American. They decided to execute them all. But first they gave each a last wish.

The French businessman asked to sing "La Marseillaise" for one last time. The Japanese businessman asked to give a lecture on Japanese management.

But when it came his turn, the American broke into tears and begged, "Shoot me first, I can't stand another lecture on Japanese management."

In keeping with that spirit, I promise not to talk about Japanese management or related subjects.

Instead, I want to talk about a different challenge. It might seem remote from daily business concerns. But it's crucial to our continued success in business and to our prosperity as a nation.

That's the problem of U.S. defense policy—especially military spending.

It's simply gotten out of control. And if we don't control it, we will reap a bitter harvest of waste and mismanagement, economic stagnation, and ultimately less military strength than we have now.

The stakes for American business are high. And business executives need to bring the same critical judgment to bear on defense policies as we do to our own corporate policies.

Let me begin with some recent history.

Defense spending since World War II has accounted for a large share of our national wealth, rising during wartime and falling during peacetime.

Defense spending in constant dollars now is as high as it was at the height of the Korean War and the Vietnam War. By 1990 it will be a third more than it was in either war.

By the late 1970s, spending rose again, and has taken off sharply since the Reagan Administration began what has become the equivalent of a wartime military buildup.

Put another way, we've already spent a trillion dollars on defense since 1980. And in the next five years, we'll spend another $1.8 trillion.

Military spending in 1990 will take about 8 percent of our GNP, nearly as high a percentage as the peak Vietnam years.

Moreover, that share of GNP assumes that the Reagan Administration's economic forecast of endless economic growth will come true. If the economy falters, and growth falls short, the defense share could easily reach 9 or 10 percent of GNP.

In short, under current leadership, we have the equivalent of a wartime spending policy. Our economy is being increasingly militarized.

And the more we pursue these policies, we will find guns winning not only over butter—but over factories and machinery, capital formation, and skilled labor supplies.

Now, you may ask, isn't all this necessary to confront the Soviet military buildup? Especially after years of declining spending?

Yes, the Vietnam War drained our military resources in losing battles, at the expenses of our readiness everywhere else. We had major deficiencies which were painfully obvious by the late 1970s.

But the rebuilding of our military strength was already underway, with spending growth at sustainable rates, before President Reagan took office.

At the same time, ironically, Soviet military spending growth has been declining. Despite dire warnings from the Pentagon each year at budget time, the CIA estimates that recent real growth of Soviet military spending has been around 2 percent annually.

The answer, then, is, yes, that we needed to rebuild our defenses. But that we didn't need to hit the panic button, which is what happened. And we don't need to obligate ourselves to such enormous future costs.

Current budget estimates don't include such things as cost overruns we can reasonably expect on new weapons. They probably underestimate future operating and upkeep costs for such things as the 600-ship navy we are building.

Moreover, we have shifted priorities so that we are underpreparing to fight a conventional war and overprepared for a nuclear war. We are also wasting a lot of money because of simple mismanagement.

Plainly, we will squander much of the three trillion dollars we're spending in this decade—unless we have a thorough overhaul of defense policies. That overhaul isn't yet in the cards, however.

We have already seen a small part of the defense procurement mess. We have enormous cost overruns already in projects like the B-1 bomber—weapons that are worthless because they are too complicated—or that simply don't work—and even outright fraud by some defense contractors.

Also, we can already see the enormous and unnecessary burden that military personnel policies are becoming.

For example, the military retirement system is a tremendous problem—not just because of direct costs—but also because it results in our most productive officers and noncoms retiring just when they hit their stride.

Imagine a company that retired at half-pay most of its career managers and skilled workers at age 41, after spending millions of dollars each to train many of them.

Imagine a company that has to set aside half of its base salaries for future pension costs. The average for U.S. companies is about 10 percent.

Imagine a company in which five out of six of its pensioners are younger than 65, and two-thirds are working fulltime, often at the same job they had in uniform, collecting a pension and a paycheck, or working for outside defense contractors.

That's how the military retirement system works today.

Consider the benefits for a typical lieutenant colonel who retires today at age 42. He can expect to live another 35 years. By my calculations, he'll get nearly $1.5 million, assuming the pension keeps pace with a modest rate of inflation.

That doesn't include free medical care, cut-rate groceries and shopping, and subsidized officers' clubs.

In short, the system stinks.

At this point, you may be asking yourself why I'm not talking about the communications industry or something more directly related to your future business careers.

Well, I have been talking about your future—and everybody else's.

The defense buildup is taking place as if it were in a vacuum—and had nothing to do with the rest of our economic and social needs. Yet it can—and will—cause severe economic dislocations affecting every industry in America.

Let me put it this way: The shift toward more military spending in the 1980s will change our economy as deeply as the oil price explosion changed us in the 1970s—beginning with the share of GNP which it is taking from the rest of our economy.

Consider the massive shift already in federal budget priorities. Think of that as a mirror into the future which shows what the rest of our economy will be like.

For example, we have severely cut education and human services programs, and state governments are following suit. In effect, we are disinvesting in people, disinvesting in our future work force.

As this happens, we should ask, where will all the skilled workers come from to help us fulfill the optimistic Administration forecasts for future prosperity?

They don't just walk out of the woods and into the front doors of our offices and factories.

They came up through our system of schools and colleges, public and private. They received nutrition and health care that keeps their bodies whole. Their families received aid to keep them housed and clothed. They get help—these are not just poor kids, either—at every step by public spending programs which have in the last half-century helped create the world's most productive work force.

It's an expensive system. But as Derek Bok, president of Harvard, once said, "If you think education is expensive, try ignorance."

As we've often heard, there's no free lunch. We won't be the most productive much longer, if we keep doing what we're doing now.

The share of GNP spent on education in America has fallen steadily from a peak of 8 percent in 1975 to an estimated 6 percent next year. And education is hands-down the single most important engine of productivity growth.

In other words, the "butter" we're neglecting today for the sake of guns is more than an expendable condiment. Our neglect of education and human services will put a heavy burden on business in the future in the form of shortages of skilled labor, lagging productivity growth, and inflationary pressures.

Moreover, military projects are absorbing an increasing share of resources like industrial capacity, research and development funds, and scientists, engineers, and technicians.

While the Japanese are marshalling their research laboratories to take on our computer and other high-technology industries, our research laboratories are making new weapons.

Not only that, we can already see the results of this tradeoff between national productivity and military spending.

In the last 20 years, U.S. defense spending averaged 7½ percent of GNP, while manufacturing productivity rose an average of 2½ percent in each of those years.

Great Britain spent an average of 5½ percent on defense, while its productivity rose 3½ percent a year. West Germany spent 4 percent on defense, while its productivity rose 5½ percent.

And Japan, which spent less than 1 percent, enjoyed a 9 percent annual increase in manufacturing productivity—year after year, in its relentless expansion into world markets.

It's no coincidence that, in those years, Japan has amassed trade surpluses that are the envy of the OPEC oil producers, that five out of the top 10 international banks are now Japanese, and that its GNP sometime this year will surpass the GNP of the Soviet Union.

Also, the defense buildup reaches even more deeply as a direct cause of our massive federal deficits. It's not the only cause, of course. The over-generous tax cuts must share the blame. But everything else comes in a distant second.

The budget deficits and high interest rates in turn have caused a huge trade deficit, which has cost two million American manufacturing jobs already, and maybe another two million more in a few years.

For the first time since World War I, we are no longer a net creditor nation. We're becoming a net debtor this year. Next year, at the current rate, our foreign debt will be larger than Brazil's. And a year after that, our debt will be bigger than Brazil's, Argentina's and Mexico's combined.

Beginning now, instead of living beyond our means, supported by net overseas earnings, we will be living below our means to pay our creditors back.

More and more of our business decisions will be made in Tokyo and London, and not New York or Washington.

In the words of Blanche DuBois, we'll depend on the kindness of strangers for our standard of living.

Now, I happen to believe that problems like these are meant to be solved. And I think that we can, given the concern and the will to do it.

We can begin by following the advice of the Business Roundtable, which has advocated a return to 3 percent real growth in defense spending in the next few years.

The President and Senate Republicans took a small, tentative step toward that last week in announcing defense budget cuts, among many others.

But I think we must go further by setting goals of, say, 5 or 6 percent of GNP for defense, matched by thorough reforms. They should include a brandnew procurement system, a hard look at the effectiveness of new weapons, cutting back the number of officers on active duty, and retirement system reforms.

There's no earthly reason why we can't have a strong national defense on a budget that amounts to less in real dollars than we spent in each of our last two wars.

Most important, we need mutual arms reduction agreements to stop the arms race now underway with the Soviet Union.

Both of us have had enough military might to destroy each other, and the world with us, for many years. It's time to come to our senses and to bargain seriously for new arms control agreements.

In closing, if all these matters seem remote and arcane to you, they shouldn't be.

A poster I saw recently showed a dressed-for-success Yuppie looking out her window, exclaiming, "Oh no, nuclear war! There goes my career!"

That's an overstatement, of course. But your future, the future of American business, and of our society is tied very closely to what we decide in the next few years about the role of defense spending and the military in our country.

I say that we strike a new balance, that we begin to appreciate how a more rational approach can yield a more prosperous America and a stronger national defense.

A quarter-century ago, President Eisenhower had this to say, "There is no safety in arms alone. Our security is the total product of our economic, intellectual, military, and moral strength."

That applies just as well today, and I urge you to inform yourself and to get involved in solving this key problem for our future.

Thank you.●

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2068

Mr. MICA submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 2068) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 99-240)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2068) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Department of State, the United States Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

(3) by amending subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d) If an individual eligible for health care under this section incurs an illness, injury, or medical condition which requires treatment while assigned to a post abroad or located overseas pursuant to Government authorization, the Secretary may pay the cost of such treatment.".

SEC. 123. FOREIGN SERVICE INSTITUTE FACILITIES.

(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to promote comprehensive training to meet the foreign relations and national security objectives of the United States and to provide facilities designed for that purpose to assure cost efficient training.

(b) CONSTRUCTION OF TRAINING FACILITIES.—The Administrator of General Services may construct a consolidated training facility for the Foreign Service Institute on a site made available by the Secretary of State or acquired by the Administrator of General Services. Such site shall be located outside the District of Columbia but within reasonable proximity to the Department of State. The Administrator of General Services may carry out this subsection only to the extent that funds are provided in advance in appropriation Acts to the Department of State and are transferred to the Administrator of General Services for carrying out this section.

(c) USE OF FUNDS.—(1) Of amounts authorized to be appropriated to the Department of State for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for "Administration of Foreign Affairs" by section 101(1), a total of not to exceed $11,000,000 may be transferred by the Secretary of State to the Administrator of General Services for carrying out feasibility studies, site acquisition, and design, architectural, and engineering planning under subsection (b) of this section.

(2) Of amounts authorized to be appropriated to the Department of State for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1987, for "Administration of Foreign Affairs", a total not to exceed $50,000,000 may be transferred by the Secretary of State to the Administrator of General Services for carrying out construction under subsection (b) of this section.

(3) Funds may not be obligated for construction of a facility under this section before the end of the period of 30 days of continuous session of Congress beginning on the date on which plans and estimates developed to carry out this section are submitted to the Committees on Foreign Affairs and Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Foreign Relations and Environment and Public Works of the Senate. In determining days of continuous session of Congress for purposes of this paragraph—

(A) continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment of Congress sine die; and

(B) the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain are excluded in the determination.

If both Houses of Congress are not in session on the day any plans and estimates are submitted to such committees, such submittal shall be deemed to have been submitted on the first succeeding day on which both Houses are in session. If all such committees do not receive a submittal on the same day, such period shall not begin until the date on which all such committees have received it.

(d) JURISDICTION AND CUSTODY.—The facility constructed under this section and the site of such facility shall be under jurisdiction and in the custody of the Administrator of General Services.

(e) OPERATION, MAINTENANCE, SECURITY, ALTERATION, AND REPAIR.—(1) The Administrator of General Services shall delegate, in accordance with section 205 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 486) and section 15 of the Public Buildings Act of 1959 (40 U.S.C. 614), to the Secretary of State responsibility for the operation, maintenance, and security of and alterations and repairs to the facility constructed pursuant to this section, provided the facility is used by the Secretary for the purposes authorized by this section.

(2) Not later than three months after occupancy of such facility, the Secretary of State and the Administrator of General Services shall each submit a report to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives, and to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate, on the delegation of responsibility, pursuant to paragraph (1), for the operation, maintenance, and security of and alterations and repairs to the facility constructed pursuant to this section.

(f) EXEMPTION FROM PAYMENT OF CHARGES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Department of State shall be exempt from the charges required by section 210(j) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 490(j)) for the use of the facility constructed under this section for the Foreign Service Institute.

(2) The Administrator of General Services shall charge the Department of State under such section 210(j) for the costs of any operation, maintenance, repairs, or alterations of such facility carried out by the Administrator of General Services.

SEC. 124. INTERNATIONAL CENTER.

The International Center Act is amended—

(1) in section 2—

(A) by striking out "Administrator of General Services" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary of State, in consultation with the Administrator of General Services,"; and

(B) by striking out "conveyed pursuant to" and inserting in lieu thereof "described in"; and

(A) by redesignating clauses (a) through (e) as clauses (1) through (5), respectively, and by redesignating clause (f) as clause (7);

(B) by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 4.";

(C) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (5), as redesignated by subparagraph (A), and inserting after such clause (5) the following: "(6) facilities for security and maintenance, and"; and

(D) by adding at the end of such section the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary of State shall periodically advise the Committees on Foreign Affairs and Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate on construction of facilities for security or maintenance under this section.".

SEC. 125. SPECIAL AGENTS.

(a) AUTHORITY RELATING TO INVESTIGATIONS, PROTECTION, ARRESTS, AND CARRYING FIREARMS.—Title I of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 is amended by redesignating section 37 as section 38 and by inserting the following new section 37 after section 36:

"SEC. 37. SPECIAL AGENTS.

"(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Under such regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, special agents of the Department of State and the Foreign Service may—

"(1) conduct investigations concerning illegal passport or visa issuance or use;

"(2) for the purpose of conducting such investigations—

"(A) obtain and execute search and arrest warrants, and

"(B) obtain and serve subpoenas and summonses issued under the authority of the United States;

"(3) protect and perform protective functions directly related to maintaining the security and safety of—

"(A) heads of a foreign state, official representatives of a foreign government, and other distinguished visitors to the United States, while in the United States;

"(B) the Secretary of State, Deputy Secretary of State, and official representatives of the United States Government, in the United States or abroad;

"(C) members of the immediate family of persons described in subparagraph (A) or (B); and

"(D) foreign missions (as defined in section 202(a)(4) of this Act) and international organizations (as defined in section 209(b) of this Act), within the United States;

"(4) if designated by the Secretary and qualified, under regulations approved by the Attorney General, for the use of firearms, carry firearms for the purpose of performing the duties authorized by this section; and

"(5) arrest without warrant any person for a violation of section 111, 112, 351, 911, 970, 1001, 1028, 1541, 1542, 1543, 1544, 1545, or 1546 of title 18, United States Code—

"(A) in the case of a felony violation, if the special agent has reasonable grounds to believe that such person—

"(i) has committed or is committing such violation; and

"(ii) is in or is fleeing from the immediate area of such violation; and

"(B) in the case of a felony or misdemeanor violation, if the violation is committed in the presence of the special agent.

"(b) AGREEMENT WITH ATTORNEY GENERAL AND FIREARMS REGULATIONS.—

"(1) AGREEMENT WITH ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The authority conferred by paragraphs (1), (2), (4), and (5) of subsection (a) shall be exercised subject to an agreement with the Attorney General and shall not be construed to affect the investigative authority of any other Federal law enforcement agency.

"(2) FIREARMS REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of State shall prescribe regulations, which shall be approved by the Attorney General, with respect to the carrying and use of firearms by special agents under this section.

"(c) SECRET SERVICE NOT AFFECTED.—Nothing in subsection (a)(3) shall be construed to preclude or limit in any way the authority of the United States Secret Service to provide protective services pursuant to section 202 of title 3, United States Code, or section 3056 of title 18, United States Code, at a level commensurate with protective requirements as determined by the United States Secret Service. The Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall enter into an interagency agreement with respect to their law enforcement functions.

"(d) TRANSMISSION OF REGULATIONS TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary of State shall transmit the regulations prescribed under this section to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate not less than 20 days before the date on which such regulations take effect.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 32 of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 2704) is amended by striking out "security officers" and inserting in lieu thereof "special agents".

(c) REPEAL OF EXISTING AUTHORITY.—Section 4 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide authority to protect heads of foreign states and other officials" approved August 27, 1964 (22 U.S.C. 2667), and the Act entitled "An Act to authorize certain officers and employees of the Department of State and the Foreign Service to carry firearms" approved June 28, 1955 (22 U.S.C. 2666), are repealed.

SEC. 126. EXTRAORDINARY PROTECTIVE SERVICES FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

"SEC. 214. EXTRAORDINARY PROTECTIVE SERVICES.

"(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary may provide extraordinary protective services for foreign missions directly, by contract, or through State or local authority to the extent deemed necessary by the Secretary in carrying out this title, except that the Secretary may not provide under this section any protective services for which authority exists to provide such services under sections 202(7) and 208 of title 3, United States Code.

"(b) REQUIREMENT OF EXTRAORDINARY CIRCUMSTANCES.—The Secretary may provide funds to a State or local authority for protective services under this section only if the Secretary has determined that a threat of violence, or other circumstances, exists which requires extraordinary security measures which exceed those which local law enforcement agencies can reasonably be expected to take.

"(c) CONSULTATION WITH CONGRESS BEFORE OBLIGATION OF FUNDS.—Funds may be obligated under this section only after regulations to implement this section have been issued by the Secretary after consultation with appropriate committees of the Congress.

"(d) RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF FUNDS.—Of the funds made available for obligation under this section in any fiscal year—

"(1) not more than 20 percent may be obligated for protective services within any single State during that year; and

"(2) not less than 15 percent shall be retained as a reserve for protective services provided directly by the Secretary or for expenditures in local jurisdictions not otherwise covered by an agreement for protective services under this section.

The limitations on funds available for obligation in this subsection shall not apply to unobligated funds during the final quarter of any fiscal year.

"(e) PERIOD OF AGREEMENT WITH STATE OR LOCAL AUTHORITY.—Any agreement with a State or local authority for the provision of protective services under this section shall be for a period of not to exceed 90 days in any calendar year, but such agreements may be renewed after review by the Secretary.

"(f) REQUIREMENT FOR APPROPRIATIONS.—Contracts may be entered into in carrying out this section only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

"(g) WORKING CAPITAL FUND.—Amounts used to carry out this section shall not be subject to section 208(h).".

(b) SECRET SERVICE NOT AFFECTED.—Section 204(e) of such Act (22 U.S.C. 4304(e)) is amended by striking out "section" and inserting in lieu thereof "title".

(c) AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE CERTAIN PROTECTIVE SERVICES BY CONTRACT.—Section 208(a) of title 3, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The Secretary of Treasury may carry out the functions pursuant to section 202(7) by contract.".

(d) REPEAL OF EXISTING AUTHORITY.—Section 605 of the Foreign Missions Amendments Act of 1983 (97 Stat. 1042) is repealed.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

SEC. 127. PROTECTING UNITED STATES INTERESTS UNDER THE FOREIGN MISSIONS ACT.

(a) DETERMINATIONS RELATING TO TREATMENT TO FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Section 201(c) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 4301(c)) is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof ", as well as matters relating to the protection of the interests of the United States".

(b) EXPANDING THE DEFINITION OF FOREIGN MISSION.—Section 202(a)(4) of such Act (22 U.S.C. 4302(a)(4)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "official mission to" and inserting in lieu thereof "mission to or agency in"; and

(2) by inserting before the comma at the end of subparagraph (B) "or which engages in some aspect of the conduct of the international affairs of such territory or political entity".

(c) CLARIFYING THAT THE SECRETARY CAN REQUIRE A FOREIGN MISSION TO FOREGO A BENEFIT.—Section 204(b) of such Act (22 U.S.C. 4304(b)) is amended by inserting "to forego the acceptance, use, or relation of any benefit or" after "(B)".

(d) CONSIDERATIONS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.—Section 205(b) of such Act (22 U.S.C. 4305(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) where otherwise necessary to protect the interests of the United States.".

(e) MANDATORY NOTIFICATION WITH RESPECT TO REAL PROPERTY DEALINGS OF FOREIGN MISSION.—Section 205(a)(1) of such Act (22 U.S.C. 4305(a)(1)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence, by striking out "may" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall";

(2) in the first sentence, by inserting ", including any mission to an international organization (as defined in section 209(b)(2))," after "foreign mission"; and

(3) in the second sentence, by striking out "If such a notification is required, the" and inserting in lieu thereof "The".

SEC. 128. PEACEFUL RESOLUTION OF INTERNATIONAL DISPUTES.

Title I of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (as amended by section 125 of this Act) is further amended by redesignating section 38 as section 39 and inserting after section 37 the following new section 38:

"SEC. 38. EXPENSES RELATING TO PARTICIPATION IN ARBITRATIONS OF CERTAIN DISPUTES.

"(a) INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS.—The Secretary of State may use funds available to the Secretary for the expenses of United States participation in arbitrations and other proceedings for the peaceful resolution of disputes under treaties or other international agreements.

"(b) CONTRACTS ABROAD.—The Secretary of State may use funds available to the Secretary for the expenses of United States participation in arbitrations arising under contracts authorized by law for the performance of services or acquisition of property, real or personal, abroad.".

SEC. 129. FURNISHING OF EXCESS GOVERNMENT-OWNED PROPERTY BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(1) in subsection (c)—

(A) by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) as subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C), respectively;

(B) by striking out "(c) No" and inserting in lieu thereof "(c)(1) Except as provided in subsection (d), no"; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) For purposes of transferring property described in this subsection in furtherance of the provisions of chapter 8 of part I of this Act, the phrase 'the agency administering such part I' shall be considered to refer to the Department of State."; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(d) The Secretary of State, acting through the Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs, is authorized to transfer to any friendly country, international organization, the American Red Cross, or other voluntary nonprofit relief agency described in subsection (a), Government-owned excess property made available under this section or section 608 in order to support activities carried out under part I of this Act which are designed to enhance environmental protection in foreign countries if the Secretary of State makes a written determination—

"(1) that there is a need for such property in the quantity requested and that such property is suitable for the purpose requested;

"(2) as to the status and responsibility of the designated end-user and his ability effectively to use and maintain such property; and

"(3) that the residual value, serviceability, and appearance of such property would not reflect unfavorably on the image of the United States and would justify the costs of packing, crating, handling, transportation, and other accessorial costs, and that the residual value at least equals the total of these costs.".

SEC. 130. OFFICIAL RESIDENCE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW.—It is the sense of the Congress that the United States should not accept a gift of any house or other place of residence for the purpose of providing an official residence for the Secretary of State unless the Congress has had an opportunity to review the proposed gift.

(b) STUDY AND REPORT.—The Secretary of State shall conduct a study of any offer of a gift for the purpose of providing a place of official residence for the Secretary of State. Such study shall include an examination of the costs to the United States associated with accepting such gift, including the costs of acquisition, maintenance, security, and daily operation of a residence. The Secretary shall report the results of any study conducted under this section to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate.

SEC. 131. STRENGTHENING THE PERSONNEL SYSTEM OF THE BUREAU OF INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS MATTERS.

No later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall report to the Congress on the status of proposals implemented or under consideration to improve the staffing and personnel management in the Bureau of International Narcotics Matters. This report shall explicitly discuss whether a narcotics specialist personnel category in the Foreign Service is an appropriate mechanism to serve these purposes and, if not, what alternatives are contemplated.

SEC. 132. SHARING OF INFORMATION CONCERNING DRUG TRAFFICKERS.

(a) REPORTING SYSTEMS.—In order to ensure that foreign narcotics traffickers are denied visas to enter the United States, as required by section 212(a)(23) of the Immigration and Naturalization Act (22 U.S.C. 1182(a)(23))—

(1) the Department of State shall cooperate with United States law enforcement agencies, including the Drug Enforcement Administration and the United States Customs Service, in establishing a comprehensive information system on all drug arrests of foreign nationals in the United States, so that that information may be communicated to the appropriate United States embassies; and

(2) the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board shall agree on uniform guidelines which would permit the sharing of information on foreign drug traffickers.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Chairman of the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board shall submit a report to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate on the steps taken to implement this section.

SEC. 133. EXTRADITION TREATIES.

The Secretary of State, with the assistance of the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board, shall increase United States efforts to negotiate updated extradition treaties relating to narcotics offenses with each major drug-producing country, particularly those in Latin America.

SEC. 134. RECOMMENDATION OF A TRAVEL ADVISORY ON THE STATE OF JALISCO, MEXICO.

(a) VIOLENCE AGAINST AMERICANS.—The Congress—

(1) deplores the brutal murder of Drug Enforcement Administration agent Enrique Camarena Salazar, and the abduction and disappearance of numerous other Americans, including John Clay Walker, Alberto Radelat, Dennis Carlson, Rose Carlson, Benjamin Mascarenas, and Patricia Mascarenas; and

(2) finds that the violence perpetrated by drug traffickers in Mexico constitute a danger to the safety of United States citizens living and traveling in the State of Jalisco, Mexico.

(b) TRAVEL ADVISORY.—The Congress, therefore, recommends that the Secretary of State issue a travel advisory warning United States citizens of the current dangers of traveling in the State of Jalisco, Mexico. Such travel advisory should remain in effect until those responsible for the abduction or murder of any of the United States citizens referred to in subsection (a)(1) have been brought to trial and a verdict has been obtained.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and each 90 days thereafter, the Secretary of State shall transmit a written report to the Congress on the progress made in the Camarena case, the investigations of the disappearance of United States citizens, and the general safety of United States tourists in Mexico.

SEC. 135. COMMENDATION OF AMBASSADOR TO MEXICO.

The Congress commends our fine Ambassador to Mexico, John Gavin, for insuring a full and complete investigation and prosecution of the murderers of Enrique Camerena and for his continuing advocacy of a strong drug enforcement program.

SEC. 136. SOVIET EMPLOYEES AT UNITED STATES DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR MISSIONS IN THE SOVIET UNION.

(a) LIMITATION.—To the maximum extent practicable, citizens of the Soviet Union shall not be employed as foreign national employees at United States diplomatic or consular missions in the Soviet Union after September 30, 1986.

(b) REPORT.—Should the President determine that the implementation of subsection (a) poses undue practical or administrative difficulties, he is requested to submit a report to the Congress describing the number and type of Soviet foreign national employees he wishes to retain at or in proximity to United States diplomatic and consular posts in the Soviet Union, the anticipated duration of their continued employment, the reasons for their continued employment, and the risks associated with the retention of these employees.

SEC. 137. RESPONSIBILITY OF UNITED STATES MISSIONS ABROAD TO PROVIDE SUPPORT FOR UNITED STATES BUSINESSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the United States is faced with increasingly larger trade deficits every year;

(2) section 104 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 provides that the members of the Foreign Service shall represent the interests of the United States in relation to foreign countries;

(3) section 207(c) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 provides that each chief of mission to a foreign country shall have as a principal duty the promotion of United States goods for export to that country; and

(4) the promotion of United States business interests abroad is a fundamental aspect of United States relations with foreign countries.

(b) POLICY.—It is the sense of the Congress that it is imperative, and in the national interest of the United States, that each United States mission to a foreign country provide such support as may be necessary to United States citizens seeking to do business in that country.

SEC. 138. RESPONSIBILITY OF UNITED STATES MISSIONS TO PROMOTE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS ABROAD.

(a) RESPONSIBILITY.—The United States chief of mission to a foreign country in which there is not respect for freedom of the press shall actively promote respect for freedom of the press in that country.

(b) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term "respect for freedom of the press" means that a government—

(1) allows foreign news correspondents into the country and does not subject them to harassment or restrictions;

(2) allows nongovernment-owned press to operate in the country; and

(3) does not subject the press in the country to systematic censorship.

SEC. 139. EMERGENCY TELEPHONE SERVICE AT U.S. CONSULAR OFFICES.

It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should ensure that all United States consular offices are equipped with 24-hour emergency telephone service through which United States citizens can contact a member of the staff of any such office. The Secretary should publicize the telephone number of each such service for the information of United States citizens. Not more than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on steps taken in accordance with this section.

SEC. 140. RESPONSIBILITIES OF UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVES TO INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) international organizations of which the United States is a member are increasingly involved in the consideration of proposals that may have a significant impact on the interstate or foreign commerce of the United States; and

(2) these proposals are not always adequately publicized or considered pursuant to open and fair procedures available to interested persons.

(b) POLICY.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the United States representatives to United Nations-related agencies and to other international organizations should oppose the adoption of international marketing and distribution regulations or restrictions which unnecessarily impede the export of United States goods and services; and

(2) the Secretary of State, to the extent practicable, should publish procedures to provide interested persons with timely notice and an opportunity to comment on such regulations and restrictions under consideration in international organizations as the Secretary determines may significantly affect—

(A) the interstate or foreign commerce of the United States;

(B) the policies or programs of the United States Government; or

(C) any State significantly affected by interstate or foreign commerce.

SEC. 141. UNITED STATES RESPONSIBILITIES FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

Title II of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 is amended by adding after section 209 (22 U.S.C. 4309) the following new section:

"SEC. 209A. UNITED STATES RESPONSIBILITIES FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

"(1) pursuant to the Agreement Between the United States and the United Nations Regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations (authorized by Public Law 80-357 (22 U.S.C. 287 note)), the United States has accepted—

"(A) the obligation to permit and to facilitate the right of individuals, who are employed by or are authorized by the United Nations to conduct official business in connection with that organization or its agencies, to enter into and exit from the United States for purposes of conducting official activities within the United Nations Headquarters District, subject to regulation as to points of entry and departure; and

"(B) the implied obligation to permit and to facilitate the acquisition of facilities in order to conduct such activities within or in proximity to the United Nations Headquarters District, subject to reasonable regulation including regulation of the location and size of such facilities; and

"(2) taking into account paragraph (1) and consistent with the obligation of the United States to facilitate the functioning of the United Nations, the United States has no additional obligation to permit the conduct of any other activities, including nonofficial activities, by such individuals outside of the United Nations Headquarters District.

"(b) ACTIVITIES OF UNITED NATIONS EMPLOYEES.—(1) The conduct of any activities, or the acquisition of any benefits (as defined in section 201(a)(1) of this title), outside the United Nations Headquarters District by any individual employed by, or authorized by the United Nations to conduct official business in connection with, that organization or its agencies, or by any person or agency acting on behalf thereof, may be permitted or denied or subject to reasonable regulation, as determined to be in the best interests of the United States and pursuant to this title.

"(2) The Secretary shall apply to those employees of the United Nations Secretariat who are nationals of a foreign country or members of a foreign mission all terms, limitations, restrictions, and conditions which are applicable pursuant to this title to the members of that country's mission or of any other mission to the United Nations unless the Secretary determines and reports to the Congress that national security and foreign policy circumstances require that this paragraph be waived in specific circumstances.

"(c) REPORTS.—The Secretary shall report to the Congress—

"(1) not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this section, on the plans of the Secretary for implementing this section; and

"(2) not later than 6 months thereafter, on the actions taken pursuant to those plans.

"(d) UNITED STATES NATIONALS.—This section shall not apply with respect to any United States national.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'United Nations Headquarters District' means the area within the United States which is agreed to by the United Nations and the United States to constitute such a district, together with such other areas as the Secretary of State may approve from time to time in order to permit effective functioning of the United Nations or missions to the United Nations.".

SEC. 142. UNITED STATES CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE UNITED NATIONS IF ISRAEL EXPELLED.

Section 115(b) of the Department of State Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1984 and 1985 (22 U.S.C. 287 note) is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The United States shall reduce its annual assessed contribution to the United Nations or such specialized agency by 8.34 percent for each month in which United States participation is suspended pursuant to this section.".

SEC. 143. UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATIONS REFORM IN BUDGET PROCEDURES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that the United Nations and its specialized agencies which are financed through assessed contributions of member states have not paid sufficient attention in the development of their budgets to the views of the member governments who are major financial contributors to those budgets.

(b) VOTING RIGHTS.—In order to foster greater financial responsibility in preparation of the budgets of the United Nations and its specialized agencies which are financed through assessed contributions, the Secretary of State shall seek the adoption by the United Nations and its specialized agencies of procedures which grant voting rights to each member state on matters of budgetary consequence. Such voting rights shall be proportionate to the contribution of each such member state to the budget of the United Nations and its specialized agencies.

(c) LIMITATION ON ASSESSED CONTRIBUTIONS.—No payment may be made for an assessed contribution to the United Nations or its specialized agencies in excess of 20 percent of the total annual budget of the United Nations or its specialized agencies (respectively) for the United States fiscal year 1987 and following years unless the United Nations and its specialized agencies have adopted the voting rights referred to in subsection (b).

SEC. 144. LIMITATION ON ASSESSED PAYMENTS TO THE UNITED NATIONS.

Section 114 of the Department of State Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1984 and 1985 (22 U.S.C. 287e note), is amended in subsection (a)—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (2);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end of the subsection the following:

"(4) 25 percent of the amount budgeted for that year for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

"(5) 25 percent of the amount budgeted for any other United Nations agency or conference whose sole or partial purpose is to implement the provisions of General Assembly Resolution 33/79; and

"(6) 25 percent of the amount budgeted for the General Assembly-approved $73,500,000 conference center to be constructed for the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa.".

SEC. 145. INTERNATIONAL JUTE ORGANIZATION.

The President is authorized to maintain membership of the United States in the International Jute Organization.

SEC. 146. INTELSAT.

(a) POLICY.—The Congress declares that it is the policy of the United States—

(1) as a party to the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization (hereafter in this section referred to as "Intelsat"), to foster and support the global commercial communications satellite system owned and operated by Intelsat;

(2) to make available to consumers a variety of communications satellite services utilizing the space segment facilities of Intelsat and any additional such facilities which are found to be in the national interest and which—

(A) are technically compatible with the use of the radio frequency spectrum and orbital space by the existing or planned Intelsat space segment, and

(B) avoid significant economic harm to the global system of Intelsat; and

(3) to authorize use and operation of any additional space segment facilities only if the obligations of the United States under article XIV(d) of the Intelsat Agreement have been met.

(b) PRECONDITIONS FOR INTELSAT CONSULTATION.—Before consulting with Intelsat for purposes of coordination of any separate international telecommunications satellite system under article XIV(d) of the Intelsat Agreement, the Secretary of State shall—

(1) in coordination with the Secretary of Commerce, ensure that any proposed separate international satellite telecommunications system comply with the Executive Branch conditions established pursuant to the Presidential Determination No. 85-2; and

(2) ensure that one or more foreign authorities have authorized the use of such system consistent with such conditions.

(c) AMENDMENT OF INTELSAT AGREEMENT.—(1) The Secretary of State shall consult with the United States signatory to Intelsat and the Secretary of Commerce regarding the appropriate scope and character of a modification to article V(d) of the Intelsat Agreement which would permit Intelsat to establish cost-based rates for individual traffic routes, as exceptional circumstances warrant, paying particular attention to the need for avoiding significant economic harm to the global system of Intelsat as well as United States national and foreign policy interests.

(2)(A) To ensure that rates established by Intelsat for such routes are cost-based, the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce and the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, shall instruct the United States signatory to Intelsat to ensure that sufficient documentation, including documentation regarding revenues and costs, is provided by Intelsat so as to verify that such rates are in fact cost-based.

(B) To the maximum extent possible, such documentation will be made available to interested parties on a timely basis.

(3) Pursuant to the consultation under paragraph (1) and taking the steps prescribed in paragraph (2) to provide documentation, the United States shall support an appropriate modification to article V(d) of the Intelsat Agreement to accomplish the purpose described in paragraph (1).

(d) CONGRESSIONAL CONSULTATION.—In the event that, after United States consultation with Intelsat for the purposes of coordination under article XIV(d) of the Intelsat Agreement for the establishment of a separate international telecommunications satellite system, the Assembly of Parties of Intelsat fails to recommend such a separate system, and the President determines to pursue the establishment of a separate system notwithstanding the Assembly's failure to approve such system, the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, shall submit to the Congress a detailed report which shall set forth—

(1) the foreign policy reasons for the President's determination, and

(2) a plan for minimizing any negative effects of the President's action on Intelsat and on United States foreign policy interests.

(e) NOTIFICATION TO FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION.—In the event the Secretary of State submits a report under subsection (d), the Secretary, 60 calendar days after the receipt by the Congress of such report, shall notify the Federal Communications Commission as to whether the United States obligations under article XIV(d) of the Intelsat Agreement have been met.

(f) IMPLEMENTATION.—In implementing the provisions of this section, the Secretary of State shall act in accordance with Executive order 12046.

(g) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term "separate international telecommunications satellite system" or "separate system" means a system of one or more telecommunications satellites separate from the Intelsat space segment which is established to provide international telecommunications services between points within the United States and points outside the United States, except that such term shall not include any satellite or system of satellites established—

(1) primarily for domestic telecommunications purposes and which incidentally provides services on an ancillary basis to points outside the jurisdiction of the United States but within the western hemisphere, or

(2) solely for unique governmental purposes.

SEC. 147. SOVIET AND COMMUNIST DISINFORMATION AND PRESS MANIPULATION.

Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall prepare, in consultation with the heads of relevant Federal departments and agencies, and shall transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, an unclassified report on Soviet and Communist disinformation and press manipulation with respect to the United States. Such report shall include a recommendation by the President on the advisability of establishing, within the Department of State, a permanent office of Soviet disinformation and press manipulation. In conducting the study required by this section the Secretary may make use of suitably qualified scholars and journalists.

SEC. 148. MURDER OF MAJOR ARTHUR D. NICHOLSON, JUNIOR.

It is the sense of the Congress that the United States should declare persona non grata one or more senior defense attaches of the Soviet Union's mission to the United States unless the President certifies to the Congress, within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act—

(1) that the Soviet Union has made a formal apology for the murder of Major Arthur D. Nicholson, Junior; and

(2) that the Soviet Union has provided satisfactory assurances that it will adhere to agreements concerning the status and safety of military and civilian missions of western nations in the German Democratic Republic.

SEC. 149. INTER-AMERICAN COOPERATION IN SPACE, SCIENCE, AND TECHNOLOGY.

The Secretary of State shall conduct an in-depth study of the feasibility and the economic and political benefits of the establishment of a major initiative in Inter-American Cooperation in Space, Science, and Technology. Not more than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on the findings of such study and shall include recommendations for implementing such an initiative.

SEC. 150. DEPARTMENT OF STATE INSPECTOR GENERAL.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT UNDER INSPECTOR GENERAL ACT.—(1) Section 2(l) of the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App.) is amended—

(A) by striking out "and" immediately before "the Veterans' Administration"; and

(B) by inserting immediately before the semicolon ", and the Department of State".

(2) Section 11 of such Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting "State," after "Labor,"; and

(2) in paragraph (2), by inserting "State," after "Labor,".

(b) LIMITATION ON AUTHORITY OF INSPECTOR GENERAL OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE AND THE FOREIGN SERVICE.—Notwithstanding section 209 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 3929), any individual appointed to or serving in the capacity of the Inspector General of the Department of State and the Foreign Service shall be designated as the "Program Inspector General" and may only perform such functions (utilizing appropriate authority under such section) as may be necessary for the purposes of carrying out subsection (g) of such section.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall submit a report to the Congress on the steps the Secretary has undertaken to implement the provisions of the amendment made by subsection (a).

SEC. 151. EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

(a) INITIAL REPORT.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall report to the Congress on whether, and the extent to which, international civil servants employed by the United Nations, including those seconded to the United Nations, are required to return all or part of their salaries to their respective governments. The Secretary shall also include in this report a description of the steps taken by the Department of State and by the United States Representative to the United Nations to correct this practice.

(b) REPORT ON STEPS TO CORRECT PRACTICE.—The Secretary of State shall determine and report to the Congress on whether substantial progress has been made by June 1, 1986, in correcting the practice of international civil servants employed by the United Nations being required to return all or part of their salaries to their respective governments.

(c) REDUCTION IN CONTRIBUTION IF SUBSTANTIAL PROGESS NOT MADE.—If the Secretary of State determines pursuant to subsection (b) that substantial progress has not been made in correcting this practice, the Secretary shall submit recommendations to the Congress together with the report required in subsection (b) as to corrective measures to be taken, including a reduction of the amount of the United States annual assessed contribution to the United Nations by the amount of that contribution which is the United States proportionate share of the salaries of those international civil servants employed by the United Nations who are returning any portion of their salaries to their respective governments.

(d) NATIONAL TAXATION.—This section does not apply with respect to payments made for purposes of national taxation in accordance with formal treaty reservations concerning such taxation by a member state of the United Nations.

SEC. 152. REPRESENTATION OF MINORITIES AND WOMEN IN THE FOREIGN SERVICE.

(a) DEVELOPMENT OF PROGRAM.—The head of each agency utilizing the Foreign Service personnel system shall develop, consistent with section 7201 of title 5 of the United States Code, a plan designed to increase significantly the number of members of minority groups and women in the Foreign Service in that agency.

(b) EMPHASIS ON MID-LEVELS.—Each plan developed pursuant to this section shall, consistent with section 7201 of title 5 of the United States Code, place particular emphasis on achieving significant increases in the numbers of minority group members and women who are in the mid-levels of the Foreign Service.

(c) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—The head of each agency utilizing the Foreign Service personnel system shall report annually to the Congress on the plan developed pursuant to this section as part of the report required to be submitted pursuant to section 105(d)(2) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980. Subsequent reports pursuant to that section shall include reports on the implementation of these plans, giving particular attention to the progress being made in increasing, through advancement and promotion, the numbers of members of minority groups and women in the mid-levels of the Foreign Service.

SEC. 153. BOARD OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE.

Section 210 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 3930) is amended by striking out "a career member of the Senior Foreign Service designated by the Secretary of State" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "an individual appointed by the President".

SEC. 154. DAMAGES RESULTING FROM DELAYS IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE UNITED STATES EMBASSY IN MOSCOW.

(a) RESTRICTION; REIMBURSEMENT FOR DAMAGES INCURRED.—The Secretary of State shall not permit the Soviet Union to occupy the new chancery building at its new embassy complex in Washington, D.C., or any other new facility in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area, if the Soviet Union fails to provide prompt and full reimbursement to the United States for damages incurred as a result of the construction of the new United States Embassy in Moscow. The amount of such reimbursement shall be determined by agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union or, in the event of disagreement, by international arbitration pursuant to subsection (b).

(b) INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall initiate actions to begin the international arbitration process, which is provided for in the embassy construction agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union, in order to resolve all United States claims against the Soviet Union for damages arising from delays in the construction of the new United States Embassy complex in Moscow.

(c) REPORT.—In the event the amount of reimbursement provided to the United States under subsection (a) by the Soviet Union is less than the amount of funds expended for the damages described in subsection (a) that are determined by the Secretary of State to be the responsibility of the Soviet Union, the Secretary of State shall submit a report to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. Such report shall contain a detailed explanation of the reasons the Secretary accepted the settlement arrangements of the United States claims and the financial costs to the United States of doing so.

(d) SUSPENSION OF RESTRICTIONS.—The Secretary of State may suspend the restrictions in subsection (a) in the interests of United States national security if the Secretary certifies to the Congress that a substantial number of the claims described in subsection (a) are settled and that resolution of any remaining claims is proceeding in a satisfactory manner. If the Secretary exercises the authority under this subsection, the Secretary shall report to the appropriate committees of the Congress every six months concerning progress on resolution of any outstanding claims.

TITLE II—UNITED STATES INFORMATION AGENCY

SEC. 201. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

In addition to amounts otherwise available for such purposes, there are authorized to be appropriated for the United States Information Agency $887,900,000 for the fiscal year 1986 and $887,900,000 for the fiscal year 1987 to carry out international information, educational, cultural, and exchange programs under the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948, the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961, Reorganization Plan Number 2 of 1977, the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act, and other purposes authorized by law. Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1986 by section 201, $3,000,000 shall be available only to reimburse expenses for exchange of athletes, coaches, and officials participating in international games for the handicapped which are conducted in the United States.

SEC. 208. BAN ON DOMESTIC ACTIVITIES BY THE USIA.

Except as provided in section 501 of the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948 (22 U.S.C. 1461) and this section, no funds authorized to be appropriated to the United States Information Agency shall be used to influence public opinion in the United States, and no program material prepared by the United States Information Agency shall be distributed within the United States. This section shall not apply to programs carried out pursuant to the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2451 et seq.).

SEC. 209. PRIVATE SECTOR FUNDING FOR USIA'S PRIVATE SECTOR PROGRAM.

(a) LIMITATION ON GRANTS.—No grant shall be made to any organization through the Private Sector Program of the United States Information Agency unless—

(1) costs equal to at least 15 percent of grants from the United States Information Agency in fiscal year 1986, and

(2) costs equal to at least 25 percent of grants from the United States Information Agency in fiscal year 1987, for that organization's exchange and exchange-related programs are provided for from non-United States Government sources.

(b) EXEMPTION FOR CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to grantee organizations which have been in existence for less than one year.

(c) PROHIBITION ON FUNDING 1985 INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR ACTIVITIES.—No funds from fiscal year 1986 appropriations for the United States Information Agency or for any other United States Government agency shall be available for grants related to 1985 International Youth Year activities.

SEC. 210. NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR DEMOCRACY.

"SEC. 505. REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO THE ENDOWMENT AND ITS GRANTEES.

"(a) PARTISAN POLITICS.—(1) Funds may not be expended, either by the Endowment or by any of its grantees, to finance the campaigns of candidates for public office.

"(2) No funds granted by the Endowment may be used to finance activities of the Republican National Committee or the Democratic National Committee.

"(3) No grants may be made to any institute, foundation, or organization engaged in partisan activities on behalf of the Republican or Democratic National Committee, on behalf of any candidate for public office, or on behalf of any political party in the United States.

"(b) CONSULTATION WITH DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The Endowment shall consult with the Department of State on any overseas program funded by the Endowment prior to the commencement of the activities of that program.

"SEC. 506. FREEDOM OF INFORMATION.

"(a) COMPLIANCE WITH FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT.—Notwithstanding the fact that the Endowment is not an agency or establishment of the United States Government, the Endowment shall fully comply with all of the provisions of section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

"(b) PUBLICATION IN FEDERAL REGISTER.—For purposes of complying pursuant to subsection (a) with section 552(a)(1) of such title, the Endowment shall make available to the Director of the United States Information Agency such records and other information as the Director determines may be necessary for such purposes. The Director shall cause such records and other information to be published in the Federal Register.

"(c) REVIEW BY USIA.—(1) In the event that the Endowment determines not to comply with a request for records under section 552, the Endowment shall submit a report to the Director of the United States Information Agency explaining the reasons for not complying with such request.

"(2) If the Director approves the determination not to comply with such request, the United States Information Agency shall assume full responsibility, including financial responsibility, for defending the Endowment in any litigation relating to such request.

"(3) If the Director disapproves the determination not to comply with such request, the Endowment shall comply with such request.".

(b) AUDITS BY USIA.—Section 504 of such Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (g) and (h) as subsections (h) and (i), respectively, and

(2) by inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsection (g):

"(g) The financial transactions of the Endowment for each fiscal year may also be audited by the United States Information Agency under the conditions set forth in subsection (f)(1).".

(c) GRANTS TO THE ENDOWMENT.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated by section 201 for the United States Information Agency, not less than $18,400,000 for the fiscal year 1986 and not less than $18,400,000 for the fiscal year 1987 shall be made available to the National Endowment for Democracy.

(d) REPORTING DATE.—Section 504(i) of the National Endowment for Democracy Act (22 U.S.C. 4413(h)), as redesignated by subsection (b)(1), is amended by striking out "December 31" and inserting in lieu thereof "February 1".

SEC. 211. PROMOTING DEMOCRACY AND AN END TO THE APARTHEID POLICIES IN SOUTH AFRICA.

(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to encourage funding for programs that would promote democracy and seek to end the apartheid policies in South Africa, and that would be in addition to the programs for South Africa funded under chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2346 et seq.).

(b) USIA GRANTS TO THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR DEMOCRACY.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Director of the United States Information Agency should make a grant of up to $500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1986 and 1987 to the National Endowment for Democracy (in addition to grants otherwise made by the Director to the Endowment) for use by the Endowment in providing financing for programs that are designed to promote democracy and that seek to end the apartheid policies in South Africa.

(c) PROGRAMS DESIGNED TO END THE APARTHEID POLICIES.—The programs funded pursuant to this section shall be programs of support for actions of non-white led community organizations in South Africa to terminate apartheid policies such as—

(1) removal of black populations from certain geographic areas on account of race or ethnic origin;

(2) denationalization of blacks, including any distinctions between the South African citizenships of blacks and whites;

(3) residence restrictions based on race or ethnic origin;

(4) restrictions on the rights of blacks to seek employment in South Africa and live wherever they find employment in South Africa; and

(5) restrictions which make it impossible for black employees and their families to be housed in family accomodations near their place of employment.

(d) ELIGIBLE ORGANIZATIONS IN SOUTH AFRICA.—Any program funded in accordance with this section, which is to be carried out within South Africa, should be a program which in both its character and organizational sponsorship in South Africa clearly reflects the aspirations of the indigenous majority of South Africans for the establishment of democratic institutions and for an end to the apartheid system of separate development, and should not be a program which is financed or controlled by the Government of South Africa.

SEC. 212. DISTRIBUTION WITHIN THE UNITED STATES OF THE USIA FILM ENTITLED "HAL DAVID: EXPRESSING A FEELING".

Notwithstanding section 208 of this Act and the second sentence of section 501 of the United States Information and Education Exchange Act of 1948 (22 U.S.C. 1461)—

(1) the Director of the United States Information Agency shall make available to the Archivist of the United States a master copy of the film entitled "Hal David: Expressing a Feeling"; and

(2) upon evidence that necessary United States rights and licenses have been secured and paid for by the person seeking domestic release of the film, the Archivist shall reimburse the Director for any expenses of the Agency in making that master copy available, shall deposit that film in the National Archives of the United States, and shall make copies of that film available for purchase and public viewing within the United States.

Any reimbursement to the Director pursuant to this section shall be credited to the applicable appropriation of the United States Information Agency.

SEC. 213. DISTRIBUTION WITHIN THE UNITED STATES THREE USIA FILMS RELATING TO AFGHANISTAN.

Notwithstanding section 208 of this Act and the second sentence of section 501 of the United States Information and Education Exchange Act of 1948 (22 U.S.C. 1461)—

(1) the Director of the United States Information Agency shall make available to the Archivist of the United States a master copy of the films entitled "Afghanistan 1982: the Struggle for Freedom Continues", "We are Afghanistan", and "Afghanistan: The Hidden War"; and

(2) upon evidence that necessary United States rights and licenses have been secured and paid for by the person seeking domestic release of such a film, the Archivist shall reimburse the Director for any expenses of the Agency in making the master copy of such film available, shall deposit such film in the National Archives of the United States, and shall make copies of such film available for purchase and public viewing within the United States.

Any reimbursement to the Director pursuant to this section shall be credited to the applicable appropriation of the United States Information Agency.

SEC. 214. NOTIFICATION OF PROGRAM GRANTS.

(a) APPLICATION TO FISCAL YEARS 1986 AND 1987.—Section 705(b) of the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948 (22 U.S.C. 1477c(b)) is amended by striking out "1984 and 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "1986 and 1987".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

TITLE III—BOARD FOR INTERNATIONAL BROADCASTING

SEC. 301. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) FISCAL YEARS 1986 AND 1987.—Subparagraph (A) of section 8(a)(1) of the Board for International Broadcasting Act of 1973 (22 U.S.C. 2877(a)(1)(A)) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) $125,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986 and $125,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987; and".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

SEC. 302. IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES.

Section 8 of the Board for International Broadcasting Act of 1973 (22 U.S.C. 2877) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Of the authorization of appropriations contained in subsection (a)(1)(A), authorizations of $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986 and $18,323,000 for the fiscal year 1987, which shall be available for radio modernization, shall remain available until the appropriations are made and when those amounts are appropriated they are authorized to remain available until expended.".

SEC. 303. RADIO FREE AFGHANISTAN.

(a) BIB PURPOSES.—Paragraph (5) of section 2 of the Board for International Broadcasting Act of 1973 (22 U.S.C. 2871(5)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" following "Republics" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma, and

(2) by inserting ", and Afghanistan (as long as it is under Soviet occupation)" after "Eastern Europe".

(b) AUTHORITY.—The Board for International Broadcasting Act of 1973 (22 U.S.C. 2871 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 14. RADIO BROADCASTING TO AFGHANISTAN IN THE DARI AND PASHTO LANGUAGES.

Fund granted to RFE/RL, Incorporated, under this Act may be used for radio broadcasting to the Afghan people in the Dari and Pashto languages, such broadcasts to be designated 'Radio Free Afghanistan'.".

SEC. 304. MANAGEMENT OF RFE/RL, INCORPORATED.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) RFE/RL, Incorporated, is essential to the continued and effective furtherance of the open flow of information and ideas throughout Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union;

(2) effective communication of information and ideas can only be accomplished if the long-term credibility of RFE/RL, Incorporated, operating in accordance with the highest standards of professionalism, is maintained;

(3) the performance of RFE/RL, Incorporated, is dependent on proper management, an objective approach to news, quality programming, and effective oversight;

(4) the Board for International Broadcasting, in addition to making grants, is responsible for overseeing broadcast quality and effectiveness and for overseeing effective utilization of Federal funds;

(5) RFE/RL, Incorporated, is responsible for its own management and for daily broadcasts into Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union;

(6) the Board for International Broadcasting and RFE/RL, Incorporated, must remain very distinct and different institutions if they adhere to the Joint Explanatory Statement of the Committee on Conference relating to the Board of International Broadcasting Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1982 and 1983;

(7) the President of RFE/RL, Incorporated, who is responsible for the proper management and supervision of the daily operations of the radios, should devote the necessary resources and personnel to strengthen both the oversight and the quality of programming;

(8) the Board for International Broadcasting, in an effort to preserve or enhance its ability to properly oversee the operations of RFE/RL, Incorporated, must avoid even the appearance of involvement in daily operational decisions and management of RFE/RL, Incorporated; and

(9) the absence of satisfactory pre-broadcast review and the lack of sufficient records of actions taken to explain or remedy program problems identified through post-broadcast review, may endanger the long-term credibility of RFE/RL, Incorporated.

(b) ACTIONS TO BE TAKEN BY RFE/RL.—It is the sense of the Congress that RFE/RL, Incorporated, should—

(1) strengthen existing broadcast control procedures and post-broadcast program analysis; and

(2) improve its personnel management system to include such things as better documentation of internal decisionmaking and communication, personnel review, and job description.

(c) ACTIONS TO BE TAKEN BY BIB.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Board for International Broadcasting should—

(1) periodically review and update the Program Policy Guidelines of RFE/RL, Incorporated, with the goal of maintaining their clarity and responsiveness; and

(2) ensure that the distinctions between the Board for International Broadcasting and RFE/RL, Incorporated, remain clear and that these two entities continue to operate within the framework established by law.

SEC. 305. ROLE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(a) ROLE.—Section 6 of the Board for International Broadcasting Act of 1973 (22 U.S.C. 2875) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 6.";

(2) by adding the following at the end of subsection (a), as so designated by paragraph (1): "The Secretary shall report regularly to the Board on the impact of broadcasts by RFE/RL, Incorporated, in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union."; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) No grant may be made under this Act unless RFE/RL, Incorporated, agrees to the presence of an observer representing the Secretary of State at the meetings of its Board of Directors.".

(b) LIAISON WITH RFE/RL, INCORPORATED; REPRESENTATION AT BOARD MEETINGS.—The Secretary of State shall—

(1) establish an office within the United States Consulate in Munich, Federal Republic of Germany, which shall be responsible for the daily liaison operations of the Department of State with RFE/RL, Incorporated; and

(2) be represented by an observer at each meeting of the Board for International Broadcasting and of the Board of Directors of RFE/RL, Incorporated.

SEC. 306. TASK FORCE WITH RESPECT TO BROADCASTS TO SOVIET JEWRY.

(a) ESTABLISH TASK FORCE.—There shall be established by the Board for International Broadcasting a task force to conduct a study of the advisability and feasibility of increasing broadcasts to the Jewish population within the Soviet Union.

(b) STUDY.—The Task Force shall—

(1) investigate the needs of Jewish audiences in the Soviet Union;

(2) study the practicality and desirability of establishing a special program, in accordance with the Program Policy Guidelines of RFE/RL, Inc., of Russian language broadcasting to the Jewish population of the Soviet Union;

(3) study the advisability of incorporating such a special program in a special unit of its Radio Liberty division entitled the "Radio Maccabee Program of Radio Liberty";

(4) make recommendations with respect to the desirable content of broadcast programming; and

(5) identify the needs and concerns of the activist as well as the refusnik population in the Soviet Union.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Board for International Broadcasting shall submit a report to the Congress. Such report shall include the following:

(1) Whether expansion of original programming scheduled ("Jewish Cultural and Social Life") or planned ("Judaism") is fulfilling the needs of the audience, and whether expanded Soviet-Jewish programming should include broadcasts on Jewish history, culture, religion, or other matters of general cultural, intellectual, political, and religious interest to the Soviet Jewish population, as well as Hebrew education courses.

(2) The extent to which such programming is broadcast in Russian, Hebrew, and Yiddish.

(3) Recommendations for implementing expanded programming within the structure of RFE/RL, Inc., including specific personnel required and providing for a Soviet Jewry administrative unit within Radio Liberty.

(4) The findings of, and the recommendations from, the study required under subsection (b).

(d) MACCABEE PROGRAMMING.—RFE/RL, Incorporated, shall strengthen existing programming dealing with issues of concern to Jewish audiences in the Soviet Union, to be known as Maccabee programming.

(e) EXISTING PERSONNEL TO CONDUCT STUDY AND MAKE REPORT.—The study and the report required by this section shall be carried out by existing personnel of RFE, Inc., or the Board of International Broadcasting.

TITLE IV—THE ASIA FOUNDATION

SEC. 401. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 404 of The Asia Foundation Act (22 U.S.C. 4403) is amended to read as follows:

"FUNDING

"SEC. 404. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of State $10,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for grants to The Asia Foundation pursuant to this title.".

TITLE V—IRAN CLAIMS SETTLEMENT

SEC. 501. RECEIPT AND DETERMINATION OF CERTAIN CLAIMS.

(a) AUTHORITY OF FOREIGN CLAIMS SETTLEMENT COMMISSION.—The Foreign Claims Settlement Commission of the United States is authorized to receive and determine the validity and amounts of claims by nationals of the United States against Iran which are settled en bloc by the United States. In deciding such claims, the Commission shall apply, in the following order—

(1) the terms of any settlement agreement;

(2) the relevant provisions of the Declarations of the Government of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria of January 19, 1981, giving consideration to interpretations thereof by the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal; and

(3) applicable principles of international law, justice, and equity.

Except as otherwise provided in this title, the provisions of title I of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949 (22 U.S.C. 1621 et seq.) shall apply with respect to claims under this section. Any reference in such provisions to "this title" shall be deemed to refer to those provisions and to this section.

(b) CERTIFICATION AND PAYMENT.—The Commission shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury any awards determined pursuant to subsection (a) in accordance with section 5 of title I of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949 (22 U.S.C. 1624). Such awards shall be paid in accordance with sections 7 and 8 of such title (22 U.S.C. 1626 and 1627), except that—

(1) the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make payments pursuant to paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 8(c) of such title in the amount of $10,000 or the principal amount of the award, whichever is less; and

(2) the Secretary of the Treasury may deduct, pursuant to section 7(b) of such title, an amount calculated in accordance with section 502(a) of this Act, instead of 5 percent of payments made pursuant to section 8(c) of such title.

SEC. 502. DEDUCTIONS FROM ARBITRAL AWARDS.

(a) DEDUCTION FOR EXPENSES OF THE UNITED STATES.—Except as provided in section 503, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York shall deduct from the aggregate amount awarded under each enumerated claim before the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal in favor of a United States claimant, an amount equal to 1 1/2 percent of the first $5,000,000 and 1 percent of any amount over $5,000,000, as reimbursement to the United States Government for expenses incurred in connection with the arbitration of claims of United States claimants against Iran before that Tribunal and the maintenance of the Security Account established pursuant to the Declarations of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria of January 19, 1981. The Federal Reserve Bank of New York shall make the deduction required by the preceding sentence whenever the Bank receives an amount from the Security Account in satisfaction of an award rendered by the Iran-United States Claim Tribunal on the enumerated claim involved.

(b) DEDUCTION TREATED AS MISCELLANEOUS RECEIPT.—Amounts deducted by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York pursuant to subsection (a) shall be deposited into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

(c) PAYMENT TO UNITED STATES CLAIMANTS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the payment to United States claimants of amounts received by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York in respect of awards by the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal, after deduction of the amounts calculated in accordance with subsection (a).

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall be effective as of June 7, 1982.

SEC. 503. EN BLOC SETTLEMENT.

The deduction by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York provided for in section 502(a) of this Act shall not apply in the case of a sum received by the Bank pursuant to an en bloc settlement of any category of claims of United States nationals against Iran when such sum is to be used for payments in satisfaction of awards certified by the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission pursuant to section 501(b) of this Act.

SEC. 504. REIMBURSEMENT TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF NEW YORK.

The Secretary of the Treasury may reimburse the Federal Reserve Bank of New York for expenses incurred by the Bank in the performance of fiscal agency agreements relating to the settlement or arbitration of claims pursuant to the Declarations of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria of January 19, 1981.

SEC. 505. CONFIDENTIALITY OF RECORDS.

Notwithstanding section 552 of title 5, United States Code (commonly referred to as the Freedom of Information Act), records pertaining to the arbitration of claims before the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal may not be disclosed to the general public, except that—

(1) rules, awards, and other decisions of the Tribunal and claims and responsive pleadings filed at the Tribunal by the United States on its own behalf shall be made available to the public, unless the Secretary of State determines that public disclosure would be prejudicial to the interests of the United States or United States claimants in proceedings before the Tribunal, or that public disclosure would be contrary to the rules of the Tribunal; and

(2) the Secretary of State may determine on a case-by-case basis to make such information available when in the judgment of the Secretary the interests of justice so require.

TITLE VI—UNITED STATES SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM FOR DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

SEC. 601. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

The purpose of this title is to establish an undergraduate scholarship program designed to bring students of limited financial means from developing countries to the United States for study at United States institutions of higher education.

SEC. 602. FINDINGS AND DECLARATIONS OF POLICY.

The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) it is in the national interest for the United States Government to provide a stable source of financial support to give students in developing countries the opportunity to study in the United States, in order to improve the range and quality of educational alternatives, increase mutual understanding, and build lasting links between those countries and the United States;

(2) providing scholarships to foreign students to study in the United States has proven over time to be an effective means of creating strong bonds between the United States and the future leadership of developing countries and, at the same time, assists countries substantially in their development efforts;

(3) study in United States institutions by foreign students enhances trade and economic relationships by providing strong English language skills and establishing professional and business contacts;0

(4) students from families of limited financial means have, in the past, largely not had the opportunity to study in the United States, and scholarship programs sponsored by the United States have made no provision for identifying, preparing, or supporting such students for study in the United States;

(5) it is essential that the United States citizenry develop its knowledge and understanding of the developing countries and their languages, cultures, and socioeconomic composition as these areas assume an ever larger role in the world community;

(6) the number of United States Government-sponsored scholarships for students in developing countries has been exceeded as much as twelve times in a given year by the number of scholarships offered by Soviet-bloc governments to students in developing countries, and this disparity entails the serious long-run cost of having so many of the potential future leaders of the developing world educated in Soviet-bloc countries;

(7) from 1972 through 1982 the Soviet Union and Eastern European governments collectively increased their education exchange programs to Latin America and the Caribbean by 205 percent while those of the United States declined by 52 percent;

(8) an undergraduate scholarship program for students of limited financial means from developing countries to study in the United States would complement current assistance efforts in the areas of advanced education and training of people of developing countries in such disciplines as are required for planning and implementation of public and private development activities;

(9) the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America has recommended a program of 10,000 United States Government-sponsored scholarships to bring Central American students to the United States, which program would involve careful targeting to encourage participation by young people from all social and economic classes, would maintain existing admission standards by providing intensive English and other training, and would encourage graduates to return to their home countries after completing their education; and

(10) it is also in the interest of the United States, as well as peaceful cooperation in the Western Hemisphere, that particular attention be given to the students of the Caribbean region.

SEC. 603. SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President, acting through the United States Information Agency, shall provide scholarships (including partial assistance) for undergraduate study at United States institutions of higher education by citizens and nationals of developing countries who have completed their secondary education and who would not otherwise have an opportunity to study in the United States due to financial limitations.

(b) FORM OF SCHOLARSHIP; FORGIVENESS OF LOAN REPAYMENT.—To encourage students to use their training in their countries of origin, each scholarship pursuant to this section shall be in the form of a loan with all repayment to be forgiven upon the student's prompt return to his or her country of origin for a period which is at least one year longer than the period spent studying in the United States. If the student is granted asylum in the United States pursuant to section 208 of the Immigration and Nationality Act or is admitted to the United States as a refugee pursuant to section 207 of that Act, half of the repayment shall be forgiven.

(c) CONSULTATION.—Before allocating any of the funds made available to carry out this title, the President shall consult with United States institutions of higher education, educational exchange organizations, United States missions in developing countries, and the governments of participating countries on how to implement the guidelines specified in section 604.

(d) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this title, the term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning as given to such term by section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

SEC. 604. GUIDELINES.

The scholarship program under this title shall be carried out in accordance with the following guidelines:

(1) Consistent with section 112(b) of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2460(b)), all programs created pursuant to this title shall be nonpolitical and balanced, and shall be administered in keeping with the highest standards of academic integrity.

(2) United States missions shall design ways to identify promising students who are in secondary educational institutions, or who have completed their secondary education, for study in the United States. In carrying out this paragraph, the United States mission in a country shall consult with Peace Corps volunteers and staff assigned to that country and with private and voluntary organizations with a proven record of providing development assistance to developing countries.

(3) United States missions shall develop and strictly implement specific economic need criteria. Scholarships under this title may only be provided to students who meet the economic need criteria.

(4) The program shall utilize educational institutions in the United States and in developing countries to help participants in the programs acquire necessary skills in English and other appropriate education training.

(5) Each participant from a developing country shall be selected on the basis of academic and leadership potential and the economic, political, and social development needs of such country. Such needs shall be determined by each United States mission in consultation with the government of the respective country. Scholarship opportunities shall emphasize fields that are critical to the development of the participant's country, including agriculture, civil engineering, communications, social science, education, public and business administration, health, nutrition, environmental studies, population and family planning, and energy.

(6) The program shall be flexible in order to take advantage of different training and educational opportunities offered by universities, postsecondary vocational training schools, and community colleges in the United States.

(7) The program shall be flexible with respect to the number of years of undergraduate education financed but in no case shall students be brought to the United States for a period less than one year.

(8) Adequate allowance shall be made in the scholarship for the purchase of books and related educational material relevant to the program of study.

(9) Further allowance shall be made to provide adequate opportunities for professional, academic, and cultural enrichment for scholarship recipients.

(10) The program shall, to the maximum extent practicable, offer equal opportunities for both male and female students to study in the United States.

(11) The United States Information Agency shall recommend to each student, who receives a scholarship under this title for study at a college or university, that the student enroll in a course on the classics of American political thought or which otherwise emphasizes the ideas, principles, and documents upon which the United States was founded.

SEC. 605. AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO AGREEMENTS.

The President may enter into agreements with foreign governments in furtherance of the purposes of this title. Such agreements may provide for the creation or continuation of binational or multinational educational and cultural foundations and commissions for the purposes of administering programs under this title.

SEC. 606. POLICY REGARDING OTHER INTERNATIONAL EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS.

(a) AID-FUNDED PROGRAMS.—The Congress urges the administrator of the agency primarily responsible for administering part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, in implementing programs authorized under that part, to increase assistance for undergraduate scholarships for students of limited financial means from developing countries to study in the United States at United States institutions of higher education. To the maximum extent practicable, such scholarship assistance shall be furnished in accordance with the guidelines contained in section 604 of this title.

(b) USIA-FUNDED POSTGRADUATE STUDY IN THE UNITED STATES.—The Congress urges the Director of the United States Information Agency to expand opportunities for students of limited financial means from developing countries to receive financial assistance for postgraduate study at United States institutions of higher education.

(c) STUDY BY AMERICANS IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES.—The Congress urges the President to take such steps as are necessary to expand the opportunities for Americans from all economic classes to study in developing countries.

SEC. 607. ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF COUNSELING SERVICES.

(a) COUNSELING SERVICES ABROAD.—For the purpose of assisting foreign students in choosing fields of study, selecting appropriate institutions of higher education, and preparing for their stay in the United States, the President may make suitable arrangements for counseling and orientation services abroad.

(b) COUNSELING SERVICES IN THE UNITED STATES.—For the purposes of assisting foreign students in making the best use of their opportunities while attending United States institutions of higher education, and assisting such students in directing their talents and initiative into channels which will make them more effective leaders upon return to their native lands, the President may make suitable arrangements (by contract or otherwise) for the establishment and maintenance of adequate counseling services at United States institutions of higher education which are attended by foreign students.

SEC. 608. BOARD OF FOREIGN SCHOLARSHIPS.

The Board of Foreign Scholarships shall advise and assist the President in the discharge of the scholarship program carried out pursuant to this title, in accordance with the guidelines set forth in section 604. The President may provide for such additional secretarial and staff assistance for the Board as may be required to carry out this title.

SEC. 609. GENERAL AUTHORITIES.

(a) PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SECTOR CONTRIBUTIONS.—The public and private sectors in the United States and in the developing countries shall be encouraged to contribute to the costs of the scholarship program financed under this title.

(b) UTILIZATION OF RETURNING PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS.—The President shall seek to engage the public and private sectors of developing countries in programs to maximize the utilization of recipients of scholarships under this title upon their return to their own countries.

(c) PROMOTION ABROAD OF SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.—The President may provide for publicity and promotion abroad of the scholarship program provided for in this title.

(d) INCREASING UNITED STATES UNDERSTANDING OF DEVELOPING COUNTRIES.—The President shall encourage United States institutions of higher education, which are attended by students from developing countries who receive scholarships under this title, to provide opportunities for United States citizens attending those institutions to develop their knowledge and understanding of the developing countries, and the languages and cultures of those countries, represented by those foreign students.

(e) OTHER ACTIVITIES TO PROMOTE IMPROVED UNDERSTANDING.—Funds allocated by the United States Information Agency, or the agency primarily responsible for carrying out part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, for scholarships in accordance with this title shall be available to enhance the educational training and capabilities of the people of Latin America and the Caribbean and to promote better understanding between the United States and Latin America and the Caribbean through programs of cooperation, study, training, and research. Such funds may be used for program and administrative costs for institutions carrying out such programs.

SEC. 610. ENGLISH TEACHING, TEXTBOOKS, AND OTHER TEACHING MATERIALS.

Wherever adequate facilities or materials are not available to carry out the purposes of paragraph (4) of section 604 in the participant's country and the President determines that the purposes of this title are best served by providing the preliminary training in the participant's country, the President may (by purchase, contract, or other appropriate means) provide the necessary materials and instructors to achieve such purpose.

SEC. 611. REPORTING REQUIREMENT.

Not later than February 1 each year, the President shall submit to the Congress a report on the activities carried on and expenditures made pursuant to this title during the preceding fiscal year.

SEC. 612. FUNDING OF SCHOLARSHIPS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1986 AND FISCAL YEAR 1987.

(a) CENTRAL AMERICAN UNDERGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.—The undergraduate scholarship program financed by the United States Information Agency for students from Central America for fiscal year 1986 and fiscal year 1987 shall be conducted in accordance with this title.

(b) SCHOLARSHIPS FOR STUDENTS FROM OTHER DEVELOPING COUNTRIES.—Any funds appropriated to the United States Information Agency for fiscal year 1986 or fiscal year 1987 for any purpose (other than funds appropriated for educational exchange programs under section 102(a)(1) of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2452(a)(1)) may be used to carry out this title with respect to students from developing countries outside Central America.

SEC. 613. LATIN AMERICAN EXCHANGES.

Of any funds authorized to be appropriated for activities authorized by this title, not less than 25 percent shall be allocated to fund grants and exchanges to Latin America and the Caribbean.

SEC. 614. FEASIBILITY STUDY OF TRAINING PROGRAMS IN SIZABLE HISPANIC POPULATIONS.

No later than December 15, 1985, the Director of the United States Information Agency and the Administrator of the Agency for International Development shall report jointly, to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, on the feasibility of greater utilization in those two agencies' scholarship and participant training programs of the United States universities in States bordering Latin American and Caribbean which are located in areas characterized by the presence of sizable Hispanic populations.

SEC. 615. COMPLIANCE WITH CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT.

Any authority provided by this title to enter into contracts shall be effective only—

(1) to the extent that the budget authority for the obligation to make outlays, which is created by the contract, has been provided in advance by an appropriation Act; or

(2) to the extent or in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

TITLE VII—ARMS CONTROL AND DISARMAMENT

SEC. 701. SUPPLEMENTAL AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1985.

Section 49(a)(1) of the Arms Control and Disarmament Act (22 U.S.C. 2589(a)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) for the fiscal year 1985, $23,789,000, of which amount $4,321,000 shall be available only to pay necessary expenses incurred in connection with arms control negotiations with the Government of the Soviet Union on strategic arms reductions, intermediate-range nuclear forces, and space and defensive weapons;".

SEC. 702. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEARS 1986 AND 1987.

Section 49(a)(2) of the Arms Control and Disarmament Act (22 U.S.C. 2589(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) for the fiscal year 1986, $25,614,000, and for the fiscal year 1987, $25,614,000, of which amounts $6,146,000 shall be available in each fiscal year only to pay necessary expenses incurred in connection with arms control negotiations conducted with the Government of the Soviet Union on strategic arms reductions, intermediate-range nuclear forces, and space and defensive weapons; and".

SEC. 703. REPORTS ON ADHERENCE TO AND COMPLIANCE WITH AGREEMENTS.

The Arms Control and Disarmament Act (22 U.S.C. 2551 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"The Congress determines that the achievement and maintenance of successful controls upon armaments requires official and public confidence that the parties are expected to adhere to their commitments and that the parties will be held accountable for failure to meet obligations. Without such confidence, existing arms control accords are eroded, and the prospects are jeopardized for new agreements which can place further controls on the competition in nuclear and conventional weapons and which can increase international stability. In accordance with this determination—

"(1) the President shall submit, not later than January 31 of each year, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report prepared by the Director, in coordination with the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Energy, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the Director of Central Intelligence, on the adherence of the United States to obligations undertaken in arms control agreements and on any problems related to compliance by other nations with the provisions of bilateral and multilateral arms control agreements to which the United States is a party;

"(2) the section of the report dealing with United States adherence shall include information on the policies and organization of each relevent agency or department of the United States to ensure adherence, a description of national security programs with a direct bearing on adherence questions and of steps being taken to ensure adherence, and a compilation of any substantive questions raised during the previous year regarding United States adherence, together with an assessment of such issues and the need for any corrective action; and

"(3) the section of the report dealing with problems of compliance by other nations shall include, in the case of each treaty or agreement about which compliance questions exist—

"(A) a description of each significant issue raised and efforts made and contemplated with the other party to seek a resolution of the difficulty;

"(B) an assessment of damage, if any, to United States security and other interests; and

"(C) recommendations as to any steps which should be considered to redress any damage to United States national security and to reduce compliance problems.

"The report required by this section shall be provided in unclassified form, with classified annexes, as appropriate.".

SEC. 704. PAY FOR DEPUTY DIRECTOR AND ASSISTANT DIRECTORS.

(1) in section 5314, by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Deputy Director of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.";

(2) in section 5315—

(A) by striking out

"Deputy Director of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency."; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Assistant Directors, United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (4).";

and

(3) in section 5316, by striking out

"Assistant Directors, United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (4).".

(b) COMPLIANCE WITH BUDGET ACT.—Any new spending authority (within the meaning of section 401 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) which is provided under the amendments made by this section shall be effective for any fiscal year only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.

SEC. 705. NEW BUILDING IN GENEVA FOR THE USE OF THE UNITED STATES ARMS CONTROL NEGOTIATING TEAMS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the United States is party to vital talks on arms control in Geneva, Switzerland;

(2) these talks include negotiations on strategic nuclear weapons, intermediate range nuclear weapons, space and defense systems, a bilateral United States-Soviet forum, called the Standing Consultative Commission, and a multilateral forum, called the Conference on Disarmament;

(3) the United States delegations to these talks occupy buildings and spaces insufficiently secure, modernized, or large enough to permit those delegations to conduct their work efficiently;

(4) the United States delegations to the strategic, intermediate and space and defense talks in particular occupy space in the Botanic Building that is also occupied by offices of numerous other, non-United States organizations, and shares common walls and parking facilities with these delegations;

(5) arms control negotiations require sophisticated security facilities, telecommunications equipment, simultaneous translation capabilities and other specialized services; and

(6) the Soviet Union, for its part, has made available for its negotiating team a modern, secure, well-equipped building dedicated for the use of its arms control negotiating teams.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) in order to facilitate the effective work of the United States arms control negotiating teams, and to provide for them a dedicated structure capable of supporting their vital tasks on a permanent basis, the Secretary of State should submit to the Congress a report on the feasibility, cost, location, and requirements of a structure to house the United States arms control negotiating teams in Geneva;

(2) this report should be submitted as soon as possible; and

(3) this matter should be included in the consideration of the 1985 supplemental appropriation process.

SEC. 706. STUDY OF MEASURES TO ENHANCE CRISIS STABILITY AND CONTROL.

(a) STUDY.—The Secretary of State and the Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency shall conduct a detailed and complete study and evaluation of additional measures which both enhance the security of the United States and reduce the likelihood of nuclear weapons use by contributing to crisis stability or crisis control capabilities, including specific consideration of the following measures:

(1) Increased redundancy of direct communications link circuits, including the creation of new survivable circuits and terminals, located outside the national capitals which have access to the command and control system of the country in which they are located.

(2) Establishment of redundant, survivable direct communications links between and among all nuclear-armed states.

(3) Conclusion of an agreement creating "non-target" sanctuaries only for certain direct communications link circuits to enhance survivability of communications.

(4) Creation in advance of standard operating procedures for communicating, and possibly cooperating, with the Soviet Union and other states in the event of nuclear attacks by third parties on either the United States or Soviet Union.

(5) Addition to the Incidents At Sea agreement of a prohibition on the "locking on" of fire control radars on ships and planes of the other side, an agreement on the separation of naval forces during specified periods of crisis, and other such measures relevant to the Incidents At Sea agreement.

(6) Placement by the United States and the Soviet Union of unmanned launch sensors in the land-based missile fields of both countries.

(7) Establishment of anti-submarine operations free zones designed to enhance the security of ballistic missile submarines.

(8) Installation of permissive action links aboard the ballistic missile submarines of the United States, which might possibly be activated or deactivated at various levels of alert, and encouragement of the Soviet Union to do the same.

(9) Establishment of training programs for National Command Authority officials to familiarize them with alert procedures, communications capabilities, nuclear weapons release authority procedures, and the crisis control and stability implications thereof.

(10) Include in standard operating procedure the relocation in a crisis of a National Command Authority official outside Washington, D.C. to a secure location with access to the strategic command and control system, and announce the institution of this procedure to relevant foreign governments.

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary of State and the Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency shall submit a report of the study and evaluation under subsection (a) to the Committees on Armed Services and Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committees on Armed Services and Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives by January 1, 1986. Such report should be available in both a classified, if necessary, and unclassified format.

SEC. 707. POLICY TOWARD BANNING CHEMICAL WEAPONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) chemical weapons are among the most terrible weapons in today's military arsenals;

(2) it is the objective of the United States to eliminate the threat of chemical warfare through a comprehensive and verifiable ban on chemical weapons;

(3) the United States is vigorously pursuing a multilateral agreement to ban chemical weapons;

(4) the negotiation of a verifiable, bilateral agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union would be a significant step toward achieving a worldwide ban on chemical weapons;

(5) bilateral discussions relating to a ban on chemical weapons took place in July and August of 1984 between the United States and Soviet delegations to the Conference on Disarmament; and

(6) such endeavors could serve the security interests of humankind.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the President—

(1) should be commended for his efforts to negotiate a multilateral agreement banning chemical weapons;

(2) should continue to pursue vigorously such an agreement; and

(3) should seek the continuation and development of bilateral discussions between the United States and the Soviet Union to achieve a comprehensive and verifiable ban on chemical weapons.

SEC. 708. POLICY REGARDING A JOINT STUDY BY THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION OF THE CONSEQUENCES OF NUCLEAR WINTER.

It is the sense of the Congress that the President should propose to the Government of the Soviet Union during any arms control talks held with such Government that—

(1) the United States and the Soviet Union should jointly study the atmospheric, climatic, environmental, and biological consequences of nuclear explosions, sometimes known as "nuclear winter", and the impact that nuclear winter would have on the national security of both nations;

(2) such a joint study should include the sharing and exchange of information and findings on the nuclear winter phenomena and make recommendations on possible joint research projects that would benefit both nations; and

(3) at an appropriate time the other nuclear weapon states (the United Kingdom, France, and the People's Republic of China) should be involved in the study.

TITLE VIII—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. TERMINATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCIES BY JOINT RESOLUTION.

Section 202 of the National Emergencies Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) there is enacted into law a joint resolution terminating the emergency; or"; and

(B) in the second sentence, by striking out "concurrent" and inserting in lieu thereof "joint";

(2) in subsection (b), by striking out "concurrent" and inserting in lieu thereof "joint"; and

(3) in subsection (c), by striking out "concurrent" each of the six places it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "joint".

SEC. 802. UNITED STATES INSTITUTE OF PEACE.

It is the sense of the Congress that, pursuant to title XVII of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (22 U.S.C. 4601 et seq.), nominations to the Board of Directors for the United States Institute of Peace should be submitted to the Senate on a timely basis to permit implementation of the congressional mandate.

SEC. 803. EX GRATIA PAYMENT TO THE GOVERNMENT OF SWITZERLAND.

Section 39 of the Trading With the Enemy Act (62 Stat. 1246; 50 U.S.C. App. 39) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) Notwithstanding any of the provisions of subsections (a) through (d) of this section, the Attorney General is authorized to pay from property vested in or transferred to the Attorney General under this Act, the sum of $20,000 as an ex gratia payment to the Government of Switzerland in accordance with the terms of the agreement entered into by that Government and the Government of the United States on March 12, 1980.".

SEC. 804. POLICY TOWARD APPLICATION OF THE YALTA AGREEMENT.

(a) FINDINGS—The Congress finds that—

(1) during World War II, representatives of the United States, Britain, and the Soviet Union took part in agreements and understandings concerning other peoples and nations in Europe;

(2) the Soviet Union has not adhered to its obligation undertaken in the 1945 Yalta agreement to guarantee free elections in the countries involved, specifically the pledge for the "earliest possible establishment of free elections of government responsive to the wills of the people and to facilitate where necessary the holding of such elections";

(3) the strong desire of the people of Central and Eastern Europe to exercise their national sovereignty and self-determination and to resist Soviet domination has been demonstrated on many occasions since 1945, including armed resistance to the forcible Soviet takeover of the Baltic Republics and resistance in the Ukraine as well as in the German Democratic Republic in 1953, in Hungary in 1956, in Czechoslovakia in 1968, and in Poland in 1956, 1970, and since 1980;

(4) it is appropriate that the United States express the hopes of the people of the United States that the people of Central and Eastern Europe be permitted to exercise their national sovereignty and self-determination free from Soviet interference; and

(9) it is appropriate for the United States to reject any interpretation or application that, as a result of the signing of the 1945 Yalta executive agreements, the United States accepts and recognizes in any way Soviet hegemony over the countries of Eastern Europe.

(b) POLICY.—(1) The United States does not recognize as legitimate any spheres of influence in Europe and it reaffirms its refusal to recognize such spheres in the present or in the future, by repudiating any attempts to legitimize the domination of East European nations by the Soviet Union through the Yalta executive agreement.

(2) The United States proclaims the hope that the people of Eastern Europe shall again enjoy the right to self-determination within a framework that will sustain peace, that they shall again have the right to choose a form of government under which they shall live, and that the sovereign rights of self-determination shall be restored to them in accordance with the pledge of the Atlantic Charter and with provisions of the United Nations Charter and the Helsinki Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

SEC. 805. POLICY TOWARD TREATMENT OF SOVIET PENTECOSTALS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) it is the policy of the Government of the Soviet Union to hinder and deny the free practice of religion and to deny freedom to emigrate to the victims of religious persecution;

(2) such policies are a violation of the letter and spirit of the Charter of the United Nations, the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights, and the Helsinki Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe;

(3) members of the 170-member Pentecostal Christian community living in Chuguyevka in the Soviet Far East have allegedly undergone persecution at the hands of the Soviet authorities as a result of their attempts to practice their religious beliefs;

(4) the Soviet authorities allegedly have refused to allow members of that Pentecostal community to emigrate from the Soviet Union;

(5) when, on Monday May 13, 1985, four members of the Pentecostal community of Chuguyevka attempted to enter the United States Embassy in Moscow in an attempt to seek refuge and make their plight known, they were intercepted by Soviet guards stationed outside the Embassy;

(6) in the scuffle that ensued three of the Pentecostals were beaten severely and arrested by the Soviet guards, while the fourth Pentecostal gained entrance to the Embassy and was interviewed by United States officials; and

(7) upon agreeing to leave the United States Embassy the man was driven to the subway in a diplomatic car where he was detained by Soviet police before he could enter the subway.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the Soviet Union has acted in violation of the human rights of the Pentecostal community in Chuguyevka by hindering the practice of their religious beliefs and refusing to allow them to emigrate from the Soviet Union;

(2) personnel of the Government of the Soviet Union acted in violation of the human rights of the four members of the Pentecostal community who attempted to enter the United States Embassy in Moscow, particularly in using excessive force in an attempt to prevent their entry;

(3) the United States Department of State should continue through all available channels to assure the safety of the four persons who attempted to enter the United States Embassy, and to seek to persuade the Government of the Soviet Union to allow the members of the Pentecostal community in Chuguyevka to emigrate to the West; and

(4) the Secretary of State should undertake a study of United States policy relating to the granting of asylum in United States embassies abroad and develop recommendations for the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives as to where current policy might be adjusted with relation to incidents over the past five years where asylum has been requested at United States embassies abroad.

SEC. 806. DEMOCRACY ON TAIWAN.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) peace has prevailed in the Taiwan Strait since the normalization of relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China;

(2) the United States expects the future of Taiwan to be settled peacefully and considers a secure Taiwan free from external threat an indispensable element for the island's further democratization and a goal set forth in the Taiwan Relations Act;

(3) the authorities on Taiwan are striving to achieve greater democracy at the local level;

(4) an increasing number of native Taiwanese have been appointed to responsible positions at the provincial and national level on Taiwan;

(5) martial law measures tend to impede progress toward democracy and to abridge guarantees of human rights;

(6) movement toward greater democracy on Taiwan serves to bolster continued American public support for the moral and legal responsibilities set forth in the Taiwan Relations Act;

(7) the United States, in the Taiwan Relations Act, has reaffirmed as a national objective the preservation and enhancement of the human rights of all the people on Taiwan; and

(8) the United States considers democracy a fundamental human right.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is therefore the sense of the Congress that—

(1) one important element of a peaceful future for Taiwan is greater participation in the political process by all the people on Taiwan; and

(2) accordingly, the United States should encourage the authorities on Taiwan, in the spirit of the Taiwan Relations Act, to work vigorously toward this end.

SEC. 807. INCREASE UNITED STATES-CHINA TRADE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the People's Republic of China has made substantial progress in promoting market-oriented practices throughout the Chinese economy;

(2) the Chinese economy has responded to this increased liberalization with record growth that last year alone resulted in increases in the real gross national product of an estimated 13 percent;

(3) this growth has created significant new demand for a vast array of products and services that can be met by American producers;

(4) United States trade with the People's Republic of China totaled only $6,000,000,000 in 1984 and was again in deficit by more than $50,000,000;

(5) increased exports are essential to the creation of American jobs and to the vitality of the American economy; and

(6) the People's Republic of China represents the world's largest potential market.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that, consistent with overall American foreign policy and national security objectives, the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce should take appropriate steps to increase United States-China trade with a view to improving the trade balance, increasing American jobs through export growth, and assuring significant United States participation in the growing Chinese market.

SEC. 808. USE OF UNITED STATES OWNED RUPEES.

Section 903 of the United States-India Fund for Cultural, Educational, and Scientific Cooperation Act (22 U.S.C. 290j-1) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 903."; and

(2) by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) Pending completion of the negotiation of an agreement with the Government of India, the annual earnings generated by the moneys appropriated by the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1985, may be used for the purposes set out in section 902(a).".

SEC. 809. REFUGEES IN THAILAND.

(a) APPRECIATION FOR THE RESPONSE OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THAILAND.—The Congress recognizes and expresses appreciation for the extraordinary willingness of the Government of Thailand to respond in a humanitarian way to the influx of refugees fleeing Vietnamese communist oppression.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) Cambodians, Laotians, and Vietnamese seeking asylum and refuge in Thailand should not be involuntarily repatriated or otherwise put at risk; and

(2) every effort should be made to provide increased security for refugees in camps in Thailand which should include an increased presence by international humanitarian organizations.

(c) REVIEW OF CERTAIN CAMBODIAN REFUGEES.—

(1) The Secretary of State should—

(A) work with the Government of Thailand and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to conduct a review of the status of Cambodians who have not been permitted to register at refugee camps in Thailand; and

(B) implement a humanitarian solution to their plight.

(2) The Secretary of State, with the assistance of appropriate agencies, should conduct a review of those Cambodians who have been rejected for admission to the United States to ensure such decisions are consistent with the letter and spirit of United States refugee and immigration law.

(3) The Secretary of State, with the assistance of appropriate agencies, should institute as expeditiously as possible a family reunification program for those refugees in Thailand, including those at the border who have family members in the United States.

(4) The Secretary of State should provide for a program of educational assistance for Cambodians in the border camps and for improved literacy training in all camps.

SEC. 810. POLICY REGARDING FOREIGN EXCHANGE INTERVENTION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the trade deficit looms larger than any other threat to the ability of the United States to generate jobs and create economic well-being;

(2) the trade deficit continues to deteriorate even from the 1984 level of $123,000,000,000;

(3) the trade deficit will continue to deteriorate until the value of the dollar declines on foreign exchange markets;

(4) the dollar's rise may slow down but is unlikely to fall sufficiently as a result of Congress' contemplated budget deficit reduction measures;

(5) the value of the dollar would probably fall under a number of tax reform proposals but industries losing market share due to the exchange rate may not be able to wait for a complete tax package;

(6) the only remaining timely option for lowering the value of the dollar is intervention in foreign exchange markets by the Secretary of the Treasury or the Federal Reserve Board;

(7) any such intervention must be strong enough to achieve the intent of the Congress of lowering the dollar's value but sufficiently moderate to prevent a sudden drop in its value;

(8) any such intervention in order to assure a gradual decline and protect against too large a drop in the value of the dollar, will require coordinated action by the central banks of Europe and Japan as well as the United States; and

(9) such coordination is especially important to strengthen economic and political ties with the allies of the United States and to promote consistent macroeconomic policies to the mutual benefit of all.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—Therefore, it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, in concert with United States allies and coordinated with the central banks of the Group of Five or other major central banks, should take such steps as are necessary to lower gradually the value of the dollar;

(2) such steps should not exclude intervention in the foreign exchange markets;

(3) the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board should work to ensure that the domestic macroeconomic policies of the United States and its allies are forged to reinforce rather than oppose one another.

SEC. 811. COMMENDING MAYOR TEDDY KOLLEK OF JERUSALEM.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Mayor Teddy Kollek has worked to promote harmony among all the people of Jerusalem; and

(2) he has promoted freedom of access to religious shrines for Muslims, Christians, and Jews; and

(3) through his efforts the aesthetic character of the city has been enhanced.

(b) COMMENDATION.—Therefore, the Congress commends Mayor Kollek for his efforts over the years.

SEC. 812. JAPAN-UNITED STATES SECURITY RELATIONSHIP AND EFFORTS BY JAPAN TO FULFILL SELF-DEFENSE RESPONSIBILITIES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress hereby finds—

(1) the Japan-United States security relationship is the foundation of the peace and security of Japan and the Far East, as well as a major contributor to the protection of the United States and of the democratic freedoms and economic prosperity enjoyed by both the United States and Japan;

(2) the threats to our two democracies have increased significantly since 1976, principally through the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the expansion of Soviet armed forces in the Far East, the invasion of Cambodia by Vietnam, and the instability in the Persian Gulf region as signified by the continuing Iran-Iraq conflict;

(3) in recognition of these and other threats, the United States has greatly increased its annual defense spending through sustained real growth averaging 8.8 percent yearly between fiscal 1981 and 1985, and cumulative real growth of 50 percent in that period;

(4) the United States Government appreciates the May 1981 commitment by the Prime Minister of Japan that, pursuant to the Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security of 1960 between Japan and the United States, Japan, on its own initiative, would seek to make even greater efforts for improving its defense capabilities, and pursuant to Japan's own Constitution, it was national policy for his country to acquire and maintain the self-defense forces adequate for the defense of its land area and surrounding airspace and sealanes, out to a distance of 1,000 miles;

(5) the United States Government applauds the policy of Japan to obtain the capabilities to defend its sea and air lanes out to 1,000 miles, expects that these capabilities should be acquired by the end of the decade, and recognizes that achieving those capabilities would significantly improve the national security of both Japan and the United States;

(6) the United States Government appreciates the contribution already made by Japan through the Host Nation Support Program and its recent efforts to increase its defense spending; and

(7) Japan, however, in recent years consistently has not provided sufficient funding and resources to meet its self-defense needs and to meet common United States-Japan defense objectives and alliance responsibilities.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that Japan, to fulfill its self-defense responsibilities pursuant to the 1960 Mutual Cooperation and Security Treaty with the United States, and in accordance with the national policy declaration made by its Prime Minister in May 1981, to develop a 1,000 mile airspace and sealanes defense capability, should implement a 1986-1990 Mid-Term Defense Plan containing sufficient funding, program acquisition, and force development resources to obtain the agreed-upon 1,000 mile self-defense capabilities by the end of the decade, including the allocation of sufficient budgetary resources annually to reduce substantially the ammunition, logistics, and sustainability shortfalls of its self-defense forces.

(c) SUBMISSION TO CONGRESS.—Not later than March 31, 1986, and on an annual basis thereafter, the President should submit to the appropriate committees of Congress, in both a classified and unclassified form, detailed and extensive information to permit the Congress to understand Japan's progress toward actually fulfilling its common defense commitment, including the development and implementation of a 1986-1990 Mid-Term Defense Plan fully funded for Japan to achieve 1000 mile self-defense capabilities by 1990. Such information shall include a description of actions taken by the United States Government in the preceding year to encourage Japan to meet its 1000 mile self-defense commitment by 1990.

SEC. 813. DIPLOMATIC EQUIVALENCE AND RECIPROCITY.

(a) STATEMENT OF CONGRESSIONAL POLICY.—(1) It is the policy of the Congress that the number of nationals of the Soviet Union admitted to the United States who serve as diplomatic or consular personnel of the Soviet Union to the United States shall be substantially equivalent to the number of United States nationals admitted to the Soviet Union who serve as diplomatic or consular personnel of the United States in the Soviet Union unless the President determines that the admission of additional Soviet diplomatic and consular personnel would be in the best interests of the United States.

(2) The policy expressed in paragraph (1) does not apply to dependents or spouses who do not serve as diplomatic or consular personnel.

(b) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State and the Attorney General should prepare and, not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, should transmit to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate, and to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives, a report setting forth a plan for ensuring that the number of Soviet nationals described in subsection (a) does not exceed the limitation described in that section.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "diplomatic or consular personnel" means the members of the diplomatic mission or the members of the consular post, as the case may be;

(2) the term "members of the diplomatic mission" is used within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations (done April 18, 1961); and

(3) the term "members of the consular post" is used within the meaning of Article 1(g) of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (done April 24, 1963).

SEC. 814. UNITED STATES INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL COMMISSION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established the United States International Narcotics Control Commission (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Commission").

(b) DUTIES.—The Commission is authorized and directed—

(1) to monitor and promote international compliance with narcotics control treaties, including eradication and other relevant issues; and

(2) to monitor and encourage United States Government and private programs seeking to expand international cooperation against drug abuse and narcotics trafficking.

(c) MEMBERSHIP.—(1) The Commission shall be composed of 12 members as follows:

(A) 7 Members of the Senate appointed by the President of the Senate, 4 of whom (including the member designated as Chairman) shall be selected from the majority party of the Senate, after consultation with the majority leader, and 3 of whom (including the member designated as Cochairman) shall be selected from the minority party of the Senate, after consultation with the minority leader.

(B) 5 members of the public to be appointed by the President after consultation with the members of the appropriate congressional committees.

(2) There shall be a Chairman and a Cochairman of the Commission.

(d) POWERS.—In carrying out this section, the Commission may require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as it deems necessary. Subpoenas may be issued over the signature of the Chairman of the Commission or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by the Chairman or such member. The Chairman of the Commission, or any member designated by him, may administer oaths to any witness.

(e) REPORT BY PRESIDENT TO COMMISSION.—In order to assist the Commission in carrying out its duties, the President shall submit to the Commission a copy of the report required by section 481(e) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2991(e)).

(f) REPORT TO SENATE.—The Commission is authorized and directed to report to the Senate with respect to the matters covered by this section on a periodic basis and to provide information to Members of the Senate as requested. For each fiscal year for which an appropriation is made the Commission shall submit to the Congress a report on its expenditures under such appropriation.

(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—(1) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission $325,000 for each fiscal year, to remain available until expended, to assist in meeting the expenses of the Commission for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section.

(2) For purposes of section 502(b) of the Mutual Security Act of 1954 (22 U.S.C. 1754(b)), the Commission shall be deemed to be a standing committee of the Senate and shall be entitled to the use of funds in accordance with such section.

(h) STAFF.—The Commission may appoint and fix the pay of such staff personnel as it deems desirable, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

(i) TERMINATION.—The Commission shall cease to exist on September 30, 1987.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendment to H.R. 2068, the bill to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Department of State, the United States Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The Senate amendment struck all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill and the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached in the committee of conference, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

With respect to the fiscal year 1986 authorization requests for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, and the Board for International Broadcasting, the committee of conference agreed to authorization levels that are below the President's request for approximately $30 million for the State Department, $96 million for the USIA, and $17 million for the Board for International Broadcasting. The entire fiscal year 1986 budget request for this legislation is $130.5 million below the executive branch request.

For fiscal year 1987, the committee of conference agreed to authorization levels only $45 million above the fiscal year 1986 levels. The committee's recommendation amounts substantially to a freeze in the authorization levels for the U.S. Information Agency and the Board for International Broadcasting, and only a 2.5 percent inflation allowance for the Administration of Foreign Affairs in Department of State.

Should the executive branch request a supplemental authorization and appropriation for fiscal year 1986 above the approved levels for any agencies authorized by this legislation, such additional sums shall not be offset by reductions in any of the abovementioned accounts or any other international affairs account. The programs authorized in this legislation are considered by the committee of conference to be vital elements for the conduct of U.S. foreign policy and the promotion of U.S. national security.

The committee of conference notes that the amounts authorized for the Department of State do not include $118,174,000 for each of fiscal years 1986 asnd 1987 which is permanently authorized for the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund. The following table summarizes the action of the committee of conference:

[By fiscal year; in thousands of dollars]

[1] The House and Senate figures listed for Administration of Foreign Affairs do not include $118,174,000 which is permanently authorized for the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund.
[2] Pending supplementals (H.R. 2568) include $2 million for Salmon Fisheries Commission and $1 million for the Fisherman's Protective Fund. In addition, the higher appropriations amount for this account contains $2.275 million for the Nogales Sewage Project, a one-time appropriation for construction, through the United States-Mexico Water Boundary Commission.

A summary of actions taken by the committee of conference on issues that were in disagreement follows:

PERMANENT AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

The House bill provides permanent authority to the Department of State for appropriations for mandatory payments to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund and requires notification to the authorizing committees pursuant to such requests.

The Senate amendment earmarks $118,174,000 for each of fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund.

The conference substitute is identical to the House provision.

U.N. PEACEKEEPING FORCES

The House bill repeals the permament authorization for contributions to U.N. peacekeeping forces.

The Senate amendment earmarks $47,400,000 for each of the fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for U.S. payments to the U.N. peacekeeping forces in the Middle East.

The conference substitute is identical to the House provision. Funds for this purpose have been provided under the administration of foreign affairs account.

U.S. NATIONAL COMMISSION TO UNESCO

The House bill earmarks $250,000 from the administration of foreign affairs account for each of the fiscal years 1986 and 1987 to enable the U.S. National Commission on Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Cooperation to maintain a liaison between the U.S. Government, the U.S. private sector and UNESCO. This funding would enable the United States, even though it is not a member of UNESCO, to maintain an informal linkage with the organization, and enable the U.S. educational, scientific, and cultural communities to support a base for any future U.S.-UNESCO relationship.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

WORLD COMMISSION ON ENVIRONMENTAL AND DEVELOPMENT

The Senate amendment earmarks $750,000 for each of the fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the World Commission on Environment and Development.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

The managers believe that the World Commission on Environment and Development holds the potential to make a meaningful contribution to resolving environment and development problems. Strong U.S. leadership may be necessary to ensure that the Commission fulfills its mandate and addresses the most important and relevant issues. Administration witnesses have testified that U.S. leadership and financial support have been vital to the success of the United Nations Environment Program. It is not unreasonable to assume that a similar strategy could succeed at the Commission.

USE OF REFUGEE ASSISTANCE FUNDS

The House and Senate bills earmark funds for certain groups of refugees as follows:

[By fiscal year; in thousands of dollars]

	1986	1987
Refugees in Israel	12,500	25,000
African refugees	56,000	56,000
Antipiracy	2,500	1,750
ICRC	4,500	4,500

The House amendment earmarked $25 million for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the resettlement of Soviet, Eastern European, African, and other refugees in Israel in recognition of the particular needs of the Ethiopian Jews for health care, skills, and language training before they can become self-sufficient.

The Senate amendment contained a similar earmark.

The conference substitute retained an earmark for refugees resettling in Israel, but reduced it to $12.5 million in fiscal year 1986 and $25 million in fiscal year 1987. The reduced earmark for fiscal year 1986 takes into account the action of the Congress in the 1985 Supplemental Appropriation Act providing an increase of $12.5 million for this purpose.

AFRICAN REFUGEES

The House amendment earmarked $61 million in fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for African refugee assistance.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conference substitute provides an earmark of $56 million in fiscal year 1986 and fiscal year 1987. This increase of $5 million over the funds requested by the executive branch is provided in recognition of the grave needs of the almost 4 million refugees in Africa for improved water supply, shelter, health and educational services, and other humanitarian assistance.

PIRACY IN THE GULF OF THAILAND

The House bill earmarked $2.5 million for fiscal year 1986 and $1.75 million for 1987 to combat piracy in the Gulf of Thailand.

The Senate amendment contained no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is similar to the House bill. The managers intend that the funds should be used: To suppress and deter effectively the attacks on refugees fleeing from Indochina by boat; to provide assistance to pirate victims; to promote the rescue of refugees in distress at sea in Southeast Asia; and to strengthen protection measures for Indochinese boat refugees. Programs for enhanced medical/counseling services, increased enforcement on land, and expansion of rescue at sea are especially deserving of support at a multilateral, bilateral, nongovernmental level.

INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE OF THE RED CROSS

The Senate amendment earmarks $4.5 million in fiscal year 1986 and fiscal year 1987 for the regular budget of the ICRC and states U.S. policy to contribute to the ICRC, in any financial year, an amount not less than 20 percent of the regular budget of the ICRC and to support generously the special appeals made by the ICRC.

The House had no similar provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate provision.

ENHANCED RECEPTION AND PLACEMENT SERVICES

The House limited to $2 million the amount of funds which may be used by the Department of State for new types of demonstration and pilot programs with enhanced reception and placement services for refugees for periods longer than 30 days.

The Senate had no similar amendment.

The conference substitute is identical to the House provision.

The managers intend that any enhanced domestic resettlement services, except for these pilot programs, should be covered by a separate authorization for appropriations, rather than from the funds authorized in this act.

SECURITY RELATED ACTIVITIES

The Senate amendment earmarks not less than $311 million for fiscal year 1986 out of the Department of State's administration of foreign affairs account for capital projects and improvements and the salaries and expenses associated with security-related personnel.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

THE U.N. HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR REFUGEES AUDIT

The House bill prohibits U.S. funding of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees unless the United Nations provides for quarterly audits of the UNHCR by the U.N. Joint Inspection Unit, and until such audits are made available for inspection by the Comptroller General of the United States. It also provides that the Comptroller General shall inspect and report to the Congress on each audit.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute amends the Migration and Refugee Assistance Act to direct that no funds may be paid to the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees unless, by September 1, 1987, the High Commissioner provides for annual program audits of the UNHCR by an independent consultant, and such audits are made available to the Department of State and the General Accounting Office, it also provides that the Comptroller General of the United States shall inspect each audit and submit a report to the Congress. The first audit shall begin not later than September 1, 1987. The managers intend that "independent consultant" means an internationally recognized public accountancy firm which is independent of the United Nations.

UNHCR PROCUREMENT STUDY

The House bill directs the Comptroller General of the United States to study the origin of goods acquired with funds contributed by the United States to the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees. This section also requires that the Comptroller General report the findings to the Congress.

The Senate amendment contained no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue.

AUTHORIZED USES OF APPROPRIATED FUNDS

The Senate amendment conforms sections of the Basic Authorities Act removing the requirement that specific reference be made in an appropriation act to authorize certain activities.

The House bill substitute is similar to the Senate amendment and provides that the Secretary may use appropriated funds for these purposes.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY POSITIONS AT THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The House bill creates a new position for an Assistant Secretary of State. It also places the Director General of the Foreign Service and the Inspector General of the Department of State under the executive level IV salary level, subject to appropriations action.

The Senate amendment increases the number of Assistant Secretaries at the Department of State from 13 to 14, but does not address the salary issue for the Inspector General or the Director General.

The conference substitute is similar to the Senate amendment. The effect of the amendment is to enable the Department of State to designate two new Assistant Secretaries of State for Intelligence and Research and for Politico-Military Affairs, respectively. It also replaces the position of Director of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research with the position of an Assistant Secretary of State.

UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR AGRICULTURAL AFFAIRS

The Senate amendment creates a new Under Secretary for Agricultural Affairs in the Department of State.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute redesignates the current Under Secretary for Economic Affairs as Under Secretary for Economic and Agricultural Affairs.

DETAIL TO OTHER AGENCIES

The House bill repeals existing legislation dealing with reimbursement for detailed State Department personnel, to allow the Secretary of State to detail individuals to other agencies for periods longer than 1 year without requiring reimbursement by other agencies.

The Senate amendment amends existing legislation to allow an exemption to the 1-year-reimbursable limitation. The number of employees exceeding that limit cannot be greater than 15 or their term of assignment exceed 2 years.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

SERVICES RELATING TO MIGRATION AND REFUGEE ASSISTANCE

The House bill authorizes the Bureau for Refugee Programs to contract for personal services abroad and provides that certain individuals employed under such contracts would not be considered employees of the United States.

The Senate amendment provides that certain individuals employed by contract for overseas services shall not be considered employees of the U.S. Government, except relating to compensation for work injuries, and for claims under section 2(f) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act.

The conference substitute authorizes the Bureau to contract for personal services abroad, provides that such individuals would not become U.S. employees for purposes of any law administered by the Office of Personnel Management, and provides authority for the Secretary of State to apply overseas claims settlement and other authorities administered by the State Department to such persons. It is intended that other authorities would include the provision of benefits such as might be available under pending hostage relief legislation.

It is the managers intent that this section should not be interpreted as an entitlement.

INDIVIDUALS EMPLOYED ABROAD DEEMED TO BE EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED STATES FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES

The Senate amendment provides that certain individuals who perform personal services contracts abroad under existing authority would not be deemed employees of the U.S. Government except for the purposes of the Federal Employees Compensation Act and the Secretary's authority to administratively settle tort claims abroad.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical in substance to the position stated in the substitute above regarding personal services contracting for migration and refugee assistance.

PERFORMANCE PAY

The House bill amends the Foreign Service Act to: (a) Eliminate the current 50 percent limit on the number of Senior Foreign Service members eligible to receive performance pay and establish a maximum payment pool; (b) establish a minimum individual award of 5 percent of basic pay; and (c) provides that performance pay which is not payable within a fiscal year due to the pay cap may be paid in the next fiscal year. These provisions would conform Foreign Service provisions to those in Civil Service law.

The Senate amendment contained no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue.

SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE MEMBERS

The Senate amendment would allow the appointment of a Director General from outside the ranks of the Senior Foreign Service. This section also provides that the Chair of the Board of the Foreign Service shall be appointed by the President. Neither the Board members nor the chair need to be Senior Foreign Service members. This provision also excludes members of the Senior Foreign Service from the employee's bargaining unit.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute provides that the Chair of the Board of the Foreign Service shall be appointed by the President.

FOREIGN SERVICE ASSOCIATES

The Senate amendment expresses the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should conduct a pilot project designed to increase the employment of spouses of U.S. personnel at a U.S. mission and report to the Congress on the design of such project by February 1, 1986.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate language with an amendment stating that the pilot project would be conducted in accordance with section 311(b) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980. It would also require that the Secretary's report to the Congress would include an evaluation of the effects of the pilot program on the full-time career positions in the Foreign Service and on overseas positions for Foreign Service nationals.

The managers are concerned that such a pilot program, or any similar permanent employment program, should not be used to fill full-time Foreign Service career positions, nor should it detract from positions filled by Foreign Service national employees who provide continuity and special expertise for U.S. missions overseas.

LATERAL ENTRY INTO THE FOREIGN SERVICE FOR BUSINESSMEN AND FARMERS

The Senate amendment directs the Department of State to conduct a study on the feasibility and desirability of creating a temporary lateral entry program for farmers and businessmen and other occupations and requires a report to Congress on the results of the study 180 days after enactment.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute directs the Secretary of State to conduct a study on the feasibility of creating a program of lateral entry into the service of U.S. businessmen, farmers, and other occupations. It also requires the Secretary to report the results of such a study to the Congress within 180 days after the date of enactment of this act.

HEALTH CARE BENEFITS

The Senate amendment makes the Department of State the primary insurer of Foreign Service personnel abroad and the Foreign Service Benefit Plan the secondary insurer. It will allow the Foreign Service Benefit Plan to offer a low-priced, low-option health insurance plan to supplement the benefits provided by the Foreign Service Act.

The House bill contained no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

FOREIGN SERVICE INSTITUTE

The House bill provides for a new Foreign Service Institute Facility and contains House Public Works Committee amendments which authorize the Government Services Administration (GSA), (with funds transferred by State, not exceeding $11 million in fiscal year 1986 and 1987) to conduct feasibility studies and acquire a site within proximity of the State Department but outside the District of Columbia. Funds transferred to GSA for construction are limited to $50 million, after fiscal year 1987, which may not be expended until after a congressional notice period, which excludes recess periods. The House bill also places custody and control of the facility in GSA, unless delegated, but requires State to pay GSA only for services performed by GSA.

The Senate amendment amends the Foreign Service Act of 1980 to authorize the Department of State to acquire a site and construct a training facility, in consultation with GSA. Preparation of plans and site acquisition is limited to $11 million in fiscal years 1986 and 1987, subject to a 30-day congressional notice period, but no authorization is included for construction funding.

At the request of the State Department, section 126 has been amended to provide that the Administrator of the General Services Administration shall delegate responsibility for the operation, maintenance, security, alteration, and repair of the facility to the Secretary of the State Department. Jurisdiction and custody of the site and facility, however, will remain with the General Services Administration. The Secretary of State, under the delegation, shall be responsible for complying with all applicable statutory requirements of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 and the Public Buildings Act of 1959. Matters relating to alterations, repairs, renovations, or construction on or to the site or to any existing or future buildings on the site shall be referred by the State Department in the House of Representatives for appropriate action to the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

INTERNATIONAL CENTER

The House bill provides authority, as amended by the House Public Works Committee, for the Department of State, in consultation with GSA, to provide for a security and maintenance facility within the Federal Diplomatic Center site, and provides for notice to Congress on construction progress.

The Senate amendment provides authority for the Department of State to request GSA to develop a security and maintenance facility within the Federal Diplomatic Center site.

The conference substitute is identical to the House provision.

SPECIAL AGENTS

The House bill provides authority for Department of State security agents to carry firearms and make arrests in the course of discharging their duties.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

PROTECTION OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

The House bill provides permanent authority for protection of foreign missions, and removes in the fourth quarter of each year the limitations on the level of assistance for individual States, allowing application of funds to areas of actual need. The bill also contains amendments to title 3, United States Code, which contains separate authority primarily for protection of U.N. missions.

The Senate amendment provides permanent authority for protection of foreign missions.

The conference substitute is identical to the House provision.

The managers understand that funds authorized under title 3 of the United States Code for purposes of such protection (3 U.S.C. 208) are authorized to be applied to any locality qualifying under that section for purposes of special international organization activities approved by the Secretary of State, and which are notified to the Congress prior to such approval.

It is also the understanding of the managers that, while the provision of protective services, and the level of such services to missions to international organizations qualifying under title 3, section 202 of the United States Code is set by the level of funds made available under that section, provisions of the Foreign Missions Act of 1982 may otherwise be applied for such protective services, such as section 208(b) relating to liability and section 211(a) relating to the capacity of the Attorney General to seek judicial relief.

Furthermore, the authority contained in subsection (b) relating to contracts for protective services is intended to be available for both private and public agencies providing such services.

PROTECTION OF U.S. INTERESTS UNDER THE FOREIGN MISSIONS ACT

The House bill redefines foreign missions in order to include officials acting for a foreign government, but who are not now covered under existing law.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

PEACEFUL RESOLUTION OF INTERNATIONAL DISPUTES

The House bill replaces existing authority, now included in annual appropriation acts, with permanent authorization to pay expenses of arbitrations under treaties and international agreements and contracts.

The Senate amendment provides similar authority to that contained in the House version.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

CONSULAR AND PASSPORT FACILITIES AND SERVICES

The House bill directs the Secretary of State to conduct a study and submit a report to the Congress on: The extent to which U.S. consular facilities promote trade and tourism, protect U.S. citizens abroad, or protect the national interest; whether consular services are able to respond to demand; and whether consular user fees should be returned to the Department to improve passport and consular facilities.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue.

EXCESS GOVERNMENT-OWNED PROPERTY

The Senate amendment clarifies the authority of the Department of State to transfer excess property to countries for environmental purposes.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

TRADE PROMOTION BY U.S. MISSIONS ABROAD

The House bill expresses the sense of the Congress that it is in the U.S. national interest that each U.S. mission abroad provide such support as may be necessary to U.S. citizens seeking to do business in that country.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House provision.

INFORMATION SHARING CONCERNING DRUG TRAFFICKERS

The House bill directs the Department of State to cooperate with U.S. law enforcement agencies in establishing a comprehensive information system on all drug arrests of foreign nationals in the United States. It further requires the Secretary of State and the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration to agree on uniform guidelines which would permit the sharing of information on foreign drug traffickers, and requires the Secretary of State to report to the Congress within 6 months of the date of enactment on steps taken to implement this section.

The Senate amendment is similar to the House provision except that it designates the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board as the organization which shall create uniform guidelines permitting the sharing of information, and specifies that the Board instead of the Secretary of State shall submit the report required.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

EXTRADITION TREATIES

The House bill requires the Secretary of State to increase his efforts to negotiate updated extradition treaties relating to narcotics offenses with each major drug-producing country, particularly those in Latin America.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision. However, a similar provision was included in the Senate version of the foreign assistance authorization bill.

The conference substitute is the same as the House bill, with an amendment requiring the assistance of the Drug Enforcement Policy Board in negotiating new extradition treaties.

TRAVEL ADVISORY ON MEXICO

The House bill deplores the brutal murder of Drug Enforcement Administration agent Enrique Camarena and the abduction and murder of numerous other Americans, and finds that the violence perpetrated by drug traffickers in Mexico constitutes a danger to the safety of U.S. citizens. It further establishes a travel advisory on the State of Jalisco, Mexico, until those responsible for the abduction and murder of specified U.S. citizens are brought to trial and a verdict has been obtained.

The Senate amendment condemns the murder of agent Camarena, deplores the disappearance of Americans in Mexico, and commends the Government of Mexico for recent antinarcotics efforts. It also requires the Secretary of State to report to the Congress every 90 days on progress made on investigations of murdered and missing U.S. citizens and general tourist safety.

The conference substitute is the same as the House bill, with an amendment which recommends rather than directs the Secretary to issue a travel advisory, and which retains the Senate's 90-day reporting requirement. It is the intent of the managers that the reports continue through fiscal year 1987 or until such time as there has been an arrest and convictions of persons responsible for the murder of U.S. citizens in the State of Jalisco.

AMBASSADOR GAVIN

The House bill commends U.S. Ambassador to Mexico John Gavin for ensuring investigation and prosecution of the murderers of Enrique Camerena and his advocacy of strong drug enforcement programs.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

COORDINATING COMMITTEE ON EXPORT CONTROLS

The House bill states that only State Department funds and personnel may be used with respect to CoCom facilities and places restrictions on the number of officials permanently assigned to the U.S. delegation.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue.

EMPLOYEES OF INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

The Senate amendment authorizes the regulations of the travel and other activities of all UN Secretariat employees outside the U.N. headquarters district.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is similar to the Senate language and also provides for a Presidential waiver in cases where national security and foreign policy circumstances require nonapplication of the section.

The managers note that the U.S. obligation to assure the "international character" of the UN Secretariat does not create rights of travel or otherwise within the United States outside of the headquarters district, except for purposes of entry into and exit from the country; thus there is no inconsistency with U.S. treaty obligations.

Nothing in subsection (b) affects the ability of the United States to accord to the United Nations itself the right to transfer funds, control its assets or perform such other functions as are assured by international agreement. The managers note that the term "activities" in subsection (b) is intended to cover any activity, including but not limited to matters covered by section 202 of the Federal Missions Act. The managers also clearly expect that the exceptions authority made available under this subsection to the President will not be used except in compelling circumstances and on a limited basis. Finally, the term "national" in subsection (e) is intended to cover both citizens and permanent residents of the United States, as well as any person entitled to rights as a national.

INTER-AMERICAN COOPERATION IN SPACE

The House bill directs the Secretary to conduct a study regarding the feasibility of establishing a major initiative in inter-American cooperation in space, science, and technology. It also requires a report to the Congress on the findings of such a study.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

RESIDENCE OF SECRETARY OF STATE

The House bill prohibits the United States from accepting as a gift an official residence for the Secretary of State or any other official of the Department of State until the Congress authorizes such an acceptance. It also directs the Secretary to study any offer of a gift and report to the appropriate committees of the Congress.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute limits the provision to property considered for a Secretary of State's residence and requires prior notification to the Congress, together with a cost-benefit study prior to acceptance of any gift.

U.S. INSTITUTE OF PEACE

The House bill expresses the sense of the Congress that nominations to the Board of Directors for the U.S. Institute of Peace should be submitted to the Senate on a timely basis.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

RELATING TO U.S. CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE UNITED NATIONS

The Senate amendment provides that the United States will reduce its annual assessed contribution to the United Nations or its specialized agencies by 8.34 percent for each month in which the United States suspends its participation due to the fact that Israel has been illegally expelled, suspended, or denied its credentials in the General Assembly or any specialized agency of the United Nations.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment. The managers note that this provision does not apply to the programs of the International Atomic Energy Agency that provide for safeguards at nuclear facilities.

UN ORGANIZATIONS REFORM IN BUDGET PROCEDURES

The Senate amendment states that the United States may contribute no more than 20 percent of the annual budget of the United Nations unless the Secretary of State certifies that: (1) The organization has adopted a procedure for weighted voting on budgetary matters; and (2) the organization has adopted a plan to reduce salaries and pensions of its employees. This section also provides that if UNICEF does not comply with the amendment, any money for UNICEF in excess of 20 percent shall remain available to the President for grants to private voluntary organizations.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute states Congress' finding that the United Nations and its specialized agencies financed through assessed contributions have not paid sufficient attention to member governments in formulating their budgets. The substitute directs the Secretary of State to seek adoption by the United Nations and its specialized agencies of voting rights procedures on budgetary matters which would give each member state voting rights proportionate to each State's contribution to the United Nations and its specialized agencies. The conference substitute requires that no payment in excess of 20 percent of the annual budget of the United Nations and its specialized agencies be made for fiscal year 1987 or following years unless the United Nations and its specialized agencies adopt weighed voting on budgetary matters.

It is the intention of the managers that this substitute promote meaningful reform in budget procedures at the United Nations and its specialized agencies and not be used simply as a way to reduce the U.S. assessed contribution to the United Nations or its specialized agencies. For this reason the managers' intention is to provide sufficient authorization in this legislation for the United States to meet its full obligations to the United Nations in calendar years 1986 and 1987. In restricting payments for fiscal year 1987 the managers intend that the minimum amount to be paid by the United States would be 20 percent of the assessed contribution and that the authorization for funds in excess of 20 percent will remain available to permit payment of a higher assessed contribution should the intended reforms be achieved in the U.N. fiscal year for which the funds are provided. To the extent that rapid and meaningful progress toward reform in budgetary voting rights is accomplished, the managers intend that the United States fulfill its obligations to the United Nations.

It is the intent of the managers that this section not reduce U.S. contributions to international organizations serving the nations of the Western Hemisphere, especially the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO). To the extent that PAHO might be indirectly and adversely affected by this provisions, the conferees would expect the United States to increase its direct contribution to the organization.

The managers are concerned about the apparently high level of salaries paid to employees of the United Nations. The managers request that the Secretary of State conduct a study of U.N. salaries and pensions and the extent to which they exceed salaries paid to employees within the civil service of the United States. The study, along with the Secretary's recommendations for how best to achieve any needed reforms should be submitted as a report to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Foreign Affairs by October 1, 1986.

PROHIBITION OF PAYMENTS TO THE UNITED NATIONS OR SPECIALIZED AGENCIES OR ORGANIZATIONS

The Senate amendment states that U.S. contributions to the United Nations may not be used to support: (1) The Committee on Elimination of Racial Discriminaiton; (2) any agency whose purpose is to implement the provisions of General Assembly Resolution 33/79; or (3) the General Assembly-approved $73,500,000 conference center to be constructed in Addis Ababa.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is indentical to the Senate amendment; however, it substitutes the "Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination" for the "Committee on Elimination of Racial Discrimination."

RESTRICTIONS ON U.N. FUNDING FOR THE PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION AND THE SOUTH WEST AFRICA PEOPLE'S ORGANIZATION

The Senate amendment prohibits U.S. contributions to the United Nation to be used to support the Committee on the exercise for the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People or the South West Africa People's Organization.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House provision, and leaves in place current restrictions in the law.

INTERNATIONAL JUTE ORGANIZATION

The Senate amendment authorizes the President to maintain membership in the International Jute Organization.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

U.S. EMBASSY IN SOUTH AFRICA AND COMPLIANCE WITH SULLIVAN PRINCIPLES

The House bill requires compliance with the Sullivan principles by the U.S. Embassy in South Africa.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue.

SOVIET AND COMMUNIST DISINFORMATION AND PRESS MANIPULATION

The House bill establishes a commission in the Department of State to investigate the extent of Soviet and Communist disinformation and press manipulation with respect to the United States. The Commission will report to the President and recommend the advisability of establishing within the State Department a permanent Office of Soviet and Communist Disinformation and Press Manipulation.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute directs the Secretary of State, in consultation with relevant Federal agencies, to submit to the Congress an unclassified report on Soviet and Communist disinformation and press manipulation with respect to the United States. This study, to be submitted 1 year after the enactment of this act, would include a recommendation on the advisability of establishing a permanent office in the Department to deal with this issue. In conducting the study, the Secretary may make use of suitably qualified scholars and journalists.

SOVIET AND INTERNATIONAL COMMUNIST BEHAVIOR

The House bill establishes a commission within the Department of State to investigate the nature of Leninism and the degree to which Leninism supports international terrorism and guerrila warfare. The Commission will report to the President and recommend the advisability of establishing a permanent office to study international Communist behavior.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute mandates a State Department study to be submitted to the Congress and report on the advisability of establishing an office in the Department to study Soviet and international Communist behavior that violates the concepts of national sovereignty and peace between nations. In conducting this study, the Secretary may make use of suitably qualified journalists and scholars. The study is to be submitted to the Congress within 1 year of enactment of this legislation.

SOVIET NATIONALS EMPLOYED AT U.S. MISSIONS IN THE SOVIET UNION

The House bill prohibits the employment of Soviet nationals at U.S. diplomatic or consular missions in the Soviet Union after September 30, 1986, and expresses congressional willingness to provide funding to replace Soviet citizens at these posts.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute states that, to the maximum extent practicable, Soviet citizens shall not be employed at U.S. diplomatic or consular missions in the Soviet Union after September 30, 1986.

U.S.-U.S.S.R. DIPLOMATIC EQUIVALENCE

The Senate amendment establishes U.S. policy that the number of Soviet nationals serving in that country's diplomatic mission to the United States shall not exceed the number of U.N. nationals admitted to the U.S.S.R. who serve as diplomatic or consular personnel.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute states that the number of Soviet nationals admitted to the United States should be substantially equivalent to diplomatic or consular personnel to U.S. diplomatic missions unless the President determines that such admission is in the best interest of the United States. The substitute also includes a reporting requirement which sets forth a plan to achieve this goal.

This provision makes it the policy of the United States that the number of nationals of the Soviet Union serving as diplomatic or consular personnel in the United States shall not substantially exceed the equivalent number of U.S. nationals serving at corresponding posts in the Soviet Union. Substantial equivalence shall be understood as a difference of no more than plus or minus 5 percent. The intent of this provision is that the Soviet Union shall not be permitted to continue to enjoy a numerical superiority in its diplomatic or consular personnel in the United States.

The Department of State has expressed concern that a requirement for strict numerical equivalence could be difficult to administer because the numbers of United States and Soviet diplomatic and consular personnel serving in the respective countries vary due to a variety of factors. The introduction of the term "substantially" recognizes this. This Secretary of State will report annually to the Foreign Relations and Intelligence Committees of the Senate and the Foreign Affairs and Intelligence Committees of the House on implementation of the policy of equivalence in diplomatic and consular representation called for in section 603 of this act. The conferees expect these committees to exercise continuing oversight of the State Department's attainment of the policy established in title VI.

The managers note that this section does not include Soviet personnel admitted for the Soviet mission to the United Nations, but does include all other missions covered by the Foreign Missions Act.

INTELSAT

The House bill states that: (a) Prior to consultation with Intelsat for purposes of coordination, the Secretary of State shall ensure that proposed separate international satellite telecommunications systems comply with the executive branch conditions established pursuant to Presidential determination No. 85-2; (b) separately, the Secretaries of State and commerce and Comsat shall consult with respect to the appropriate scope and character of a modification to the Intelsat agreement allowing Intelsat to establish cost-based rates for individual routes, as exceptional needs warrant, and pursuant to that consultation, the United States shall support an appropriate amendment to the Intelsat Agreement; (c) in the event that both Intelsat fails to coordinate with such systems, and the President determines to pursue the establishment of such systems, the Secretary shall submit to Congress, 60 days prior to notifying the FCC that U.S. obligations to Intelsat have been met, a report setting forth the foreign policy measures for the President's decision and a plan for minimizing any negative effects on Intelsat and on U.S. foreign policy interests.

The Senate amendment has no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is similar to the House bill with an amendment which directs the Secretary of State, in the event Intelsat is authorized to establish cost-based rates for individual traffic routes, to instruct the U.S. signatory to Intelsat (Comsat) to ensure that Intelsat provide all documentation necessary to verify that individual route rates established by Intelsat are in fact cost based. In addition, the conference substitute directs that such documentation shall be made available to interested parties to the maximum extent possible and on a timely basis.

The Congress anticipates that the President will review Presidential determination No. 85-2 from time to time, to ensure that its terms and conditions are adequate to protect the global network of Intelsat, and otherwise to ensure an efficient and responsive international telecommunications system, as well as to serve other relevant U.S. interests. The President will report to Congress on any changes he finds may be necessary.

In providing for the dissemination of information under section (c)(2)(b) the managers expect the executive branch to adopt suitable procedures such as, but not necessarily identical to, those contained in the memorandum of understanding entered into by the Departments of State and Commerce, the Federal Communications Commission and Comsat on September 24, 1984.

The managers note that this bill is not intended to impede in any way development or launch of any satellite system which will primarily provide domestic or transborder services. Furthermore, this bill shall not impede in any way the operation of the domestic or transborder aspects of such a satellite system. The international aspect of such a satellite system shall not be operational until the Secretary of State has certified that the obligations of the United States under article XIV(d) of the Intelsat Agreement have been completed with respect to the international aspects.

Emergency Telephone Service at U.S. Consular Offices

The House bill expresses the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should ensure 24-hour emergency telephone service at all U.S. consular offices.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

Murder of Maj. Arthur D. Nicholson, Jr.

The House bill expresses the sense of the Congress that the Soviet Union's chief of mission to the United States be declared persona non grata until the Soviet Union has apologized for the murder of Major Nicholson.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute declares the sense of the Congress that the United States should declare persona non grata one or more senior defense attachés of the Soviet Union's mission to the U.S. unless the President certifies to the Congress within 90 days of enactment of this act that the Soviet Union has made a formal apology for the murder of Maj. Arthur Nicholson, Jr., and that the Soviet Union has provided assurances that it will adhere to agreements concerning the status and safety of military and civilian missions of Western nations in the German Democratic Republic.

Press Freedom

The House bill directs U.S. chiefs of diplomatic missions to promote respect for freedom of the press where it is deemed not to exist.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

Inspector General

The Senate amendment mandates an independent Inspector General at the Department of State and the U.S. Information Agency by June 30, 1986.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute establishes an independent Inspector General at the Department of State under the authority of the Inspector General Act of 1978.

USIA Authorization of Appropriations

The House and Senate bills authorize funds for the U.S. Information Agency as follows:

USIA EARMARKS

[By fiscal year; in thousands of dollars]

	1986	1987
Fulbright and international visitors	128,899	141,996
Humphrey	4,891	5,479
Latin America	45,400	45,100
VOA modernization	136,594	136,594
Radio broadcasting to Cuba	11,500	11,700
Book programs	7,500	7,500
Pan American Games	1,500	1,500
International Games	3,000
Total earmarks	339,284	349,869

The House bill authorizes $922,286,000 for fiscal year 1986 and $962,866,000 for the fiscal year 1987 for the U.S. Information Agency to carry out international information, educational, cultural, and exchange programs under the U.S. Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948, the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961, and Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1977, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendment authorizes $837,623,000 for fiscal year 1986 and $844,623,000 for fiscal year 1987 to carry out international information, educational, cultural, and exchange programs under the U.S. Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948, the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961, Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1977, the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act, and other purposes. Of these funds, not less than $11.5 million in fiscal year 1986 and $11.7 million in fiscal year 1987 are authorized to implement the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act. This section also authorizes such amounts to remain available until expended.

The conference substitute authorizes $887.9 million in each of fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the U.S. Information Agency and retains the Senate earmarking for Radio Broadcasting to Cuba in both years.

Modernization of Voice of America

The House bill earmarks $136,594,000 for fiscal year 1986 and $142,604,000 for fiscal year 1987 for modernization of the facilities and operations of the Voice of America. These funds will remain available until expended.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute retains the modernization earmark at $136,594,000 for each of fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

Funds for Educational and Cultural Exchanges

The Senate amendment provides $179,190,000 in fiscal year 1986 and $192,575,000 in fiscal year 1987 for certain educational and cultural exchange activities of the U.S. Information Agency earmarked as follows: (a) $128,899,000 for fiscal year 1986 and $141,996,000 for fiscal year 1987 for grants for the Fulbright Academic Exchange Programs and the International Visitor Program; (b) $4,891,500 for fiscal year 1986 and $5,479,000 for fiscal year 1987 for grants for the Humphrey Fellowship Program; and (c) $45,400,000 for fiscal year 1986 and $45,100,000 for fiscal year 1987 for grants and exchanges to Latin America and the Caribbean, to be obligated in a manner consistent with the recommendations of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute executive branch's is identical to the Senate provision. The earmarked funds for the Fulbright, Humphrey, and International Visitor Programs in fiscal years 1986 and 1987 should be considered only as minimum, or floor, levels for these programs. The conference committee commends the executive branch's proposal to fund these exchanges in fiscal year 1986 at the levels required by section 305(c) of Public Law 970-241 (the Pell amendment). The earmarking of lower amounts in fiscal year 1986 should not preclude the executive branch's from meeting the requirement of the Pell amendment and the conference committee urges the executive branch's to meet this statutory requirement.

The managers urge USIA to fund fully, as in the congressional presentational document, the other exchange programs, including the private sector program, the Eisenhower Fellows, and the Congress Bundestag Exchange.

USIA Book Program

The House bill provides that USIA funding for its worldwide book program should be increased by an amount not less than the amount requested by the USIA from the Congress for increases in TV Worldnet.

The Senate amendment earmarks not less than $2,700,000 in addition to fiscal year 1985 allocations for the worldwide book program initiative.

The conference substitute earmarks not less than $7.5 million for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the worldwide book program initiative.

Funds for Exchange Activities Associated with the 1987 Pan American Games

The Senate amendment authorizes not less than $1.5 million for each of fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Indiana Sports Corporation for exchange of persons and other exchange-related activities associated with the 1987 Pan American Games to be held in Indianapolis, IN.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate provision.

SUPPLEMENTAL AUTHORIZATION FOR INTERNATIONAL GAMES

The Senate amendment earmarks $3 million in fiscal year 1986 for expenses associated with the XV World Games for the Deaf, the Fifth National Amputee Championship, and the 1985 National Cerebral Palsy/Les Autres Games.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute earmarks $3 million for fiscal year 1986 to reimburse expenses associated with the exchange of athletes, coaches, and officials for international games for the handicapped held in the United States. While the specific references to certain games were deleted in the section, the managers intend the funds to be available for international games such as the International Games for the Deaf, National Amputee Championships, National Cerebral Palsy/Les Autres Games, National Championship for the Blind Athletes, the Senior Olympics and the National Handicapped Sports and Recreation Associations participation in such games.

BAN ON USIA DOMESTIC ACTIVITIES

The Senate amendment prohibits use of funds by USIA to influence public opinion in the United States.

The house bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate language with an amendment regarding exemptions in current law. It is not intended to affect previously released films.

USIA PRIVATE SECTOR PROGRAMS

The Senate amendment prohibits grants to organizations through USIA's private sector programs unless at least 25% of the organization's funds for the proposed grant activity are provided from non-U.S. Government sources.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute provides that no grant may be made to any organization through the private sector program of the USIA unless costs equal to at least 15 percent in Fiscal Year 1986 and at least 25 percent in Fiscal Year 1987 of grants from USIA for that organization's exchange and exchange-related programs are provided for from non-U.S. Government sources. The substitute provides for an exemption for organizations which have been in existence for less than 1 year. The substitute also provides that no USIA or other Government funds for fiscal year 1986 appropriations shall be used for grants for 1985 International Youth Year activities. For the purpose of determining whether an organization receiving grants from the private sector program of USIA is meeting the standards set forth in this act requiring that costs equal to at least 15 percent in Fiscal Year 1986 and 25 percent in Fiscal Year 1987 of grants from USIA for the organization's overall exchange and exchange-related programs are provided from non-U.S. Government funds, only direct cash contributions, verifiable in-kind expenditures (such as the costs of food, lodging, transportation, cultural events, legal and accounting services, and office equipment) and the reasonable reciprocal costs borne by reciprocal foreign organizations and individuals for transportation, lodging, food, and cultural events directly related to an exchange program carried out in conjunction with the grantee organization's program shall be counted. (For this purpose also, the budgets of local affiliates of national organizations can be counted.)

The conference committee directs USIA to transfer the Operation Crossroads Africa Program from the Office of Private Sector Programs to the Office of International Visitors. The program will be funded from that portion of the $128,899,500 authorized to the Fulbright Academic Exchange Programs and International Visitor Program that is allocated to the International Visitor Program. The funds that are freed by the action for use by the Private Sector Program (an amount which in 1985 would be approximately $1.5 million) are to be apportioned as follows—no less than 80 percent for the core agencies, including the Council for International Programs, involved in traditional exchange programming. The committee believes that the Council on International Programs has been effective in arranging exchanges of persons involved in social services at a low per capita cost to the government. In allocating funds, the conference committee urges USIA to consider CIP's excellent record.

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR DEMOCRACY

SHORT TITLE

The Senate amendment provides a short title, the "National Endowment for Democracy Authorization Act, Fiscal years 1986 and 1987."

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is the same as the House position.

RESTRICTIONS ON NED ACTIVITIES

The House bill amends the National Endowment for Democracy Act by adding at the end thereof a new section which requires NED to adhere to certain policies as follows: (1) no expenditure of funds to finance campaigns of candidates for public office; (2) NED grantees shall consult with US Chiefs of Mission in foreign countries before funds may be available for projects in those countries; (3) NED funds granted to the American political party institutes shall be used, to the extent feasible, for projects jointly implemented by those institutes.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is similar to the House bill, with an amendment adding new language stating that the Endowment shall consult with the Department of State on all Endowment funded programs overseas prior to commencement of program activities; dropping the recommendation relating to joint projects by party institutes; and strengthening the prohibition against NED funds being used for political purposes. It further changes the date of the annual report required to be submitted by NED to the Congress from December 31 to February 1.

PROHIBITION ON NED FUNDING FOR POLITICAL PARTIES

The House bill prohibits grants to political party institutes from being used to finance activities of the Republican National Committee or the Democratic National Committee.

The Senate amendment prohibits NED funds from being used to support the Republican National Committee, the National Republican Institute for International Affairs, the Democratic National Committee, or the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs.

The conference substitute is similar to the House bill, with an amendment strengthening the prohibition against the use of NED funds for partisan politics or any activities directly related to the Republican or Democratic National Committees or candidates for public office.

NED AND PUBLIC ACCESS TO INFORMATION

The House bill further amends the National Endowment for Democracy Act by directing that the Endowment shall make available to the public any information regarding its organization, procedures, requirements, and activities. The Endowment would be authorized to withhold information which is exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act. In the event that the Endowment made an adverse determination of a request for information, such determination would be reviewed by the General Counsel of the Endowment.

The Senate amendment would prohibit funding to the Endowment until the Endowment fully complies with the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act.

The conference substitute requires that NED fully comply with the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act; requires USIA to facilitate requirements for publication of NED rules and procedures in the Federal Register; and makes USIA responsible for litigation related to the Freedom of Information Act.

The committee of conference notes that for the purpose of obtaining information under FOIA, an individual may request such information from either National Endowment for Democracy or United States Inforamtion Agency.

NED FUNDING

The House bill amends section 503(a) of the National Endowment for Democracy Act to provide that, of the amounts made available to the Endowment, not less than 40% will be for the Free Trade Union Institute; and not less than 20% will be for the Center for International Private Enterprise; and further provides that of the amounts authorized to be appropriated to USIA, not more than $19.3 million for Fiscal Year 1986 and not more than $20.1 million for $19.3 million for Fiscal Year 1987 may be made available to NED. It further provides that the earmarkings shall take effect on October 1, 1985. The House also expressed the sense of the Congress (in H.R. 1555, the Foreign Assistance Authorization bill) that USIA should provide up to $500,000 to NED to finance programs designed to promote democracy and seek to end the apartheid policies in South Africa.

The Senate amendment provides that not less than $17.5 million for each of Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987 shall be available for a grant to the National Endowment for Democracy, of which amount $11 million for each fiscal year will be for the Free Trade Union Institute, and $2.3 million for the Center for International Private Enterprise.

The conference substitute provides not less than $18.4 million for NED for each of Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987 from USIA funds, and deletes all earmarks and ceilings for grantees. The conference substitute also provides that it is the sense of the Congress that USIA should provide up to $500,000 to NED for each of fiscal years 1986 and 1987 (in addition to funds otherwise made available by USIA to NED) for use by NED in providing financing for programs that are designed to promote democracy and that seek to end the apartheid policies in South Africa.

USIA AUDITS OF NED

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment amend section 504 of the National Endowment for Democracy Act by inserting a new paragraph (g) which provides that the financial transactions of the Endowment for each fiscal year may be audited by USIA. The committee of conference notes that this audit authority is not intended to impose grant conditions on NED which affect the status of NED as a private nonprofit corporation, such as obtaining prior approval from USIA for activities necessary to further the purposes of the National Endowment for Democracy Act.

RELEASE OF CERTAIN USIA FILMS

The House bill also provides for the release of three USIA films on Afghanistan, "Afghanistan 1982: The Struggle for Freedom Continues" and "We are Afghanistan," and "Hal David: Expressing a Feeling."

The Senate amendment provides for the release of the above films. The Senate amendment also provides for the release of "Afghanistan 1982: The Struggle for Freedom Continues". The Conference Substitute provides for the release of all of the above mentioned films with the House language.

USIA GRANT NOTIFICATION

The House bill extends existing law on notification of USIA program grants.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute is identical to the House bill.

BOARD FOR INTERNATIONAL BROADCASTING

The House bill authorizes appropriations for the Board for International Broadcasting of $122,325,000 for fiscal year 1986 and $127,707,000 for fiscal year 1987.

The Senate amendment similarly authorizes $137,717,000 for the Board for International Broadcasting for each fiscal year 1986 and 1987. In addition, the Senate amendment earmarks $400,000 for Radio Maccabee in both fiscal years.

The Conference substitute authorizes appropriations for the Board for International Broadcasting of $125,000,000 for each fiscal year 1986 and 1987. The substitute drops the earmarking for Radio Maccabee.

IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES

The House bill earmarks $20,000,000 in fiscal year 1986 and $21,030,000 for fiscal year 1987 for modernization of radio facilities.

The Senate amendment does not have any comparable provision.

The Conference substitute earmarks $20,000,000 in fiscal year 1986 and $18,323,000 in fiscal year 1987, which shall remain available until expended.

BROADCASTING IN DARI AND PASHTO

The Senate amendment authorizes broadcasting to Afghanistan as long as it is under Soviet occupation and earmarks not less than $450,000 in FY 1986 and not less than $250,000 for fiscal year 1987 for radio broadcasting to the Afghan people in the Dari and Pashto languages, to be designated "Radio Free Afghanistan."

The House bill does not have any comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute authorize broadcasting to Afghanistan as long as it is under Soviet occupation, but drops the earmark.

SECRETARY OF STATE AND BIB MEMBERSHIP

The Senate bill would make the Secretary of State an ex officio member of the BIB, except that the Secretary may not be a member of the Board of Directors of RFE/RL, Inc.

The House bill does not have any comparable provision.

The Conference substitute directs the Secretary of State to establish a liaison office with the BIB at the US Consulate in Munich; provides that a representative of the Secretary of State will attend RFE/RL Inc. and BIB Board meetings; amends section 6 of PL 93-129 directing the Secretary of State to report to BIB on the impact of broadcasts to Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

RFE/RL MANAGEMENT

The House bill sets forth certain findings and management recommendations with respect to the Board for International Broadcasting and Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty Inc.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute contains a similar amendment to the House bill. The managers believe that the management of Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty Inc. should consider, as a way to improve its broadcast quality and content, establishing a position and a procedure responsible for the daily oversight of the radios.

BROADCASTING TO SOVIET JEWRY

The House bill establishes a task force to study the advisability and feasibility of increasing broadcasts to the Jewish populations within the USSR. It also requires a report not later than 6 months after the date of enactment to be submitted to the Congress.

The Senate amendment prohibits grants to RFE/RL, Inc. unless RFE/RL, Inc. establishes in Radio Liberty a new program of Russian language broadcasting for the Jewish population of the USSR entitled "Radio Maccabee Program of Radio Liberty."

The conference substitute is similar to the House bill. It calls for a study and report within six months after enactment of this title and directs the radios to strengthen existing broadcasts of issues of concern to Jewish audiences in the Soviet Union. Such broadcasts may be known as Maccabee Program.

U.S. SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM FOR DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

The Senate amendment authorizes a US scholarship for disadvantaged students from developing countries to study in the United States. The Senate amendment also provides that not less than 25% of funds appropriated for activities under this title will fund Latin America and Caribbean exchanges.

The House bill contains no comparable provision. However, a similar provision is contained in the House version of the Foreign Assistance bill which authorizes a US scholarship program for disadvantaged students from lesser developed countries to study in the United States. This provision also provides that if the student is granted asylum in the US of the Immigration and Nationality Act or is admitted to the US as a refugee, half of the repayment of the students loan shall be forgiven. The bill also provides that funds allocated for these scholarships shall be available to enhance the educational training and capabilities of the people of Latin America and the Caribbean and to promote better understanding between the US and Latin America. Funds may be used for program and administrative costs for institutions carrying out such programs. The provision also provides that the USIA shall recommend to each student under scholarship that he or she enroll in a course in the classics of American political thought. The House bill also provides that USIA funds (other than those appropriated for programs under the Mutual Education and Exchange Act) may be used to carry out this title with respect to students from developing countries outside Central America.

The conference substitute integrates all of the provisions of the House and Senate positions. The committee of conference note that a provision in the legislation recommends that each student receiving a such a scholarship enroll in a course which studies the "classics of American political thought". This recommendation may be broadly read to include course work in American history or politics, and should not be construed as a recommendation to study certain political thinkers. The recommendation to take such a course is not mandatory and should not be construed as a requirement for holding a scholarship. It is also the committee's intent in authorizing this program that resources currently available to other scholarship or exchange of persons programs funded by USIA, would not be diverted to fund these new programs.

UNIVERSITIES IN U.S. BORDER STATES

The Senate amendment requires the USIA Director and the Administrator of AID to report to Congress on the feasibility of greater utilization in those agency's scholarship programs of US universities in States bordering Latin America.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

FOREIGN SURVEILLANCE PREVENTION ACT

The Senate amendment establishes a procedure by which the President must identify and so report to the Congress the identity of any foreign national with diplomatic immunity who is engaging in electronic surveillance in the United States. The President must inform the targets of the surveillance; inform the chief of mission of the sponsoring government of the surveillance; and, unless that government ceases such surveillance, must declare the offending party persona non grata.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue. In considering this section, the Managers agreed with the findings that widespread use of electronic surveillance and the interception of telecommunications by foreign governments under the guise of normal diplomatic relations would pose a serious threat both to the national security of the United States and to the rights of privacy and association guaranteed to Americans by the Constitution.

Consequently, the Managers request the President to conduct a study of this problem and submit recommendations to the Congress, no later than January 1, 1987, for legislation and other actions designed to bring an end to such illicit electronic surveillance.

IRAN CLAIMS

The Senate amendment authorizes the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission to adjudicate and distribute awards to small claimants in the event of a lump sum settlement by the US-Iran Claims Tribunal, and to charge a modest fee to defray the costs of the Commission. It also authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to deduct a small fee from awards to large claimants of the tribunal.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is substantially the same as the Senate provision.

ARMS CONTROL AND DISARMAMENT AMENDMENT ACT OF 1985

The Senate bill contains provisions dealing with the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. Similar provisions were contained in H.R. 2456, a separately-passed measure.

FISCAL YEAR 1985 AUTHORIZATION

The Senate amendment (section 902) authorizes for fiscal year 1985 $23,789,000 of which amount $4,321,000 is earmarked for the Geneva arms control negotiations.

The House bill (section 1, subparagraph 2) authorizes for fiscal year 1985, $23,789,000.

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate amendment.

FISCAL YEAR 1986 AND FISCAL YEAR 1987 AUTHORIZATIONS

The Senate amendment (section 903) authorizes $25,614,000 for each of the fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. Of these amounts, $6,146,000 in each fiscal year is earmarked for the Geneva arms control negotiations.

The House bill (section 1, subparagraphs 3, 4, and 5) authorizes for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 $25,614,000 for each fiscal year, plus such additional amounts for each fiscal year as necessary for increases in salary, pay retirement, and other employee benefits authorized by law, foreign currency exchange rates, and other non-discretionary costs.

The conference substitute combines both the Senate and House provisions.

ARMS CONTROL COMPLIANCE REPORT

The Senate amendment (section 904) establishes a new section 38, in the Arms Control and Disarmament Act of 1961 as amended, that requires the President to submit an annual report to Congress, prepared by the Director of the Agency, in coordination with the heads of other relevant agencies, on the adherence of the United States to obligations undertaken in arms control agreements with other nations and on any problems related to compliance by other nations with the provision of bilateral and multilateral arms control agreements with the United States.

The House bill does not contain a comparable provision.

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate provision.

EXECUTIVE LEVEL UPGRADES

The House bill (section 2) provides for comparability adjustment in five senior ACDA executive level positions to conform them with counterparts in other agencies.

The Senate amendment does not contain a comparable provision.

The conference substitute is the same as the House provision.

COMPLIANCE WITH BUDGET ACT

The House bill (section 3) provides that the authorities provided shall be in compliance with the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is the same as the House provision.

FUTURE ACDA AUTHORIZATION

The Managers intend that including the ACDA authorization as part of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act is a one-time exception and that future ACDA authorizations should be adopted as separate legislative measures.

ASIA FOUNDATION

The House bill authorizes $10 million for the Asia Foundation.

The Senate amendment authorizes $10.5 million for each of fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Asia Foundation in a separate Asia Foundation Act. The Conference Substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

ASSISTANCE TO NICARAGUA

The Senate amendment contains a provision authorizing humanitarian assistance to Nicaragua and related policy matters.

The House bill contains no comparable provision. However, House provisions relating to aid to Nicaragua are contained in the FY 1985 supplemental appropriation.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue.

PROHIBITION ON FUNDS FOR NICARAGUA

The Senate amendment prohibits the use of funds to support activities against the Government of Nicaragua which have not been authorized by law and which would place the US in violation of our obligations under the OAS.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue.

FOOD AID TO THE NICARAGUAN PEOPLE

The Senate amendment states that the President should explore and promote means for providing food aid to the Nicaraguan people through private voluntary organizations and the Catholic Church.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND TARIFF BARRIERS

The Senate amendment directs USIA to develop a public information campaign to inform appropriate nations as to the advantages of lowering tariff and non-tariff barriers on agricultural products.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute contains no provision on this issue.

TRADE BARRIERS TO AMERICAN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

The managers recognize that foreign tariff and non tariff barriers to American products are harming American producers and causing higher food prices to consumers in countries with high trade barriers. A campaign to heighten public awareness abroad of the advantages of lower trade barriers would serve the interests of both American producers and foreign consumers. Such a campaign would compliment ongoing efforts by several departments of government to promote lower trade barriers to American goods and services. The Director of the United States Information Agency is requested to examine the feasibility of a significant public information campaign regarding lower trade barriers and, in consultation with other appropriate agencies, to prepare a report for submission to the President and the Congress on this recommendation on how such a program could most effectively promote the interests of American producers and workers. In examining the advisability of such a campaign the Director should pay particular attention to the needs of American agricultural producers.

EX GRATIA PAYMENT TO SWITZERLAND

The Senate amendment reflects an Administration request to amend the Trading with the Enemy Act to make an ex gratia payment to the Government of Switzerland under the terms of an existing US-Swiss agreement.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

TERMINATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCIES

The Senate amendment amends the National Emergencies Act to stipulate that a national emergency may be terminated by joint resolution of the Congress. Current law only requires a concurrent resolution to terminate a national emergency.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

CONSEQUENCES OF NUCLEAR WINTER

The Senate amendment expresses the sense of the Congess that the President should propose during arms talks with the USSR that the US and the USSR jointly study the consequences of nuclear winter and its impact on national security of both countries.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on this issue.

REVIEW OF ASSISTANCE TO COAL EXPORTING NATIONS

The Senate amendment directs the Export-Import Bank to report to the Congress on the terms of all assistance provided to the purpose of financing or assisting in the development of coal production, transportation or export.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute contains no provision on the issue.

APPLICATION OF THE YALTA AGREEMENT

The Senate amendment states that the US does not recognize as legitimate any spheres of influence in Europe and reaffirms US refusal to recognize such spheres by repudiating Soviet use of the Yalta Agreement to legitimize Soviet domination of Eastern Europe. It also expresses US solidarity with the peoples of Central and Eastern Europe.

The House bill contains no provision on this issue.

The conference substitute contains a provision relating to the Yalta Agreement. The conferees recognize that their action does not constitute a formal repudiation of the Yalta Agreement.

MAYOR OF JERUSALEM

The Senate amendment commends Mayor Teddy Kollek of Jerusalem for his efforts to promote harmony among the people of Jerusalem.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

TREATMENT OF SOVIET PENTENCOSTALS

The Senate amendment expresses the sense of the Senate that Soviet government personnel violated the human rights of the four members of the Pentecostal community who attempted to enter the US Embassy in Moscow; that the US Department of State should try to assure the safety of these persons; and the Secretary of State should undertake a study of US policy relating to the granting of asylum in US embassies abroad and make recommendations to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee regarding adjustments in current policy.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is virtually identical to the Senate amendment. In addition it requires that the report be submitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

DEMOCRACY ON TAIWAN

The Senate amendment expresses the sense of the Congress that it is important that all Taiwanese participate in that country's political process in order to promote a peaceful future and that the United States should encourage the authorities on Taiwan to work toward this end.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is essentially the same as the Senate amendment.

US/CHINA TRADE

The Senate amendment expresses the sense of the Congress that the Departments of State and Commerce should take appropriate steps to increase United States/China trade with a view to improving the trade balance, increasing American jobs, and assuring US participation in the growing Chinese market.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL COMMISSION

The Senate amendment establishes an International Narcotics Control Commission which would monitor and promote international compliance with narcotics control treaties and monitor and encourage US Government and private programs seeking to expand international cooperation against drug abuse. The Commission would be composed of seven Senators, seven House Members, three Executive branch personnel, and five members of the public sector, and chaired alternately by a Senator and a House Member, beginning with a Senator, with opposite rotating Co-Chairmen. The Commission is also granted subpoena powers. The President is required to submit semi-annual reports to the Commission on the status of compliance with narcotics control treaties, and requires the Commission to report to the congress periodically. It also authorizes $550,000 for each fiscal year for the Commission, to be disbursed on a voucher by the Chairman, which would remain available until expended. The Commission is deemed to be a standing committee of the Congress for purposes of travel funds, is to receive $6,000 for official representational expenses, and Commission staff is exempted from civil service regulations.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate amendment, except that the Commission includes no House Members or Executive branch officials, provides that the Chairman shall be of the Senate Majority party and the Co-Chairman of the Senate Minority Party, drops the separate Presidential reporting requirement and instead requires the President to submit the annual State Department narcotics report (pursuant to section 481(e) of the Foreign Assistance Act) to be submitted to the Commission, provides $325,000 for each fiscal year to meet Commission expenses, and provides no representational funds. The conference substitute does not specify the manner in which Commission funds will be disbursed.

It is the intent of the Conferees that the Commission operate in the manner of the Helsinki Commission. The Chairman, in consultation with the Cochairman will reach decisions regarding appropriate and adequate levels of staffing, funds, and support facilities for both the majority and minority members of the Commission.

UNITED STATES-JAPAN SECURITY RELATIONSHIP AND JAPANESE SELF-DEFENSE EFFORTS

The Senate amendment (section 1123) expresses congressional findings regarding the U.S.-Japan security relationship, expresses the sense of Congress that Japan should formally reexamine her 1976 National Defense Program Outline and develop and implement a 1986–1990 Mid-Term Defense Plan fully funded to enable Japan to meet, by 1990, its commitment to obtain self-defense forces adequate to protect its air spaces and sealanes out to 1,000 miles, expresses the sense of Congress that Japan should increase contributions to support U.S. forces in Japan, and requires annual reports so Congress can assess Japan's progress toward actually fulfilling her common defense commitments.

The House bill does not contain a comparable provision although the House passed foreign assistance bill contains a provision (section 1209) that expresses congressional findings regarding the U.S.-Japan security relationship and the sense of Congress that Japan should be strongly encouraged in its plans to develop and implement a 1986–1990 Mid-Term Defense Plan.

The conference substitute is a compromise that states congressional findings regarding the U.S.-Japan security relationship, expresses the sense of Congress that Japan should implement a 1986–1990 Mid-Term Defense Plan fully funded to enable Japan to meet, by 1990, its commitment to obtain self-defense forces adequate to protect its air spaces and sealanes out to 1,000 miles and requires information, on an annual basis, so Congress can understand Japan's progress toward actually fulfilling its common defense commitments, including obtaining the 1000-mile self-defense capabilities by 1990 and about actions the Executive branch is taking to encourage Japan to achieve these capabilities by the end of the decade.

The conference committee notes that Japan is not the only ally of the United States which is not contributing sufficient resources to fulfill its independent commitments to the common defense. Several of America's NATO allies also are not bearing a fair share of the mutual security burden. However, in approving language finding that the U.S. Government appreciates Japan's recent efforts to increase its defense spending, the conference committee wishes to point out that these recent increases still are inadequate.

As evidence of these inadequacies, the conference committee expressed concern that every year since 1981 the Defense Department has reported to Congress that Japan "ranks last or close to last" on most measures surveyed and thus quite clearly "appears to be contributing far less than its fair share" of the common defense burden. Further evidence was presented this year when the Commander of all United States armed forces in the Pacific region, Admiral William J. Crowe, Jr. testified to Congress that Japan's decision to increase its defense budget in 1985 "is still inadequate to meet the defense capabilities the Japanese government has pledged itself to meet."

Finally the committee of conference is also aware that Congress already receives an annual report on the defense contributions of all our NATO allies and Japan. The conference committee does not wish to impose on the Executive branch a requirement for a new, separate report and would consider it appropriate for the additional information to be included in the already required report.

Such required additional information should include a detailed estimate by the U.S. Government of the level of funding resources, specific procurement programs and other defense improvement actions required annually between 1986 and 1990 for Japan to achieve the capabilities to defend her homeland and airspace and sea lanes out to 1,000 miles, by the end of this decade.

It should also include a detailed estimate by the U.S. Government of the length of delay beyond 1990 for Japan to achieve the 1000-mile self-defense capabilities and caused by any disparities between the U.S. estimate of resources required and those resources Japan decides on her own to provide for that particular annual period and for the years remaining in the 1986–1990 Mid-Term Defense Plan.

Finally the information should include a description of actions the U.S. Government has taken in the preceding year to encourage Japan to attain the 1,000 mile self-defense capabilities by 1990.

REPEAL OF CLARK AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment repeals section 118 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1980 which prohibits assistance which would have the effect of promoting the capacity of any nation or individual to conduct military or paramilitary operations in Angola unless the president certifies that such assistance is in the national security interests of the United States.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute contains no provision on this issue.

REPORT ON SOVIET VIOLATION OF ARMS CONTROL AGREEMENT

The Senate amendment directs the Department of Defense to report to the Congress on the military consequences and effects of Soviet violations of all arms control treaties and agreements.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute does not include the Senate provision. The managers note that Title VII of the conference substitute includes a provision requiring a presidential report on the compliance of the Soviet Union and other nations with arms control agreements, as well as on U.S. adherence to arms control obligations.

BAN ON CHEMICAL WEAPONS

The Senate amendment expresses the sense of the Conress that the President should continue to pursue negotiation of a multilateral agreement banning chemical weapons and seek bilateral discussions between the US and the Soviet Union to achieve a ban on chemical weapons.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate provision.

U.S.-OWNED RUPEES

The Senate bill amends Section 903 of PL 98-164 by allowing the use, pending the negotiation of an agreement with the Government of India, of the annual earnings generated by US-owned foreign currencies in India to provide grants for cultural, educational, and scientific programs of interest to the United States and India.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

MOSCOW EMBASSY

The House bill directs the Secretary of State, within 30 days of enactment, to initiate actions to begin the arbitration process provided for in the embassy construction agreement between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. in order to resolve U.S. claims against the Soviet Union construction delays in the U.S. embassy complex in Moscow. It also requires a report to Congress from the Secretary of State on the resolution of such claims. If the U.S.S.R. refuses to abide by the results of the arbitration, the Secretary of State will not allow Soviet occupation of their new embassy in Washington, D.C. until arbitration is completed and damages are paid in full. The section also includes a presidential waiver in the interests of U.S. national security if resolution of claims is proceeding satisfactorily.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is similar to the House provision. It requires a report to the Congress in the event the amount of the reimbursement is less than the amount of funds expended for damages, explaining why the Secretary accepted the settlement arrangements. The substitute also contains a waiver if the Secretary certifies to Congress that a substantial number of claims are settled and resolution of remaining claims is proceeding satisfactorily.

MINORITY REPRESENTATION IN THE FOREIGN SERVICE

The House bill directs the head of an agency using the foreign service personnel system to develop, to the extent practicable, an affirmative action effort to significantly increase the number of women and minority groups in the service. Such efforts should emphasize increases in the mid- and senior levels of the service. The program's goal would be to raise the representation of women and minority groups to levels at least equivalent to those group's respective proportions in the U.S. labor force. The section also requires that the report to the Congress regarding minority representation in the service pursuant to the Foreign Service Act shall include reports on the implementation of this effort. The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is similar to the House provision. However it places emphasis on establishing a plan to increase the number of minority groups and women in the Foreign Service, emphasizing the mid-levels of the service and conforming the provision to section 7201 of title 5 of the United States Code.

EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The House bill directs the Secretary of State to report to Congress within 90 days of enactment of this Act on the extent to which international civil servants employed by the UN must return part of their salaries to their respective governments. The report should also address steps taken by the Secretary and the U.S. Representative to the UN to correct this practice. A second report to the Congress would assess progress made, by January 1, 1987, in correcting the practice. If, pursuant to the latter report, the Secretary determines that substantial progress has not been made, the U.S. will reduce its annual assessed payment to the U.N. by an amount equal to the U.S. proportionate share of the salaries of such UN employees engaged in kickbacks.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision. The conference substitute is similar to the House provision with an amendment relating to reservations of UN member states regarding taxation. The conference substitute does not make mandatory a reduction in the U.S. contribution to the United Nations.

REFUGEES IN THAILAND

The House bill commends the Government of Thailand for its response to refugees fleeing Vietnam and expresses the sense of Congress that 1) those seeking refuge in Thailand should not be repatriated and 2) increased security should be provided for refugees in Thai camps, including through a greater presence by international organizations. The Section further directs the Secretary of State with the assistance of appropriate organizations and agencies, to review the status of Cambodian refugees; implement a solution to their plight; investigate cases where Cambodians have been rejected for admission to the U.S.; institute a family reunification program for refugees in Thailand; provide a program of educational assistance for Cambodians in border camps.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House bill.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE INTERVENTION

The Senate amendment expresses the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, together with our allies, should take the necessary steps (including intervention in foreign exchange markets) to gradually lower the value of the dollar. It also provides that the Secretary of the Treasury and Federal Reserve Board Chairman work to ensure that the domestic macroeconomic policies of the U.S. and its allies reinforce each other.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference Substitute is identical to the Senate amendment.

MEASURES TO ENHANCE CRISIS STABILITY AND CONTROL

The House bill directs the Secretary of State and the Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency to conduct a study of measures which would both enhance U.S. security and reduce the likelihood of nuclear weapons use by contributing to crisis stability or crisis control capabilities.

The Senate amendment contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the House provision.

REPORTS ON ADHERENCE TO AND COMPLIANCE WITH AGREEMENTS

The Senate amendment requires the President to report to the Congress on the adherence of the United States to obligations undertaken in Arms Control Agreements and on problems of compliance by other nations.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate provision.

NEW BUILDING IN GENEVA FOR ARMS CONTROL NEGOTIATING TEAMS

The Senate amendment expresses the sense of the Senate that the Secretary of State should submit a report to the Congress on the feasibility of a new structure to house the United States Arms Control negotiating Teams in Geneva.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The conference substitute is similar to the Senate provision with a technical amendment.

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 3008

By Mr. ARMEY:

—After section 8, insert the following new section and redesignate succeeding sections and any references thereto accordingly:

SEC. 9. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) neither the results of the consultant's study nor any of the Commission's recommendations relating to such study should be considered to reflect the views of the Congress; and

(2) in any judicial or administrative proceeding in which any of the results or recommendations referred to in paragraph (1) are considered, the methodology and other factors relating to the manner in which those results and recommendations were obtained shall be taken into account.

—In section 6(a), insert "(1)" before "In order".

Before section 6(b), insert the following:

(2) For purposes of this Act, positions within an occupational category shall be consideed to be held predominately by memberts of one sex if individuals of that sex hold more than 50 percent of the occupied positions within such category.

—In section 10(1), strike out "an objective," and insert in lieu theeof "a subjective,".

In section 10(2), strike out "an objective" and insert in lieu thereof "a subjective".

—In section 10(2)(B), strike out "and".

In section 10(2), redesignate subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (D) and insert before such paragraph (D) (as so redisignated) the following:

(C) factors relating to supply and demand; and —Before section 7(d), insert following:

(5) With respect to any occupation for which the Commission recommends an increase in the rate of basic pay, the Commission shall include a statement as to—

(A) how the rate of pay recommended compares with the rate generally provided for that occupation in the private sector; and

(B) whether it would be more practical for the Government to contract with private sources for the services performed by Federal empoyees in that occupation.

—Section 5(a) and (b).

Page 10, line 1. Delete "5" and insert "10".

Page 10, line 9. Delete "a consultant" and insert "not less than three consultants".

—Section 6(a).

Page 10, starting on line 17, delete "which either sex is numberically predominant, any race is disproportionately represented, or either ethnic group is disproportionately represented" and insert in lieu thereof "Included within the scope of this study."

—Section 9.

Page 13, line 18, delete the period and insert the following: "if the Director certifies to Congress in writing that allocation of such funds will not adversely affect the ability of the Office to effectively carry out its statutory mandate."

—Section 8.

Page 13, line 9, insert after the word "limit" a comma and the words "expand, or otherwise change."

In subsection (b)(1), delete "the Comptroller General of the United States" and insert instead "the Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commisson".

—Section 4(b), page 8:

Under subsection (b), modify paragraph 3(A), lines 17 and 18, by deleting the words "relates to any matter under investigation by the Commission." and replacing those words with the following: "to which the Commission is entitled under subsection (b)(2)."

—Section 7, page 12:

In Section 7(b), page 12, lines 9 through 12, delete everything after "analyses" on line 9 and insert instead the following: "shall be reported to the Office of Personnel Management for prompt investigation and, if necessary, appropriate remedial action."

—Section 4, page 9:

Add a new subsection (c) to Section 4, as follows: "(c) The Commission's authority is advisory only. Neither the Commission's study nor any other action by the Commission or its consultant shall be considered to be a modification of federal personnel policy or practice without subsequent ratification by the Congress."

—Section 3(b), pages 3-4:

In subsection (b)(4), change the number of members appointed by the Director of OPM to 9 from 4. Add as subparagraph (D) the following: "(D) 5 shall be individuals with federal personnel management experience, of whom: one shall be designated by the Secretary of Defense; one shall be designated by the Secretary of Health and Human Services; one shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury; one shall be designated by the Secretary of Agriculture; and, one shall be designated by the Secretary of Interior."

(h) NONAPPLICABILITY OF LIMITATION.—Appointments under this section shall not be considered for purposes of section 5311(b) of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 3. CONDUCT OF STUDY.

(a) STUDY.—The Commission shall provide for the conduct of a study under which the following shall be examined:

(1) Whether the Government's position-classification system under chapter 51 of title 5, United States Code, and compensation systems under subchapters III and IV of chapter 53 of such title, are in compliance with section 6(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, relating to equal pay for substantially equal work.

(2) Whether the Government is in compliance with title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 in matters relating to hirings and promotions of Federal employees.

(3) The effectiveness of any policies or programs of the Government (including those involving education or the dissemination of information) designed to encourage—

(A) the integration of individuals into occupations in which persons of a particular sex, race, or ethnic group have been traditionally underrepresented; or

(B) the promotion or other advancement of such individuals in Federal employment.

(4) Any trends or patterns relating to promotions or other advancement in Federal employment with respect to individuals belonging to any underrepresented group referred to in paragraph (30).

(b) METHODOLOGY.—In carrying out the study under this Act—

(1) the methodology to be used shall be subject to Commission determination or approval, as the case may be; and

(2) particular consideration shall be given to matters relating to women in Government.

SEC. 4. RECOMMENDATIONS AND REPORT.

(a) RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Commission shall develop recommendations (including proposals for legislation or administrative action) for enhancing Government efforts to achieve equality of opportunity in Federal Employment with respect to sex, race, and ethnicity and to improve the efficiency of Government compensation practices under subchapters III and IV of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code. Included with such recommendations shall be an estimate of the cost anticipated in carrying out those recommendations.

(b) REPORT.—The Commission shall submit its report and recommendations under this Act to Congress not later than 18 months after the date of the establishment of the Commission.

SEC. 5. ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

(a) COMPENSATION.—Members of the Commission shall receive no pay on account of their service on the Commission, but while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service under section 5703 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) DETAILS FROM OTHER AGENCIES.—Upon request of the Commission, the head of an agency may detail, on a nonreimbursable basis, any of the personnel of such agency to the Commission to assist the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities under this Act.

(c) OBTAINING INFORMATION.—The Commission may secure directly from any agency any information necessary to enable it to carry out this Act. Upon request of the Commission, the head of such an agency shall, to the extent permitted by law, furnish the information requested by the Commission.

(d) EXPERTS AND CONSULTANTS.—The Commission may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code.

(e) MAIL AND SUPPORT SERVICES.—The Commission may use the United States mails, and receive administrative support services from the Administrator of General Services, in the same manner and under the same conditions as other agencies.

SEC. 6. TERMINATION OF COMMISSION.

The Commission shall cease to exist 90 days after submitting its report under section 4(b).

SEC. 7. CONSTRUCTION.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit or expand any of the rights or remedies provided under title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, section 6(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, or any other provision of law relating to discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, handicap, or age.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

MEDICARE IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1985

HON. BOB EDGAR
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago today President Johnson signed legislation creating Medicare, our Nation's health care system for the elderly. Therefore, it is both appropriate and important that I am today introducing legislation to address the long-term and short-term funding questions facing Medicare.

My bill, the Medicare Improvement Act of 1985, would provide for the creation of a bipartisan Commission to examine options for Medicare, similar to the National Commission on Social Security Reform that analyzed Social Security financing in 1982.

All of us are aware of the benefits that elderly Americans have received from this program. We know what the consequences would be if we were to suddenly terminate this health insurance for 30 million Americans.

However, we have proposed only Band-Aid solutions as Medicare expenditures continue to rise; total health care expenditures have increased 750 percent since Medicare was enacted. The Congressional Budget Office and other economic analysts all have varying predictions of when the Medicare trust fund might run dry—but they all agree that it faces serious problems in this century.

In the short term, we have dealt with this problem in a patchwork, inequitable way. For the first few years of this administration the President went after the elderly themselves, increasing out-of-pocket payments drastically: The part a hospital deductible has gone up by 95 percent from 1981 to 1985 and the part B doctors' premium went up by 62 percent over the same period. Medicare currently covers less than one-half of the total health care expenditures of the elderly. Senior citizens are paying more and more for less and less coverage.

Then, we went after the hospitals. In 1983, as part of the Social Security rescue plan, we tacked on a prospective payment system for hospitals admitting Medicare patients. The plan has been successful in slowing the growth in hospital costs, but we are just beginning to see the secondary effects on people, such as the rise in premature discharges of patients from hospitals.

Last year, we went after doctors, instituting a 1-year freeze on Medicare reimbursement rates for physicians. This year we seem likely to do so again.

Mr. Speaker, soon we'll run out of shins to kick.

We can't just go around taking a piece out of some group each year, especially when the health and well-being of our Nation's elderly is on the line.

The only fair and equitable way to deal with the financial crisis and the question of equity is through a thorough overhaul of the Medicare system.

The legislation I am introducing today would create a Commission composed of 18 members: Six Members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House—three Democrats and three Republicans; six Members of the Senate appointed by the President pro tem of the Senate—three Democrats and three Republicans: and six Members appointed by the President of the United States—three Democrats and three Republicans.

The Commission would be charged with making recommendations to resolve the short- and long-term financial problems facing Medicare and with suggesting ways to provide for adequate and cost-effective benefits for America's senior citizens.

Specifically, my bill directs the Commission to review the benefit structure of the Medicare Program, the methods of making payments to health care providers, and ways to encourage the efficient provision of health services to the elderly.

The Commission would begin its work on January 1, 1986, and report to the President and Congress by January 1, 1987.

Mr. Speaker, Medicare is at a turning point, and we have the power and responsibility to shape its future. We can deal with the problem calmly, fairly, and in a bipartisan manner, or we can turn Medicare into a political football, put off any action, and watch the system erode. The choice is ours, and the bipartisan Commission is the best option for good Government policy and for the health of our senior citizens.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. —

A bill to provide for establishment of a bipartisan Commission to study and make recommendations concerning changes in the medicare program to assure its short-term and long-term financial solvency and the appropriateness of its benefit structure

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) there is established a commission to be known as the Medicare Financing and Benefit Review Commission (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Commission").

(b)(1) The Commission shall study and make recommendations concerning the short-term and long-term financial problems and benefit structure of the programs established under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (popularly known as the medicare program) and such changes as may be required in the medicare program in order to assure its financial solvency and to provide for adequate and cost-effective benefits.

(2) In conducting its study, the Commission shall review, among other things—

(A) the benefit structure of the medicare program,

(B) the methods of making payments to health care providers, and

(C) methods that encourage and reward the efficient provision of health services to the elderly and disabled.

(3) The Commission shall not begin conducting its study until January 1, 1986.

(c)(1) The Commission shall be composed of eighteen members as follows:

(A) Six members appointed by the President, at least five of whom are not officers or employees of the United States and are specially qualified to serve on the Commission by virtue of their education, training, or experience.

(B) Six members appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate from among Members of the Senate, giving special consideration to the appointment of those Senators who are members of those committees or subcommittees of the Senate with jurisdiction or other special concern over the medicare program.

(C) Six Members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, giving special consideration to the appointment of those Representatives who are members of those committees or subcommittees of the House of Representatives with jurisdiction or other special concern over the medicare program.

A vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made. Appointments to the Commission shall first be made within thirty days of the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) Not more than three members of the Commission appointed under paragraph (1)(A) may be of the same political party. With respect to members of the Commission who are Members of the Congress, not more than three Representatives and not more than three Senators shall be of the same political party.

(3) Members shall be appointed to serve for the life of the Commission.

(4)(A) Members of the Commission appointed under paragraph (1)(A) who are not officers or employees of the Federal Government are entitled to receive, subject to such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriations Acts, the daily equivalent of the minimum annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day (including travel time) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Commission. All other members shall serve without additional pay.

(B) While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence.

(c)(1) Nine members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum but a lesser number may hold hearings.

(2) The Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Commission shall be elected by the members of the Commission for the life of the Commission.

(3) The Commission shall meet at the call of the Chairman or a majority of its members.

(d)(1) The Chairman of the Commission, in consultation with the Vice Chairman, is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of a staff director and such other additional personnel as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions without regard to the civil service laws, rules, and regulations. Any Federal employee subject to those laws, rules, and regulations may be detailed to the Commission without reimbursement, and such detail shall be without interruption or loss of civil service status or privilege.

(2) The Commission may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5 of the United States Code, but at rates for individuals not to exceed the daily equivalent of the minimum annual rate of basic pay payable for GS-18 of the General Schedule.

(e)(1) The Commission may, for the purpose of carrying out this Act, hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence, as the Commission considers appropriate.

(2) The Commission may secure directly from any Department or agency of the United States information necessary to enable it to carry out this Act. Upon request of the Chairman of the Commission, the head of such department or agency shall furnish such information to the Commission.

(3) The Commission may accept, use, and dispose of gifts or donations of services or property.

(4) The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other Departments and agencies of the United States.

(5) The Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission on a reimbursable basis such administrative support services as the Commission may request.

(f) The Commission shall transmit to the President and to each House of the Congress, not later than January 1, 1987, a report containing a detailed statement of the studies and recommendations of the Commission, including any recommendations for legislation it considers appropriate.

(g) The Commission shall cease to exist on January 1, 1987.

(h) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.●

THE RECESSION ON THE RIVER

HON. WEBB FRANKLIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Speaker, the problems facing the inland waterway industry are a serious concern to those areas of the country that have always depended economically on river traffic.

The New York Times has recently summarized the depressed state of that industry, and I would like to bring the following article to the attention of my colleagues:

THE RECESSION ON THE RIVER

(By William E. Schmidt)

MEMPHIS.—By almost every measure, these are perhaps the hardest of times along the nation's rivers and waterways. Here, as elsewhere on the Mississippi, the volume of freight crossing the once bustling docks has plunged 30 percent since its 1978 peak. Hundreds of barges stand idle waiting for cargo.

Many of the towboat operators who earned their living moving grain, petrochemicals and coal down to New Orleans have gone bankrupt or are just barely hanging on. "This industry is on its knees," said Howard Brent, the owner of Brent Towing, a family-owned business that has been working the river out of Greenville, Miss., since 1941. "We're at a one-hundred-year low."

Rivermen whose fathers and grandfathers pushed barges up and down the Mississippi now find themselves out of work and out of hope. That's because the river is the economy in towns like Helena, Ark., and Greenville, where more than 1,000 rivermen have been laid off since 1981. "The small, independent river operator who flourished in a number of small towns is a vanishing breed," said Jack Baskin, who was the president of one of 16 barges companies that have gone out of business in Greenville since 1980.

The pilots and boatmen who work the Mississippi have always known it to be a treacherous river. But the economic currents have not been this turbulent since the late 19th century, when the expansion of the railroads sank most of the major steamboat lines. River business, in fact, did not begin to rebound until the 1930's, when the Federal Government stepped in, not only directing the United States Army Corps of Engineers to invest billions in navigational aids and port improvement projects, but also temporarily running its own barge line to help establish routes and markets that private operators took over and expanded in the 1950's.

But these days, most of the nation's 25,000 miles of inland waterway are facing economic problems, from the Great Lakes to the Mississippi, says Harry Cook, president of the National Waterways Association. "The problem is mainly the world economy, coupled with the strength of the dollar abroad; American industry is off and so are the exports of grain and coal and steel that are moved on the waterways," Mr. Cook said.

Now, however, businessmen, barge owners and port administrators say they have something else to worry about: renewed talk in Washington about requiring local governments and private companies to pay a larger share of the cost of much-needed navigation, channel and port improvements, public works projects which historically have been paid for by the Federal Government.

Cost-sharing agreements were at the center of a compromise reached last month between Senate Republicans and the Administration, aimed at resolving a 10-year-long debate that has effectively frozen hundreds of millions of dollars of Federal money destined for scores of river and port improvement projects, including more than $625 million due to be spent at Memphis and four other ports along the lower Mississippi.

The Carter Administration held back the funds. The Reagan Administration has similarly refused to spend the money, arguing that users who benefit financially from the projects must share anywhere from 20 to 60 percent of the cost of port improvements, local and dam construction and harbor dredging.

Among other things, the proposal under discussion in the Senate would over 10 years double to 20 cents a gallon the tax on diesel fuel paid by towboat operators, and earmark the revenues for channel and harbor projects. "I'm so far underwater now I'm using a snorkel, and the Federal Government is trying to put another tax on me," complains Mr. Brent, in Greenville. "They're going to drive us out of business."

CONGRESSIONAL RESISTANCE

There is no guarantee that Congress will eventually approve the kind of cost-sharing formulas being considered by the Senate. On the House side, there has been sharp resistance to cost-sharing.

The debate over ending an era of Federal involvement in river commerce comes just as the most expensive public works project in the history of the Army Corps of Engineers has opened. The 234-mile Tennessee Tombigbee Waterway, a chain of locks and canals in eastern Mississippi and western Alabama, was officially dedicated in June. It is intended to provide inland shippers a shorter and less expensive water route to the Gulf of Mexico, as well as stimulate one of the nation's most economically backward regions.

But after spending some $2 billion on the project, the Administration now would prefer that state and local governments, rather than the Federal Treasury, take the lead in finding the money to help develop ports and harbors. As it turns out, the Tenn-Tom, as it is known locally, couldn't have opened at a worse time. With waterway business down nationally, traffic along the Tenn-Tom is likely to be well short of the expectations that boosters had for it in the 1970's.●

PRAISE FOR DAVID STOCKMAN

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, David Stockman's tenure at the Office of Management and Budget is a curious one, and one that deserves closer public scrutiny.

51-059 O-86-12 (Pt. 16)

The Washington Post recently printed an editorial praising Mr. Stockman's "intellectual and moral integrity." The Post's praise is questionable. David Stockman is praised by the Post, not for his public honesty, but his private honesty. Ralph Nader's response to the editorial lends a much needed light on Mr. Stockman's record. I commend Mr. Nader's letter to my colleagues, and insert the letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The letter follows:

PRAISE FOR DAVID STOCKMAN?

(By Ralph Nader)

The Post's praise of David Stockman ["Well Done, David Stockman," July 10] invites incredulity. The editorial says that he "has been one of the important truth-tellers in this administration," even though he admitted that he testified several times before Congress using numbers and projects he did not believe. Does a civil servant need only to confide the truth privately, while saying the opposite publicly, to earn The Post's commendation?

Second, Stockman seemed to display his budget-cutting muscle most vigorously against unorganized or defenseless people. His moves to eliminate legal services for the poor and to cut sharply the infant nutrition programs are cases in point. But the really big dollars in the corporate entitlements and military contracting areas rarely received such clenched-teeth opposition from the budget director.

Third, Stockman systematically interfered with the rule-making procedures of federal agencies invested by law with protecting the public's health and safety. Whether in the area of infant formula standards, auto safety rules, acid rain control proposals or simply providing citizens with health and safety information, Stockman and his band of OMB zealots blocked, overrode, bullied or delayed dozens of existing or proposed life-saving, disease-preventing and consumer-cost-reducing measures. They did this both with ideologically driven ignorance and the power OMB wielded over these agencies generally. They also did this with many admitted ex parte, undocketed contacts that OMB personnel had with company lobbyists.

I consider Stockman's record at OMB quite distant from the "intellectual and moral integrity" that The Post ascribed to him.●

THE BLINDED SOVIET CITIZENS

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, whereas Americans saw the United States at war in Southeast Asia every night on their television sets, the average Soviet citizen has seen virtually nothing about the Soviet's brutal invasion, occupation, and continued subjugation of Afghanistan, that once-peaceful land. Soviet citizens are unaware of the horrors being inflicted on the innocent people of Afghanistan, including beheadings, the use of chemical weapons, torture, random executions, and more. The Kremlin's savage war against the people of Afghanistan, and against humanity, continues, largely hidden from both Western and Soviet eyes.

The New York Times recently reported, however, that a 2½-minute report of the Afghan war was shown on official Soviet television. Just what were the Soviet people shown about that war? Was it the attacks on villagers by the dreaded Mi-24 Hind helicopter gunships? The dropping of butterfly bombs designed to maim children? The intentional destruction of Afghanistan's delicate irrigation system? No. As the Times reported, this news report was different. According to the Times article:

As automatic weapons rattled, Soviet soldiers dashed from behind armored vehicles, crouching low, racing past coils of barbed wire to take up positions on a dry, rocky field.

Soldiers atop an armored personnel carrier fired machine guns. Smoke rose in the distance. An officer searched the hills with binoculars.

What thrilling sights and sounds. Mr. Speaker, the Times says that Soviet "news accounts grow more frank." One can only wonder what the outcome of the U.S. war in Vietnam would have been if the U.S. media had covered that conflict with equal frankness.

I offer the following article for my colleagues' review, and urge them to join me in calling for the immediate removal of all 120,000 Soviet troops from Afghanistan. Five years have passed since that unnecessary and ruthless invasion. Millions have died; millions more have been forced to flee from their native land to neighboring Pakistan and Iran. It is time the U.S. Government exposed this genocide. We certainly cannot count on the Soviet Government-run media to inform the world, or even their own citizens, about Soviet atrocities in that once-peaceful land.

SOVIET TV GIVES ITS VIEWERS RARE GLIMPSE OF AFGHAN WAR

(By Seth Mydans)

Moscow.—For the first time in more than five years of undeclared war, the fighting in Afghanistan has come into Soviet living rooms on the television evening news.

A two-and-a-half-minute report earlier this month, including what appeared to be battlefield footage and heroic words, from a group of Soviet soldiers, was a far cry from the daily, detailed and often negative reports from Vietnam that filled American television screens.

But the fact that the officially controlled television program was showing burning trucks, explosions and Soviet troops assaulting an unseen enemy raised eyebrows among Western diplomats here.

A Soviet journalist said he believed that the footage had been filmed in Afghanistan but that the battle scenes themselves were likely to have been at least partly staged for the camera.

Several days after this report, the evening news again showed Afghanistan, with a report on a victory by Government forces over "mercenary bands" in which over "more than 100 cutthroats were annihilated" and a large number of Western-made weapons and much subversive literature seized.

The film footage in this case was limited to a long look at stacks of reportedly captured weapons.

"This is definitely an escalation of news coverage," a Western military attaché said. "One of the big things the Russians have going for them is that their own people haven't been seeing the war on television day after day."

Some Russians attribute the lack of vocal or widespread opposition to the war to the fact that it remains cloaked in secrecy in Soviet news outlets.

Soviet television programs rarely show negative subjects about the Soviet Union. But the evening news constantly shows Western film footage of floods, fires and other disasters outside Soviet borders, as well as demonstrations, riots battles in other parts of the world.

Scenes of the conflicts in Central America, taken from Western television reports, are shown frequently.

A Western diplomat said the Soviet Union's presentation of its own war has been evolving in the press in a way that acknowledges that Afghanistan has become a fact of life, though a muted one, in this country.

"There's no way to just pretend it's not there, with more than 100,000 young men rotating through Afghanistan at any time, and something like 10,000 casualties a year," he said.

NEWS ACCOUNTS GROW MORE FRANK

Since the fifth anniversary last December of the Soviet sweep into Afghanistan, the controlled news accounts have grown more frank about the fact that soldiers are fighting and dying there.

The Soviet forces are invariably referred to as a "limited contingent" and described as fulfilling their "internationalist duty."

A few reports of heroism have appeared in recent months in the press, in what some diplomats see as an indication that the Kremlin does not expect the war to end soon, and is therefore presenting it as a glorious endeavor.

The three most prominently portrayed Soviet heroes are said to have died on the battlefield in curiously similar circumstances, by setting off grenades that killed themselves and their "bandit" attackers.

Occasional television reports on Afghanistan have until now focused almost entirely on Soviet aid projects or on daily life in Kabul.

The new television report, shown early this month, was different.

As automatic weapons rattled, Soviet soldiers dashed from behind armored vehicles, crouching low, racing past coils of barbed wire to take up positions on a dry, rocky field.

Soldiers atop an armored personnel carrier fired machine guns. Smoke rose in the distance. An officer searched the hills with binoculars.

There was no sign of the enemy or of return fire, and it was impossible to tell if the scene showed a genuine battle or had been staged for television. But the footage appeared to have been shot in Afghanistan, and its presentation to Soviet television viewers was that of real battle coverage.●

THE NEW SPACE RACE

HON. MICHAEL A. ANDREWS OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, at Rice University in 1962, President John F. Kennedy said:

The exploration of space will go ahead, whether we join in it or not, and it is one of the great adventures of all time, and no nation which expects to be the leader of other nations can expect to stay behind in this race for space." "Those who came before us made certain that this country rode the first waves of the industrial revolutions, the first waves of modern invention, and the first wave of nuclear power, and this generation does not intend to flounder in the backwash of the coming age of space. We mean to be a part of it—we mean to lead it.

When President Kennedy spoke in Houston 20 years ago, the space race was a two-nation competition between America and the Soviet Union. Our goal was not only to excel in the use of technology in space, but also to show the strength of our society. Both of these aims were set forth in a dramatic way by President Kennedy, and America's space program was born.

Today, not only have many other players entered the race, but the goals of the race have changed as well. Now one of the most powerful forces driving space development is the commercial potential of outer space. This potential has drawn in Japanese, the West Germans, the French, and other nations into a new race not only to explore space, but to use it. Outer space will no longer be solely the scene of dramatic exploration. It will become an arena of tremendous international economic competition.

We recently reached a milestone of sorts in this increasing commercialization of space—the first products manufactured in space for commercial use went on sale. It is clear that we not live in an age when our security and future are bound up in the development of space. Our work in space is no longer a purely scientific venture that we choose to pursue. We have come to depend on space and its use. And as we have continued to expand our use of space, we have come to realize its potential as an engine of growth on Earth. Space development in materials processing, communication, remote sensing, and many other areas can translate the unique environment of space into economic growth on the ground.

I think this trend is definitely to be welcomed. Instead of Government dollars alone, private money will pour into space commerce quickening the pace of development. But we must remember that this competitive environment requires a continued U.S. Government role. We already have a tremendous investment; from the Mercury Program to the shuttle, we have poured billions of dollars into space development. In the coming decease the space station will provide a permanent platform for research and development in this unique environment—the potential is tremendous. We cannot afford to let foreign competitors get the jump on us in exploiting markets that we have developed. The Federal Government has a demanding and important role to assure continued American commercial development in space.

My work in this House and on the Science and Technology Committee has been guided by the principle that we in the Government must act to eliminate the obstacles to space commercialization. There are several such obstacles that we are currently dealing with and others that need our attention. Our success in removing these obstacles will set the course for U.S. space commerce.

First, how will the products and profits of space commerce be taxed? Under current law, products made in space are treated as imports. This negative treatment is not the result of a deliberate policy choice by Congress but rather the simple aging of our laws. No one before us had to consider the implications of products from space industry. To remedy this legal blindspot, I have joined in sponsoring the Space Investment Tax Equity Act, H.R. 2172, which will treat the output of the U.S. space industry as domestic products. Under this act, space products will be taxed at the lower domestic rate, and U.S. space producers will be able to use the investment tax credit just like producers on the ground.

I want to commend my esteemed chairman on the Space Subcommittee, BILL NELSON of Florida, and my colleague from New York, TOM DOWNEY, for bringing this much needed bill before the House. I encourage all my colleagues to support this insightful piece of legislation.

A second obstacle to space commercialization is the high degree of risk for such ventures. Space insurance has for 20 years been provided privately to cover the risks faced by companies and governments that place hardware in orbit. Recently the loss of the Westar and Palapa satellites has seriously hurt the space insurance industry and most certainly will cause a significant rise in the premiums on space insurance contracts. In the period from 1977 to 1983, the average satellite insurance premium represented about 8 percent of the value of the craft. With these losses, it has been predicted that premiums could more than double to perhaps 18 percent of the value of a satellite. My concern is that such a rise will increase the cost of space access and deter businesses from investing in space. These conditions warrant the consideration of a government role as an insurer of last resort for space ventures.

I am currently assessing several approaches to meeting the critical need for sufficient insurance coverage for space operations. A low-cost Federal Space Insurance Program may be what is needed to encourage investment in space commerce. At my request, the Space Subcommittee will be reviewing this important topic in the near future.

A third issue is that of shuttle pricing policy. A big component of any businessman's assessment of a space venture is the cost of getting into space. Therefore the way we choose to price the use of the shuttle has a significant impact on space commercialization. In weighing such a decision, we must consider how shuttle pricing affects the ease of access to space and our own expendable launch vehicle of ELV industry. A low price encourages the use of space but may undercut the ELV industry; while a high price might drive customers to competitors like the French Ariane rocket and discourage the use of space.

It has been argued that a high price is needed to recover the cost of the shuttle. I question this attitude. The shuttle was built to foster the utilization of space, but if we push the price up to recover more of the Government's cost, we'll drive private money away from space investments. That would undermine our original goal. I favor a low price for shuttle use to encourage easy, low-cost access to space. Such a policy would also help keep business from using the shuttle's main competitor, the Ariane.

So far I have discussed how we are moving to reduce the risk of space ventures, control the cost of going into space, and improve the tax treatment of products that result from space commerce. But what about going beyond this foundation for space commercialization? How can we create actual business activity? Should we even be involved? There is much uncertainty in the business world about putting up the money to investigate commercial ideas in space. There are tremendous unknowns that only further applied research will resolve. I believe we in Government have a role in fostering this needed applied research that will bring commercial ideas off the design table and into reality. One thing we have learned over the past 20 years is that space research is a good investment.

One such program already underway with my full support is the creation of the NASA Centers for Commercial Development of Space. The centers were conceived by NASA as joint endeavors drawing together the excellent research capacity of our universities and the management and capital resources of American industry to shepherd commercial concepts from the laboratory and into space. Thus the centers will combine America's tremendous scientific capability with its entrepreneurial spirit.

Houston has submitted 1 of the 21 bids for the 3 to as many as 10 such centers that will begin this year. I have pursued every avenue in support of the bid and am very hopeful Houston will get the center. Houston has excellent resources to bring to such a center, from the Texas Medical Center to a large industrial base and a number of research universities. And the Houston consortium reflects these strengths; it brings together such institutions as the University of Texas Health Science Center, the University of Houston, Rice University, Lehigh University, and a host of other organizations and businesses. I am confident that Houston will become the hub of a massive space economy, driven by high technology and enriching our already diverse economy in Houston and the Nation. A further effort to assure the continuance of the research activity critical to our Nation's future economic growth is the high technology Research and Science Education Act, H.R. 1188. Its most important provision is the permanent extension of the research and development tax credit. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this needed legislation to foster our national research base.

Taken as a whole, these programs and initiatives can assure the United States continued preeminence in space development.

With affordable insurance, fair taxation, ease of access, Government seed money, and the tremendous infrastructure created by the shuttle and space station, I am confident that our space economy will grow rapidly. As in other new industries—railroads, jet aviation, nuclear development—there is an important partnership of the public and the private sector working together.

In my own city, we have a proud history of public and private sectors working together to meet new challenges for ambitious and responsible growth.

In the 1920's Jesse Jones worked with a Congressman named Tom Ball to create a ship channel that would travel 50 miles from the gulf to inner city Houston—providing a new national port for the United States.

In the 1960's Houston's citizens worked with Albert Thomas and Lyndon Johnson to bring Houston the Space Center—creating new triumphs and new technologies in which all Americans have shared.

Today this generation of Americans faces challenges and it is our time to be tested.

Space beckons Houston and indeed our entire Nation to new ideas, new efforts, and new heights of achievement.

Many years ago Daniel Webster challenged us to "Develop the resources of our land, call forth its powers, build up its institutions, promote all its great interests and see whether we, in our day and generation, can perform something worthy to be remembered."

That's what we're doing in the Space Program—that's what we've done in the Houston area. Working together, business and Government, private and public sectors—we can build a future as successful and exciting as our past.

Thank you.●

ESF's TO ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues the importance of providing badly needed economic support funds [ESF's] to Antigua and its sister island of Barbuda. These islands, collectively called Antigua, historically have maintained friendly relations with the United States and are an important linch pin to maintaining our security interests in the eastern Caribbean.

Antigua is strategically located in the leeward islands of the Caribbean, approximately 250 miles from Puerto Rico and in close proximity to maritime transport lanes of major importance to the United States. Since declaring its independence from Great Britain in November 1981, Antigua has maintained a moderate, democratic parliamentary form of government. Relations between the United States and Antigua have always been friendly, and Antigua has traditionally supported U.S. interests in the Caribbean region. Antigua is an active member in the regional security system and participates as a member of the Caribbean peacekeeping force. In addition to its overt support of U.S. policies in the region, Antigua has permitted two U.S. military bases to be stationed on its territory since 1941, and has aggressively supported and cooperated with U.S. efforts to combat the growth of illegal drug trade in the region.

Antigua's value to U.S. security interests in the eastern Caribbean is in large part dependent on Antigua's continued economic and political viability. Trade, investment, and concessional aid are essential components in Antigua's struggle to compliment its political independence with economic self-reliance. Although small in size and population, Antigua is confronted with many of the same economic challenges as larger countries of the Caribbean. Like many Caribbean islands, it is heavily dependent on tourism which accounts for approximately 20 percent of its gross domestic product and employs about 25 percent of its population. Because tourism is its main industry, the economy of Antigua is especially vulnerable to worldwide economic recessions and adverse climatic conditions. The recent international recession and the prolonged drought in 1984 has convinced the Government of the need to diversify its industrial and commercial activities. However, before Antigua can begin to expand its industrial and commercial sectors, it needs to develop a sufficient infrastructure of roads, housing, transportation and communication systems, and adequate water supply and sewage systems. In order to advance the development of these basic facilities to meet the needs of its citizens, Antigua should be provided with economic support funds.

The ESF is designed to provide flexible economic assistance to countries of particular economic, political, and security interests to the United States. The allocation of ESF assistance would go far to ameliorate some of Antigua's basic developmental challenges. A strong, economically viable Antigua, in turn, would fortify our own national interests in preserving the security of the eastern Caribbean region.●

TECHNOLOGY EDUCATION ACT OF 1986

HON. FREDERICK C. BOUCHER

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Technology Education Act of 1985 which will help our Nation's educational system prepare America's next generation of citizens for the technological world of tomorrow.

Over the past two decades, unparalleled scientific and technical advances have occurred. Our society has been dramatically transformed by computers, by communications and by electronics, and it will continue to change in the decades ahead. Only one generation ago, gasoline automobiles, telephones, electric stoves, and airplanes were unfamiliar contraptions. Today, videorecorders, mobile telephones, microwave ovens, and supersonic jets are commonplace conveniences.

Technological advances have also altered the nature of many occupations in the fields of health care, energy production, food processing and the construction and maintenance of scientific, educational, military and industrial equipment.

It is essential for the young people of today to understand how their society has been molded by modern technological innovations. They should learn that the use or absence of use of technology can have far-reaching social and economic consequences. In short, today's students must possess technological literacy, an understanding of the technological world around us.

Our educational system is lagging dangerously behind the recent technological revolution. Two years ago, the National Science Board issued a report sharply attacking the inadequacy of our public schools in meeting the technological challenge. In its report, "Educating Americans for the 21st Century," the Board warned that our country which "dramatically and boldly led the world into the age of technology is failing to provide its own children with the intellectual tools needed for the 21st century." Numerous other national reports, including "A Nation At Risk," Ernest Boyer's study for the Carnegie Foundation and a recent report by the Southern Regional Educational Board, have echoed the concern of the Science Board: "America Is Raising a Generation of Technologically Illiterate Citizens."

Last year, Congress responded to this challenge by launching a Federal offensive to improve mathematics and science education. With the enactment of the Emergency Mathematics and Science Education Act of 1984, a Federal commitment was made to strengthen math and science education and to develop teacher training programs in those fields.

The Technology Education Act of 1986 builds upon and complements last year's initiatives with a comprehensive, three-pronged approach.

First, demonstration projects of general technology education courses will be established in secondary schools. Although technology education is inherently linked to the scientific and mathematical concepts on which it is based, an understanding of technology requires more than simply the application of those basic concepts. Based on the recommendations of the National Science Board, the act contemplates the development of separate technology education courses.

Each model program will develop technology education courses which examine the historical role of technology in the development of our Nation and world. Students will explore the relationship between changing technologies and changing social values. At the same time, students will be challenged to consider the benefits and risks of technological decisions.

Second, because the field of technology education is relatively new and rapidly changing, there is a need to develop quality curricula and teacher education programs. In view of this need, the Technology Education Act provides grants for research and development of curriculum materials for use in the model program and for distribution statewide. In addition, teacher training programs and multidisciplinary training workshops and authorized to equip today's teachers with the background and updated skills necessary for comprehensive technology education instruction.

Finally, each demonstration program of technology education established under this act will serve as a model for emulation by other schools in the school district or State. In order to encourage the duplication of these model programs in other school systems, the act requires that the grantee distribute its curriculum and teacher training materials, as well as the benefits of its experience, to other State and local educational agencies and postsecondary institutions.

The Technology Education Act of 1986 will serve as a catalyst for nationwide action to provide technology education to all students. Duplication and dissemination of the technology education model programs will multiply many times over the value of the initial Federal investment. The act authorizes $3 million for fiscal year 1986 and a sum sufficient for the following year.

We have a responsibility to prepare future generations for the world that will confront them. Our future success as a nation—our national defense, our world competitive position, our social stability and national prosperity—will depend on our ability to provide the education and training for millions of citizens to understand and live in an advanced technically oriented society.

The Technology Education Act provides Federal leadership and support to meet that responsibility by equipping our educational system for the technological challenge of today and the next century.●

IMBALANCE, INEQUITY, AND INEFFICIENCY IN HEALTH CARE FINANCING

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I have long been concerned with the paradoxes and problems present in our Nation's system of health care finance.

Recently, I read an excellent article entitled "Imbalance, Inequity, and Inefficiency in Health Care Financing" which addresses these concerns and evaluates the use of the marketplace incentives and governmental regulatory approaches that attempt to resolve these issues.

The article, which was written by Jack Meyer, appeared in the summer 1985 issue of the Bell Atlantic Quarterly. Dr. Meyer is director of the Center for Health Policy Research at the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy.

Dr. Meyer's article is reprinted below:

IMBALANCE, INEQUITY, AND INEFFICIENCY IN HEALTH CARE FINANCING

(By Jack Meyer)

The health care finance system in the United States is characterized by three basic problems—imbalanced coverage in government programs and private health insurance, poorly targeted government subsidies, and an inefficient system of paying doctors, hospitals, and other health care providers. This article analyzes these three dimensions of the health care cost problem and provides a comparative assessment of market incentives and government regulatory approaches that attempt to address these issues.

Our health care finance system is a paradoxical mixture of generosity and stinginess. Over the past several decades, we have built a system of public and private health insurance that provides extensive coverage for certain types of health services and little or no protection for other types of services.

Institutional care in high-cost settings has been heavily subsidized while home care or community-based services were, until very recently, rarely encouraged by public policy. The most complex, heroic (and sometimes hopeless) medical procedures in end-of-life situations are routinely applied and reimbursed, while preventive care, long-term care for chronic illness or disability, rehabilitation, and health education are too often neglected. Some patients languish in a hospital, fully reimbursed, while awaiting an available nursing home bed or care at home that might be feasible if certain relatively lower cost services such as adult day care were covered by insurance.

We invest billions of dollars in curative medicine when people are ill, but are dubious about outlays for workplace and environmental safety—and even smoking cessation and drug and alcohol abuse programs—despite the important relationships between such environmental or behavioral factors and health spending.

Finally, we are often more generous about insuring routine care than catastrophic illness protection. For example, Medicare provides full payment for the second through the fifty-ninth day of a hospital stay, but then requires the patient to pay one-fourth of the bill for the sixtieth through the ninetieth days, and a higher proportion thereafter.

In short, we have so much coverage and yet so little. Coverage is overly generous for some health services and inadequate for others. Some steps have been taken to improve this imbalance. Coverage for some health services provided at home is improving, permitting the transfer of some patients out of institutions. Hospice care is now reimbursed, with a similar objective. Our attitudes and policies are changing. But the biases against an ounce of prevention remain, and the pound of cure grows even more costly.

Government subsidies related to health care are poorly targeted. Some people with no particular financial needs are provided large subsidies, while others with inadequate resources fall into the cracks between the private health insurance market and public programs.

The irony is that public financing for health care seems so poorly targeted, even in our era of tight budget constraints. Subsidies to middle- and upper-income people remain largely intact even as eligibility is restricted in the Medicaid program serving low-income households. Only about one-half of the poor are now covered by Medicaid, compared to about two-thirds a decade ago. This inequity is a microcosm of the overall federal budget situation: Program cutbacks have fallen disproportionately on the poor and near-poor, while tax subsidies have been left untouched and expenditure programs available to all income groups have been cut by relatively smaller proportions.

GENEROUS PROGRAMS FOR THE ELDERLY

If we look at the whole federal budget, the elderly win the battle for taxpayers' dollars. People 65 years of age and older accounted for about 27 percent of total federal outlays in 1983, about the same percentage as in 1981 when President Reagan took office. Indeed, by the year 2025, programs offering benefits to the elderly are estimated to account for fully one-half of the federal budget, or about twice their current share. If such a scenario actually unfolds, and recent trends in national defense expenditures continue, then the federal government would provide almost no other services than defense and programs for the elderly in the early part of the next century.

Unquestionably, the combination of Social Security and Medicare has played a crucial role in the reduction in elderly poverty that has occurred over the past two decades, and Medicare has improved the health of the elderly. Nonetheless, it is still pertinent to ask whether such benefits could continue to be provided in a world in which the depth of public subsidies varies directly with need among the elderly, releasing some funds that could be used to assist some non-aged people in need.

Despite this federal generosity, the share of health costs paid by the elderly is still significant, amounting to about one-third of total health spending for this group. These expenditures, including out-of-pocket outlays and insurance premiums under Medicare, as well as insurance premiums for private, supplemental insurance coverage, can be a burden for some senior citizens at the same time as they are easily handled by others.

We have learned that it is very misleading to talk about "the elderly" as a monolithic group. From a variety of perspectives, including income, assets, health status and age, the elderly are a very heterogeneous group. With few exceptions, however, public policy toward the elderly fails to acknowledge this diversity. Flat benefit schedules tend to overcompensate some and undercompensate others relative to their actual needs.

When the ratio of older dependents to workers begins to rise significantly in the early part of the next century, a business-as-usual approach to financing health care will mean steep cuts in benefits for low-income households, combined with a rising burden on taxpayers who must pay the bill if offsetting benefit reductions are not forthcoming. Thus, tomorrow's poor and tomorrow's working-age population will be heavily burdened if we do not redesign and retarget benefits flowing to the future elderly population.

SO LITTLE FOR THE WORKING POOR

If the elderly are the winners in the struggle for the federal government's health care dollar, the non-aged poor—particularly those working at a low-wage job—are the losers. Current policy provides both welfare and Medicaid to one category of poor people—those in split families not headed by a working spouse—and denies this assistance to the working poor and adults without dependent children in the household. This bias in public policy was not invented by the current administration. Indeed, the disparate treatment of workers and nonworkers below the poverty line is a longstanding feature of our social welfare system. But the policies pursued by the Reagan Administration and enacted in Congress in the early 1980s have exacerbated this problem. For example, in 1980 a working mother with three children and earnings equal to one-half of the poverty threshold had a total income of $10,095 (in 1984 dollars), when Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), food stamps, and the Earned Income Tax Credit are taken into account. In 1984, this worker with the same earnings had a total income of only $8,250, an 18 percent decline.

It is both unfair and contradictory to the Administration's own philosophy virtually to eliminate assistance (medical and otherwise) for those who are working at wage levels that place them around or even below the poverty line. It is unfair to treat differently people that are similarly situated, and it is contradictory to raise tax rates for the working poor while lowering them for the rest of the population. In 1981 the top federal income tax bracket was cut from 70 to 50 percent, but Congress raised the effective tax rate to about 100 percent for the working poor after they have been working four months. At this point AFDC benefits are cut dollar-for-dollar with increased earnings. In addition, the income cutoff line for AFDC eligibility was lowered to 150 percent of a state's need standard, triggering a loss of marginal AFDC assistance—and Medicaid eligibility—for thousands of households.

At the same time as low-income working households have lost cash assistance and helath care benefits, they have also experienced a rise in taxes. Scheduled Social Security tax increases have hit low-wage workers hard, and these workers also got the short end of the Reagan tax-cut stick. Indeed, the combined income and payroll tax as a percent of income at the poverty level rose from 4 percent in 1978 to 10.5 percent in 1985.

Although losing AFDC benefits and being taxed a little more can add to the hardships facing low-income households, the loss of Medicaid triggered by a change in welfare status is often the cruelest blow. Many of the uncovered indigent receive care, but often in an inappropriate setting or after being turned away from other institutions. Worse yet, many who need care don't seek it or obtain it. In a survey of U.S. households conducted in 1982, about one million households reported that a least one family member was refused needed medical care because they could not pay.

Medicaid cuts are particularly unfair when viewed against the back-drop or relatively smaller cuts in Medicare, which provides benefits to all income groups, and no change at all in the health-related federal tax subsidy flowing mainly to middle-and upper-income people.[1] In this sense health care policy reflects the larger inequity alluded to eariler: Federal budget cuts in the 1980s have fallen disproportionately on low-income households, as programs such as Food Stamps, AFDC, and Medicaid have been cut more sharply than non-means-tested programs such as Social Security, Medicare, Veterans benefits, and civil Service retirement.

In the past year or so, there have been some tenative steps toward improved targeting of federal benefits. Congress provided a measure of health care protection for some of the people ineligible for Medicaid in 1984, such as first-time pregnant women and children under five years of age. Further food stamps cuts have been rejected by Congress, and there are some proposals under consideration to redesign benefits and improve targeting under Medicare and other non-means-tested entitlement programs. But we have a long way to go to correct fundamental inequities.

In addition to imbalanced coverage and poorly targeted subsidies, our health care finance system has been driven by a faulty, cost-generating payment system. The essence of the problem with our traditional methods of paying doctors and hospitals is cost-based reiumbursement that pays profligate providers on the same basis as economical or cost-conscious providers. Such payment systems ratify and entrench past inefficiency, thwart innovation, and weave a protective cocoon around high-cost providers of health care.

Public health care programs and private insurance do not cover all of the costs of health care, as noted earlier. But what they cover, they have paid to one and all alike. Thus, if one doctor charges more than another for the same service, both would receive 80 percent of their bills if that is the proportion that insurance covers. As long as the purchasers of care do not insist on distinctions among providers and fail to steer their patients toward cost-effective health services, the more costly doctors and hospitals are insulated from competition.

Until recently, the federal government and the states have relied on formula-based, inflexible government controls to check costs. These controls have papered over the cracks in the reimbursement system, failed to check cost escalation, and blocked entry into health care by innovative health plans.

The federal government and the states have begun to move away from the old cost-pass-through payment system, and many private employers are following suit. Instead of issuing "blank checks" for insured individuals to cash with any health service provider regardless of cost, large purchasers of health care insurance coverage are installing limits on reimbursement based on relatively more cost-effective practices, fees, and charges.

MEDICARE

The 1983 Social Security Amendments directed the U.S. Department of Health and Human Service (HHS) to establish a prospective payment system for Medicare reimbursement of hospitals. HHS began to implement a system of prospective payment based on diagnostically related groups (DRGs) in September 1983. The new DRG system is highly complex and stops short of a fully comprehensive payment system that would include incentives to hold down hospital admissions, but it does reverse the inherently cost-generating incentives associated with retrospective, cost-based reimbursement. By setting a fixed rate per diagnosis based on a community-wide average, Medicare puts pressure on hospitals above these rates and allows those charging less to share in the savings.

[1] The principal tax subsidy involves the exclusion by employees, without limit, of empoyers' contribution to health insurance. This tax forgiveness will drain an estimated $32 billion form federal coffers in fiscal year 1986.

Another promising step involves the prospective payment by Medicare of competitive medical plans such as Health Maintenance Organizations (HMOs). Under regulations issued by HHS in January 1985, the federal government pays 95 percent of what is termed the adjusted average per capita cost in each area of the country to qualifying HMOs. Payments by the government for enrollees are made in advance, removing the prior disincentive to HMO enrollment associated with large up-front out-of-pocket outlays by the elderly. The new provisions share savings associated with lower HMO costs between the federal government (which garners a 5 percent reduction from the area average) and beneficiaries, as qualifying HMOs must pass through additional savings below the 95 percent level to patients in the form of extra benefits such as eyeglasses or dental care that may not be included in the Medicare package. I would prefer to allow HMOs the flexibility either to add such benefits or to "re-invest" some of these savings by modernizing facilities, hiring more specialized and highly trained medical personnel, or providing beneficiaries with cash rebates.

Both of these policy steps are an improvement, as far as they go. But we can, and should, take the next leap to a full-scale voucher program. Prospective payment is an improved way of financing health insurance under a given health plan such as Medicare, but it is no substitute for multiple choice among cost-effective plans. The new HMO payment approach under Medicare is the first important step beyond conversion to prospective payment, but this initial move should be extended to include other nontraditional health plans such as preferred provider organizations or independent practice associations that have some of the features of HMOs, but not others.

MEDICAID

Changes initiated by the Reagan Administration and incorporated in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 permitted states to apply for waivers from federal and state laws that had previously blocked reforms in the methods of paying for health services. Operating under these waivers, some states have begun to steer Medicaid patients toward economy-minded health care providers, avoid excessive referrals to specialists and the unnecessary use of emergency rooms for non-emergency care, exclude doctors whose costs are out of line from program participation, and act as more prudent purchasers of laboratory services and medical devices.

Other states are introducing more discipline in their health coverage for their own employees, including the use of equal contributions to a selection of health plans, with employees paying the difference if they choose a plan with a higher premium such as, for example, traditional fee-for-service coverage rather than an HMO. The challenge to states involves making greater use of managed health care that steers both Medicaid patients and state workers toward lower cost health care providers while continuing to monitor the patterns of care to assure quality.

THE PRIVATE SECTOR

Both state governments and private employers are redesigning benefits to encourage their insured to stay well and to obtain care in the lowest cost, quality-care setting. Through the use of pre-admission screening and second opinion programs for hospitalization, health promotion programs, and full coverage of services purchased in lower cost settings such as free-standing ambulatory centers, payers of care in both the public and private sectors are putting pressure on providers with incentives rather than formula-based controls.

Through business coalitions now established in many parts of the country, private employers are collecting data on provider charge and practice patterns in their communities and developing programs to guide workers toward more cost-effective delivery settings.

These reforms are significant because they establish the principle that a pool of employees and government beneficiaries will be used in a constructive way as a powerful resource to reward cost-conscious medicine and penalize excessive charges and utilization. Instead of the hollow nominal "freedom of choice" that allowed patients to roam randomly through the community in obtaining health care, these reforms involve a more meaningful freedom of choice—the right of the buyers to say "yes" to efficient sellers and "no" to those whose costs are out of line. This is the essence of an effective market, and it is precisely what has been missing in health care finance and delayed by the endless stream of feckless controls.

The three key problems with our health care finance system remain unsolved, but we have taken some important steps in the right direction. Progress has been most impressive in reforming the faulty payment system that has fed the upward spiral of health care costs. A momentum has developed behind the use of incentives by purchasers of care to reshape coverage and steer patients toward cost-effective, high quality providers. Yet this steady momentum could be upset by a frantic search for a "quick fix" involving a new round of stifling government regulation. The challenge is to achieve a proper balance between the cost of care and the quality of and full access to care through decentralized, pluralistic decision-making based on incentives and to sidestep the temptation of a public utility model that would subordinate quality and access to a temporary suppression of costs.

Progress against imbalanced coverage and the holes in our health care safety net has come more slowly, and we have a long way to go in these areas. Moreover, achieving further progress here is vital to the continuation of a movement toward a more competitive market for care. For as long as the finance system is marked by gaps in coverage—a mixture of overly-generous and skimpy benefits—and wholesale inequities, the further deregulation of health care will be threatened. With a fair and complete safety net intact, we could proceed safely to remove the government from its awkward role as price regulator and market-entry policeman.

With subsidies targeted more toward need and balanced insurance coverage, we can use market incentives to achieve the measure of cost deceleration that still allows people full access to the best health care that their money can buy.

PITTSBURGH SOCCER CHAMP RECOGNIZED

HON. BUD SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, a constituent of mine, Peter J. Smith III, is the first western Pennsylvania soccer player to be invited to the National Sports Festival by the U.S. Olympic Committee. The National Sports Festival, a pre-Olympic event, opened in Los Angeles on Friday.

Peter Smith is an outstanding young man with a promising future in soccer. In the fall he will be a senior at the University of Tampa, where he has just received an achievement award for academics for the fourth consecutive year.

I would like to share with my colleagues an article about Peter which was published in the Pittsburgh Post Gazette South on July 25, 1985.

The article follows:

U.S.C.'s SMITH AIMS FOR PRO SOCCER JOB

(By Paul Dangelo)

The only thing that Pete Smith has ever wanted is a chance to prove himself on the soccer field. Next month at the National Sports Festival, he'll get that chance.

Smith, a graduate of Upper St. Clair High School, was recently selected to play for the South Region soccer squad at the Sports Festival, the American mini-Olympics pitting the top American athletes against each other in Olympic events.

For Smith, it's an opportunity to prove that he belongs on the field with this country's top soccer players.

"I felt it was really important for me to make this team if I want to continue to pursue a career in soccer," said Smith. "There will be a lot of important people at the Sports Festival, coaches and scouts from professional teams and the national federal, evaluating players. The sports Festival is like a stepping stone to the next level, to playing for the national team or with a professional team. Just being there and being seen by these people will help me."

Smith was drafted by the Spirit of the Mayor Indoor Soccer League when he was a senior in high school, but was not ready as a 17 year old to step into the play-for-pay grade. The Spirit advised Smith to enroll in a top-notch college program and work at improving his skills.

So Smith headed for the University of Tampa, one of the top soccer programs in the country. At Upper St. Clair, Smith had always been an attacking player, a playmaker and a goal scorer. But Tampa Coach Jay Miller changed Smith's position, moving him to defensive midfielder. Smith will be entering his senior season this fall, the third season that he will be a fixture in Tampa's starting line-up.

"We're looking for all of the things from Pete that we always look for from a senior player," said Miller. "He's been in the big battles, the crucial games; we want him to be a leader, to demonstrate coolness and determination on the field. He made the transition to playing with more defensive responsibilities without any problems. Last year, we used him to mark the opponent's top playmaker and he handled the job very well."

Miller is the coach of Smith's South squad in the National Sports Festival and agrees that the games can help make—or break—a career in professional soccer.

"The idea of the games is to get the best athletes together and compete under Olympic conditions," said Miller. "In soccer, the United States Soccer Federation oversees the soccer competition and uses the games as part of the selection process for the national team.

"I know that Pete wants to play pro soccer and playing at the Sports Festival will give him the opportunity to prove that he can play at such a high level of competition. He tried out for the games two years ago but didn't make it, though he was one of the last cuts. Now is his chance. I think he certainly merits a look. He's been around the game a lot and he has good instincts for the game instead of just reacting to a situation in a game. He's always thinking on the field. And he's one of the hardest working player I've ever seen. He's a 90-minute player."

Smith didn't think he had any special advantage in making the Sports Festival because Miller is the South coach.

"He may have known me better than some of the other players, but there were as many disadvantages as there were advantages," Smith said. "It's kind of little playing for your father. He didn't cut me any breaks just because he knew me. I think I made the team because I deserved to. I've worked hard to accomplish this sort of thing in soccer."

Smith has not only set lofty goals for himself, but for his team as well.

"This is my last year at Tampa, and the last year for the school as a Division II school. Next year we'll move up to Division I, which is fine because Tampa has been playing a Division I kind of schedule all along. But I'd really like to win the Division II national championship this season. It would be nice to go out as the champs.".

And when that's over, Smith will have the MISL draft to look forward to. One team that will not be drafting Smith is the Spirit, because they failed to sign him after drafting him out of high school. MISL rules state that the Spirit may only sign Smith now if he passes through the draft unclaimed.

"I really want to play for the Spirit but that may be difficult to do now," said Smith. "But as long as I get a chance to play with someone, I'll be satisfied. I'll have to prove this year that I deserve to be drafted, that I'm one of the top players in the country. And I'm ready to do the work that it will take to prove exactly that.

"Maybe down the road something could be worked out that I could come back here and play for the Spirit. Right now there's a lot of talk that the Spirit will move to another city. I hope not. The Pittsburgh soccer community needs the Spirit. Having a professional team in town gives young players a goal to aim for. Plus, the Spirit has reached out and touched the community in a very unique way and I think that would be missed if they were to leave."

"We've watched Pete carefully over the last few years and his development is really coming along," said Spirit General Manager Chris Wright. "We're very pleased that he was selected to participate in the Sports Festival. He's on the right track to accomplish his goal. This is one event where all of the coaches and scouts get to. It's the showcase of young soccer talent in this country."

And it's an opportunity for Pete Smith to guarantee that soccer will be in his future.●

LEGISLATION TO REQUIRE THE TIMELY FILING OF IRS AUDIT REPORTS

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, the growing complexity of our Tax Code makes it difficult enough for taxpayers to file their income taxes properly. For those who run afoul of the Code, there are IRS deficiency notifications, penalties for underpayment, and interest on the deficiencies.

Every year, an unlucky few taxpayers may find themselves called into an IRS office for an audit. Once an audit is completed, the IRS notifies the taxpayer of the deficiency and penalties owed. In addition, the IRS calculates interest charges from the time the deficiency occurred to a date certain after the issuance of the audit report. In effect, once the audit report is issued, the IRS gives taxpayers 10 days to pay the deficiency, penalty, and interest. If the taxpayer fails to do so, the interest continues to accrue until such time as the taxpayer actually pays up.

Since the IRS is required by law to charge interest on deficiencies from the time they occur, it is not unreasonable to expect the IRS to issue its audit report within a reasonable time period after the taxpayer's personal appearance before the examining office. Indeed, the local office of the IRS in my district indicates that it generally issues audit reports within 2 weeks of a taxpayer's personal appearance, assuming that the audit is completed at that time.

Sadly, the IRS does not always meet this goal. One of my constituents was audited in June, 1984 on his 1982 taxes, but the IRS did not issue its audit report telling my constituent how much he owed until May, 1985, fully 11 months after the audit. This is inexcusable. But to add insult to injury, the IRS is charging my constituent interest on his back taxes over this 11-month period, even though the IRS has explicitly acknowledged that the delay was its own fault.

Under current law, interest must be charged on a deficiency whether it takes 2 weeks or 11 months for the IRS to issue the audit report. The additional interest which can accrue because of IRS failures to produce a timely audit report can be substantial, but the IRS cannot waive this excess interest even if it wanted to.

If the Federal Government is going to charge taxpayers interest on their underpayments—as, in most cases, I believe it is reasonable to do—then we should at least require the IRS to issue audit reports in a timely fashion, instead of allowing interest on deficiencies to accrue indefinitely.

With that in mind, I am today introducing legislation to require the IRS to waive excess interest charges on deficiencies discovered in an audit when the audit report is not issued to the taxpayer within 30 days after the date the examination is completed. The taxpayer would still be responsible for interest on the deficiency from the time of the deficiency to the time the examination is completed. But the IRS could not charge additional interest from the time the examination is completed unless it issues an audit report within 30 days. It is surely reasonable to expect the IRS to issue an audit report within 30 days. My bill will permit the IRS to do its job thoroughly, but will protect taxpayers from unreasonable delays in the issuance of audit reports. I urge its favorable consideration.●

KOLYMA'S GOLD AND THE DEATH CAMPS OF DAL'STROI

HON. ELDON RUDD

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, "kolyma znachit smert"—"kolyma means death."

In a manuscript to be published in the near future, Prof. Wladyslaw J. Cieslewicz, mineral economist at the Colorado School of Mines, provides information about the holocaust at the Kolyma gold fields in the arctic region of northeastern Siberia. Between 1931 and 1957, some 5 to 7 million Latvian, Moldavian, Estonian, Georgian, and the other captive non-Russian peoples were brought to the Kolyma gold fields and literally worked to death in a campaign of extermination and terror.

I commend the following excerpt from Professor Cieslewicz's work to my colleagues, and call upon the House to take early action on the resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 74, which I introduced to condemn the Soviets' ongoing slave labor policies.

KOLYMA'S GOLD AND THE DEATH CAMPS OF DAL'STROI

Kolyma gold placer deposits were discovered in 1928. This discovery came at an opportune time for the Russians. For after the Revolution of 1917 they decided, as a preventive and terror-inspiring measure, to decimate the different non-Russian captive nationality groups of their colonies of Ukraine, Transcaucasus and Central Asia. Mining of gold in the Arctic North was to serve this purpose (Anders, 1949, p. 73). As a method of extermination the Dal'stroi operation proved to be much more profitable than the gas chambers used later by the German Socialists. In Kolyma, each prisoner, before he died, as a rule within 1-2 years of his arrival at the mine, still produced between 1.5 and 2 kg of gold for the Russian treasury (Dallin, 1947, p. 146). At one time, Karl Marx defined capital as "congealed labor of the exploited proletarian workers." In Kolyma the Socialists made the metaphor a reality. The vis vitae drained from each deported Ukrainian worker, Kazakh peasant or slave of other nationality groups quickly congealed at the mine into the purest form of capital, namely gold.

In preparation for this "great Kolyma gold rush" the Russians completely reorganized the government agency in charge of gold mining, the Soiuz-Zoloto, the State Gold Monopoly. In 1927 Professor Aleksandr Serebrovskii originally from the Moscow Academy of Mining was appointed as the new director of the Soiuz-Zoloto. According to reports, Serebrovskii, the former Bolshevik boss of the Russian petroleum industry, was a true Socialist Stakhanovite (Levchenko, 1978). He organized training of thousands of Russian technicians to direct the slave labor at the mines. With help of the executives of the Standard Oil Company and of the American Ambassador in Paris, Serebrovskii was able to come to the U. S. to look at the modern placer mining technology and to recruit for the Soiuz-Zoloto a number of American placer mining engineers from Alaska and California (Littlepage, 1939, p. 31). The prisoners for the Souiz-Zoloto placer mines were supplied by the GULAG. The latter, a Russian abbreviation for the Chief Labor Camp Administration, was in charge of all Socialist concentration camps.

By 1933 the Soiuz-Zoloto was able to rehabilitate hundreds of old mines and to place dozens of new ones in production. During the five year period between 1927 and 1933 Russia's gold output rose spectacularly. It surpassed that of the U.S. and Canada; only South Africa kept producing more gold. In 1935 Russian gold output reached 6.2 million troy ounces (Emmons, 1937). In 1940 gold production of Kolyma alone was probably close to 10 million troy ounces (Anders, 1949, p. 76). Likewise, after 1929 the Soiuz-Zoloso disbanded all private prospecting parties, the "artels," replacing them with slave labor.

Simultaneously with the launching of the new "great Siberian gold rush of 1929," Russian Socialist terror police, the NKVD (the predecessors of the KGB), exerted a massive effort to confiscate all private gold. About one half million people were arrested on suspicion of gold ownership. Jewelers, watchmakers and dentists suffered in particular during the gold purge of 1929. Those among them who actually did not have any gold fared the worse. Unable to give up what they did not have, they were tortured to death by the incredulous NKVD interrogators (Solzhenitsyn, 1974).

After 1931 the government greatly intensified its program of exterminating the non-Russian captive peoples in the death camps (Brom, 1981, p. 10). For that purpose a special organization, the Dal'stroi, was established in Kolyma. The name Dal'stroi was the Russian abbreviation for: Far East Construction. It was run jointly by the Soiuz-Zoloto, the NKVD and the Red Army. From 1938 on, this organization was also responsible for geological exploration work throughout the entire Magadan Province and Northern Yakutia, in other words in all of northeast Siberia (Ustiev, 1972). During its existence between 1931 and 1957, the Dal'stroi brought to Kolyma, Northern Yakutia and later also to Chukotka a total of 5-7 million slaves. Practically all of them died there in the gold-and-tin mines.

The policy of extermination pursued by the Russians was well illustrated in the fate of the Polish population caputured during the 1939-1945 Joint Russian-German Socialist War of Aggression Against Poland. Altogether some 2 million Poles were deported or imprisoned in Russia. In the fall of 1941, following Hitler's breach of Russian-German Military Alliance Against Poland, the Russians agreed to set free all of the Poles. To resume the war effort against Socialist Germany, the Polish Free Government, then in London, started to organize in Uzbekistan a Polish Army made up of these ex-prisoners. But of the 2 million deportees only about 160,000 reported at the Polish military camps. Of the 10,000-12,000 soldiers sent in 1940 to the death camps of Kolyma, only 171 came back, and of the 3,000 sent to Chukotka not a single Polish POW returned (Anders, 1949). "Kolyma znachit smert'" "Kolyma means death"—that was the reputation of the Dal'stroi camps among Russia's slave population (Dallin, 1949, p. 109).

From the prisons in European Russia, these captive peoples were transported in box cars via the Trans-Siberian railway, either to the port of Nakhodka on the Sea of Okhotsk or to Vladivostok, and from there, during the summer months, by prison boats to the port of Magadan. Normally 3000-4000 prisoners were packed on boats originally built for a few hundred passengers.

The first death camp of Kolyma was set up in the Nagaev Bay to provide slave labor for the construction of the port city of Magadan. After 1931, the number of prisoners brought each year to Kolyma varied from 300,000 to 400,000 (Dallin, 1947, p. 137). Prisoners lived in makeshift barracks at the individual "priiski," the State Placer Mines. In Kolyma the customary barbed wire camp enclosures and watch towers were usually not necessary. From this remote taiga at the Arctic Circle there was no escape. Russians used specially trained wolfhounds to track down the prisoners who attempted escape (Dallin, 1947, p. 124).

After the discovery of rich tin placers at the Valkumei in the Chaun Bay area near the Chukchi Sea and the Yul-tin placer in NE Chukotka near the Bering Straits, beginning in 1941, the first death camps were established at these tin placers and later also at gold placers. To reach the remote mines, prisoners were driven on foot in the winter over the ice pack roads from the arctic ports in Kolyma and Chukotka. Practically all mining was done by hand. A former official of Dal'stroi, V.A. Berzin, described this work as follows: "Pick, shovel and the wheel barrow were the only tools the laborers of Dal'stroi had to work with, and they worked year round, even in the winter at temperatures of 60°C below zero" (Levikov, 1971, p. 12). "The placer mines looked like gigantic anthills swarming with hundreds even thousands of people digging, loading and carting away the overburden" (Levchenko, 1978). During the summer washing-season each prisoner had to load and carry in the wheelbarrow, 9.3 cubic meters of gravel per day from the pit to the heap up to 100m away. Piles of gravel were then washed by other teams of prisoners. The production norm for the teams working on the washing installation was fixed at 200 grams of fine gold per man per day. During the long Arctic nights, the prisoners had to blast frozen gravel before they could load it on the wheelbarrow. In the washing season, from mid-May to mid-August, the daily norm was 120 full wheelbarrows (Krakowiecki, 1950).

The prisoners, hungry and cold, dressed in rags with shoes improvised from shreds of gunny sacks or pieces of old rubber tires, worked in the daylight and during long winter nights, 16 hours a day. They received 600-800 grams of brad, hot water in the morning and a watery soup at night. That was all! The so-called "dokhodiagi", the dying, who were too weak to meet the daily work norm, had their bread rations reduced (Krakowiecki, 1950). Lenin decreed: "Kto ne rabotaet, tot ne kushaet," "no work, no food." As a result, most prisoners died right at the mine and were buried in the gravel (Petrov, 1949). Now the bodies of these victims, usually perfectly preserved in the permafrost, are being caught daily on dragline buckets and bulldozer blades, interfering with the present mechanical re-working of these "technogenic" placers of Kolyma.

"During the Dal'stroi period, 1931-1957, northeast Siberia became the "monetnyi dvor," the mint, of Socialist Russia. According to one source, between 1937 and 1946 the Dal'stroi prisoners produced 250 tons of gold annually (Anders, 1949). 1940 was the peak production year with 300 tons (Anders, 1949, p. 76). By 1948 northeast Siberia accounted for 85% of Russia's total gold production.

Following the exhaustion of rich surface placers at many mines, the prisoners were driven to exploit by hand the underground channel placers by primitive and dangerous "shaft-a-drift" method.

The Dal'stroi continued in existence until 1957. After that year most of the gold mines in northeast Siberia were shut down and remained closed until 1966. During that decade very little gold mining was carried on anywhere in Russia. Since then Kolyma and the other major Russian gold mining areas have revived. The author estimates that today in Kolyma about 50 old State Placer Mines, the "priiski," grouped in 6 mining districts, the "combinaty", are active again.●

MESSAGE TO PRETORIA

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of my colleagues to an article by Flora Lewis in the July 26 issue of the New York Times. Ms. Lewis makes an eloquent plea for democratic Western nations to recognize that the immediate imposition of economic sanctions against the apartheid regime of South Africa may be the last means available of avoiding a horrible bloodbath in South Africa.

Ms. Lewis' article calls on the United States to support the sanctions put forward by the French resolution in the Security Council last week which are nearly identical to those passed overwhelmingly by this body over a month ago—a ban on new investment, a ban on computer sales to the Government, a ban on nuclear trade and cooperation with South Africa, a ban on the importation of South African Krugerrands, and a ban on loans to the South African Government.

As we go to conference with the Senate on the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1985, I fervently hope that the administration and our colleagues in the other body will recognize the need for the strongest possible response to the recent emergency declaration of this South African Government.

MESSAGE TO PRETORIA

PARIS.—The slow burning free of racism in South Africa is getting shorter. It is hard to determine whether the Reagan Administration's policy of "constructive engagement" made the deteriorating situation worse. Certainly, it hasn't made anything better.

The state of emergency proclaimed in black townships may be a crossroad. Oliver Tambo, the exiled acting head of the African National Congress, has called for "a general offensive to make apartheid impracticable and South Africa ungovernable.

Yet, even he still speaks of a day when blacks and whites can both live in their huge, generously endowed country in common peace and dignity. Militant blacks accept South Africans of European descent as a "white tribe," people who belong to the land as much as they do. It may still be not too late to reverse direction and begin the long, hard process of reconciliation, though explosive pressures are clearly mounting.

The sorry state in the rest of Africa can neither justify nor mitigate South Africa's attempt to maintain a nation of two societies, not really separate as apartheid implies, but one atop the other, a crust of democracy and well-being supported by rank servitude and misery.

President Pieter Botha echoes the familiar African lament that what is writing is the fault of outsiders. In his case, he blames Communists, not of course imperialists and multinationals who are the usual butt in other parts of the continent.

But it was South Africa's aggressive policy to drive the A.N.C. out of bordering states that provoked greater challenge within the country.

The tone of desperation in the appeals of Bishop Desmond Tutu to end violence should be taken as a serious signal. He threatened to emigrate if blacks continue to murder blacks considered to be collaborators, almost an admission that modern leadership is losing its base and the voice of reason and tolerance losing its audience.

White South Africans risk being caught between their own extremists and rising black fury. The police measures have destroyed the last shreds of pretence that the system aimed for independent development for blacks. The whites have the guns. The blacks' only power is their numbers. But if confrontation is allowed to escalate, there won't be much room for accustomed security and comfort in between.

Just because it is a Western country, because it has a capacity to produce well and has the infrastructure of a modern society, South Africa has a responsibility to a continent that is foundering in tragedy. But it seems to be scurrying lemming-style into its own abyss.

"Constructive engagement" was advanced by Washington on the premise that the regime really did want to find a way out of its self-made dilemma. There was no historic inevitability about apartheid. It was imposed in steps of increasing severity after World War II. South Africa could have evolved in another way.

But it didn't. The recent steps to modify the system have been too wide of the realities of everyday life, too reluctant to address the central issue of legal equality, to be taken as a sign of regret and a desire to correct the terrible mistake.

So Washington, and the democratic West, now have the unhappy task of making clear to South Africa's leaders what they don't want to see for themselves. They are on a path of disaster.

Sanctions are a poor tool of international relations as a general rule. Their effect is seldom more than symbolic. But symbolism remains of critical importance in the South African case. There is nothing beyond it but force, so the symbols should be given a chance.

The United States should support the resolution sponsored by France against South Africa in the United Nations Security Council. It does not go very far, suspending new investment, export credits, purchase of gold coins and the like. But American endorsement would be a powerful message that Western patience is also running out. An American veto would be a shameful admission that South African cynics are right when they say the United States' protests against apartheid are only lipservice.

Black militants have noted wryly that the democracies only seem to get worked up about South Africa when there is violence. They don't really want violence; blacks would hurt most. But they haven't been given much evidence of consistent interest in the cause of justice without upheaval. They, too, need to hear the United States speak up firmly.

This is said in much sympathy and awareness of the dreadful dangers ahead of South Africa. Willy-nilly the United States is involved. It must act to head off the worst.●

TRADE EMERGENCY ACT

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, free trade. For decades it has been the knee-jerk answer of agricultural economists and Washington farm bureaucrats.

On paper, their answer looks wonderful. For years it worked.

But today there is a problem. A serious problem. Washington keeps talking free farm trade, but nobody seems to be able to find any.

We can't find it in Europe where the European Economic Community shuts out our farm exports, heavily supports its own farmers production and dumps their products on the world market at subsidized low prices.

We can't find it in Japan where the creative use of barriers to American farm products has been raised to an oriental art form.

From Brazil, we see heavily subsidized alcohol fuel exports strangling our own infant fuel industry in its crib.

From Argentina and Brazil, we hear the threat of subsidized soybeans undercutting our own.

And even from our nearest neighbor, we see chemical-laden, price-subsidized pork pouring across our borders.

The impact on American agriculture is devastating. The double whammy of foreign barriers to our farm exports and foreign subsidies that put their own farm exports on the world market at artificially low prices is crippling the American farmer.

In the face of all this, what do we hear from Washington? What we hear is the same old tired echo. Free trade, they say. We need more free trade.

Well, of course, we need more free trade. American agriculture can compete magnificently in the world when trade is free.

But the aging answer from the bureaucrats is worse than no answer at all because free trade for American agriculture is disappearing. The question is, How do we get it back? How can we restore free farm trade? And where other nations refuse to restore it, how can we save our farmers from their outlaw competition?

One thing is certain. We cannot survive by just saying the words free trade over and over again like some primitive tribe chanting for rain that never comes. Yet that has been our policy, Washington's policy, and it remains our policy today.

A trade war is the last thing America seeks. But in trade, as in defense, if your competitor is certain he can roll over you without harm, he is likely to do just that. And he has.

The American farmer has been rolled by the world because his Government has been unwilling to match, or even to mention, the unilateral agricultural trade war that is being waged against our farm families by nations we call our friends.

It is time to halt this madness.

It is time to enact legislation like the Trade Emergency Act, legislation which says clearly that America wants free trade, but makes equally clear America will match barriers with barriers, subsidies with offsetting subsidies until our trading partners agree to the honest free trade that will benefits us all.●

ECONOMIC SUPPORT FUND

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, our Government has long recognized that it is in our Nation's interest to maintain stability in the Eastern Caribbean. One means by which we can strengthen our friendly ties to the region is through disbursement of monetary aid through the Economic Support Fund [ESF]. The distribution of ESF provides flexible economic assistance to countries of particular economic, political, and security interest to the United States and simultaneously advances U.S. foreign policy objectives.

Antigua is a Caribbean country that is especially deserving of ESF support. Strategically located in the Leeward Islands, Antigua has a long history of friendly relations with the United States. Antigua is a democracy. Currently, there are two United States military facilities and a Voice of America station in Antigua. In addition, Antigua traditionally has supported United States interests in the Caribbean and is an active participant in the regional security system.

Antigua is also a developing country confronted with many economic adversities and challenges. One of its greatest challenges is the lack of a sufficiently developed infrastructure necessary to meet the needs of its citizens and to form the foundation for further economic expansion and development. Development has been impeded by the combined forces of a rapidly expanding population, inadequate housing facilities, and insufficient transportation, communication, and water supply systems. Antigua is in urgent need of ESF moneys to rectify and address these development problems.

The ESF support would also allow Antigua to become less vulnerable to unpredictable climatic conditions and worldwide economic recessions. Because tourism is its main industry, the economy of Antigua is directly and adversely affected by such unpredictable events as droughts and international economic recessions. The allocation of ESF moneys to infrastructure development, light industry diversification, agricultural programs, and technical training programs for Antigua will go far in ensuring its economic stability and enhance our own interests in the political stability of the region.●

SOCIAL SECURITY OFFICE OF NEWBURGH, NY, JOINS IN 50TH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Social Security Act of 1935 was the result of a recommendation by President Franklin D. Roosevelt that the Federal Government create a national program that would establish a system of unemployment and old-age benefits and enable the States to provide more adequate benefits that would prevent another economic crisis such as that experienced during the Great Depression. Acting on those recommendations, the initial legislation adopted by the Congress included old-age insurance, unemployment insurance, and public assistance; the first such program in the history of this country. On August 14, 1985, the United States will celebrate the 50th anniversary of the signing of the Social Security Act. Although the Social Security Act has been amended many times over the years, I am pleased to note that it has kept its original promise and continues to provide economic security for our Nation's workers.

There have been many changes in the Social Security Act since 1935. Subsequent legislation increased the original law's protection by adding survivor's and disability benefits. Legislation most recently enacted by Congress assures financial security of this program well into the next century, insuring that benefits will continue to be paid, not only to those currently receiving checks, but also to future generations. It is, therefore, appropriate that the theme selected by the Social Security Administration for the 50th anniversary is "Social Security: Partnership With Tomorrow."

To commemorate the 50th anniversary of Social Security, many special activities have been scheduled locally and throughout our Nation. On August 12, a major exhibit will be opening at the National Archives focusing on the history of Social Security. The U.S. Postal Service is holding ceremonies on the issuance of a commemorative stamp to mark the occasion at Social Security headquarters in Baltimore on August 14. Open houses and other anniversary events will be sponsored by local Social Security offices around the country during the week of August 11-17.

As my colleagues know, I am proud to represent the 22d Congressional District of New York. My constituents in Orange County are served by the Orange County Social Security office located at 473 Broadway in Newburgh, NY. Since opening its doors on October 28, 1937, the Newburgh Social Security office has dedicated itself to the principle of good responsive public service. The 45 employees and Retired Senior Volunteer Program [RSVP] volunteer Gay Diehl, strive to provide timely and correct checks to the 42,000 Orange County residents receiving Social Security checks and supplemental security income. In addition to issuing checks, the various services provided by our Social Security office include estimating benefits and issuing Social Security numbers to individuals. Indeed, the Social Security office serves virtually every resident of Orange County. Our citizens can rest assured that service in the Orange County office will continue in the fine tradition that has already been established.

Like many Social Security offices across the United States, our office in Newburgh will be joining in the celebration. On Monday, August 12, S. Peter Murphy, the district manager of the Orange County Social Security Administration office in Newburgh, NY, will receive a proclamation from Orange County Executive Louis Heimbach declaring the week of August 11, "Social Security Week" in Orange County. On Wednesday, August 14, the office will be serving anniversary cake to local dignitaries and to the public. The melodies of two senior citizen musical groups, the Golden Tones and the Melodeers will be a featured part of the anniversary celebration. Newburgh Mayor Joan Shapiro and Orange County Office for the Aging Director Joseph Dwyer are scheduled to be in attendance between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. to share in these festivities. Tours of the office will be offered from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. daily during Social Security Week.

Additionally, Mr. Murphy and devoted staff are scheduled to participate in the Senior Citizens Picnic Day sponsored by the Orange County Office for the Aging on Friday, August 16. Approximately 600 seniors are expected to join in this event at Orange County Park, where I am certain a good time will be had by all.

Accordingly, I look forward to joining with my fellow Americans in celebration of the 50th anniversary of the Social Security Act. This historic piece of legislation, through growing and adjusting to the changing needs of our population, has truly forged a "Partnership With Tomorrow," and will continue to thrive as an integral part of our society. Accordingly, I encourage my colleagues to join with us in the various celebrations and activities being held across our great Nation to commemorate this historic occasion.●

AMERICA'S OLDER DISPLACED WORKERS

HON. NORMAN SISISKY

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Speaker, the House Select Committee on Aging last week held a hearing to bring to public attention the plight of America's older displaced workers aged 40 and above. As we change from a heavy industrial to a service-information economy, hundreds of thousands of workers are being forced out of the labor force. Jobs have disappeared, and many skills aren't readily transferable to other fields. We're hearing that these workers face particular difficulties, complicated by age, in trying to reenter the labor market.

According to a study conducted by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, 5.1 million workers lost their jobs due to the decline of an industry or a plant closing between 1979 and 1984. The study found that the chances of reemployment for those displaced workers declined with age. Only 41 percent of those between the ages of 55 to 64 became reemployed. And of those that found jobs, almost half, 45 percent, received lower pay than their previous position. One-third took salary cuts of more than 20 percent.

The worker aged 40 and older is usually an established, contributing member of the community, a homeowner, family member, a taxpayer, and an active consumer. But on the average, this same 40-plus worker has less formal schooling, is more likely to be employed in declining industries and occupations, and may be experiencing unanticipated midlife events such as major health or disability problems.

The termination of a long held position can be devastating for anyone, but since older workers stay unemployed longer and often must accept a significant pay reduction when reentering the job market, the loss is all the more difficult. It may lead to economic hardship and threaten the prospects of a secure and comfortable retirement. Long-term unemployment for the older worker also can mean the end of health and life insurance and pension benefits, not to mention the sacrifice of a college education for his or her children.

Moreover, we're all affected by the loss of productive workers in the labor force through increased Social Security, public assistance, compensation and other payments, reduced savings and taxes, and increased stress on community resources.

We've invested in training and retraining programs, and these efforts have helped to ease the rift between the skills of the existing worker and jobs now in demand. But considering the growing problems of the older displaced worker, we have to ask ourselves, "Are we reaching enough of the right people?" and "Are our policies responsive to their particular needs?"

We need to reassess our policies in terms of their impact on employment patterns. And while age discrimination exists in the labor market, we must acknowledge that many of the problems older workers face are due to causes other than age discrimination. Employment policies and programs must treat directly the labor market problems causing this older worker tragedy.●

SANG AUK LEE—INTERNATIONAL INTERN

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity to host several international interns during the past year, including one fine man named Sang Auk Lee. Sang, who was part of the Korea-United States Youth Exchange Program, provided valuable assistance in performing office responsibilities such as casework, document production, constituent letter writing and attending committee hearings.

Sang's love of freedom and his appreciation of the United States and what we stand for, was eloquently expressed in a letter he wrote upon the completion of his internship here in my office. I greatly enjoyed Sang's letter and offer it for my colleagues' review. Furthermore, I would highly recommend that my colleagues offer internships to interested international students. Their contribution to mutual understanding and cooperation should not be underestimated.

JULY 25, 1985.

Hon. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LAGOMARSINO: Today is the last day of my serving an internship at your office. Ever since I arrived in Washington, D.C., I have enjoyed all things I get involved in thanks to Americans' warm hospitality. Especially, I couldn't find any difficulties in getting along with your assistants and interns with their great willingness to help me.

For the past four decades since the end of World War II, and especially through the Korean War, our two countries have retained very close and cooperative relationships. As a college student, I take a great interest in the United States. Touring around Washington, D.C. and other historical sites outside the D.C., I learned and was impressed by the efforts made by your Founding Fathers and other great figures to bring human dignity and democracy to this great land. Additionally, I could learn how the United States is run and progressed by both the people and the government. Yours is truly a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

As a citizen of the Republic of Korea, I am very happy to have a very sincere and reliable friend country like the United States of America. Korea, which is also called the Land of Morning Calm, is a very good country, too. Its people are quite hopeful and confident of their future, taking a great pride in hosting the 88 Seoul Olympics.

Confronting the world's most belligerent communists in the northern part of the Korean Peninsula is not a good atmosphere in which to develop our country. About 40,000 American soldiers are stationed in Korea sharing with Korean soldiers the sublime duty to preserve peace and the freedom of man in the beautiful country.

I express my deep appreciation of your efforts to help promote mutual understanding between our two countries. Thank you.

With best wishes for the United States of America.

Sincerely yours,

SANG AUK LEE.●

PUBLIC SALE OF CONRAIL DESERVES SUPPORT

HON. BUD SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, after several months of careful evaluation and discussions with the various parties, I have decided to support the public sale of Conrail, rather than the administration's proposed sale to Norfolk Southern.

Because this is such an important transportation issue to Pennsylvania and the Nation, it is appropriate that my reasons be outlined. There are several complicated issues surrounding the different alternatives, and a legitimate case can be made for each of the proposals. None are without both pluses and minuses.

PUBLIC SALE PROVIDES BETTER FINANCIAL RETURN TO TAXPAYERS

For several months, the talk of a public sale was just that—talk. No specific comments were forthcoming to guarantee the Federal Government a return on its investment in Conrail. Recently that changed. Morgan Stanley & Co. put together a group of blue chip investors who guaranteed a minimum of $1.2 billion to the Government for its 85 percent ownership in Conrail. The employees own the other 15 percent. Additionally, Morgan Stanley offered 1 million warrants to the Government, which means that if the price of Conrail stock increases, the Government would receive additional revenue from the sale of the warrants.

Conversely, the Norfolk Southern proposal pays the Government only $1.2 billion, while giving Norfolk Southern a $400 million tax savings according to the Congressional Budget Office.

PUBLIC SALE PRESERVES RAILROAD COMPETITION

The public sale would keep the three major eastern railroads—the CSX, Norfolk Southern, and Conrail—while the Norfolk Southern would leave only two major independent railroads in the East. Further, the Norfolk Southern sale could cause a major diversion of traffic from the CSX's B&O line, causing a shutdown of that line and a further lessening of competition. Reduced competition probably would mean higher prices for shippers, thereby creating an economic disadvantage for industry in the Northeast.

PUBLIC SALE IS BETTER FOR THE EMPLOYEES

Employees can either keep their stock in Conrail or sell it at $48 per share. Employee job protection provisions are continued, and $200 million are provided for past wage deferrals. The employees also get two seats on the board of directors. As a result of the negotiating process, employees have already received a return to the industry wage scale, retroactive to July 1, 1984.

PUBLIC SALE RETAINS CONRAIL FACILITIES AND JOBS

Although the Norfolk Southern promised to keep the Conrail shops, the commitment lasts only for the length of the legal covenants, which is 5 years. An independent Conrail would need the shops long after the legal convenants had expired. Further, Conrail agreed to include $14.4 million in capital investment for the Altoona shops in their 5-year plan. Jobs would be more secure in an independent Conrail, rather than as a subsidiary of another railroad where work could be transferred to the parent company.

There clearly is a risk involved in supporting an independent Conrail. If the prophets of gloom and doom are right about the Northeast—that it is bound to decline and stagnate—then being a part of a larger railroad system which is headquartered in another part of the country could help keep Conrail afloat as it shrinks in size to serve a shriveling region. But if you believe in the future of Pennsylvania, and our region, then an independent Conrail can surely survive and prosper—as it now is doing.

I choose to believe in our future, so I choose to support an independent Conrail.●

ADMINISTRATION OPPOSITION TO REDUCED RATES FOR CERTAIN MAILERS CRITICIZED

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I must say I was astonished when the administration proposed the elimination of the appropriation for revenue forgone, that reimbursement to the Postal Service for revenues not received due to reduced postage rates for certain mailers. Those people who benefit from this reduced mailing rate are our schools, our churches, veterans organizations, small rural newspapers, charities such as the American Cancer Society, United Way, Easter Seal Society, and the National Federation for the Blind.

In 1952, when these special rates were established, the Congress recognized the contribution of nonprofit organizations to the good of the country; it recognized that in order for newspapers to operate in rural, nonprofitable markets, and bring reading materials to people in those areas, a reduced postage rate was necessary; it recognized the importance of library services and the need for a reduced postage rate if people were to avail themselves of those services, knowing full well that the cost of mailing books and other library materials would be prohibitive at commercial rates; and it recognized the unique needs of the blind and handicapped who do not generally have easy access to braille materials and taped materials—that in order to make such material available from State libraries and the Library of Congress, those items should be mailed at no cost.

Now, with the exception of the free mailing privilege for the blind and handicapped, the Reagan administration and the Senate agree the appropriation for revenue forgone should be eliminated. What a slap in the face to those organizations which the President has asked to pick up the slack in the face of the budget crunch. As the Federal Government has cut back funding of many programs, we have asked the private sector to take on more responsibility for social programs, for the arts and culture, for health research, and for public education campaigns. Now the administration and the Senate want to take away the preferred postage rate for nonprofit organizations which rely heavily on direct mail for fundraising purposes. The idea is ludicrous and I commend the Appropriations Committee for recognizing the importance of the revenue forgone appropriation, which, in some way, affects nearly every person in this country.●

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, on October 12, 1985, Crown Heights Post No. 108 of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States will celebrate its golden anniversary, commemorating 50 years of faithful service to the Crown Heights community, to the country, and to veterans. Since its organization in 1935, the Crown Heights Post has grown to be one of the largest in the New York area.

Crown Heights was the first post to establish a memorial hall in remembrance of deceased Jewish veterans. But the post's attention to the community has not been focused on veterans alone. The post sponsors various activities for neighborhood youth, including athletic and academic competitions. The post has also presented educational seminars alerting teenagers to the dangers of drug abuse.

The post also provides support to Brooklyn's elderly community. In addition to an active entertainment program, the senior citizens committee runs a clothes distribution program and a home visitation program for the neighborhood elderly.

The post's hospital committee is also very active. The committee promotes religious services for hospitalized veterans and distributes books, cards, and games to VA hospital patients. Committee members have given thousands of hours of service as hospital volunteers.

In spite of this full array of community activities, the post has always kept up-to-date on national issues such as civil rights, education, veterans benefits, and defense. The post has been effective in encouraging its members to voice their views to their elected officials and to participate fully in our democratic process.

Crown Heights Post No. 108 has a full 50 years to remember, and an even longer and more productive future to anticipate. I am sure all my colleagues join me in conveying my best wishes to this pillar of the Brooklyn community.●

HONORING PURN HUTCHISON

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to summarize 100 years of life. For this reason it is difficult to express to my colleagues the meaning of Purn R. Hutchison's century. I could tell you that he spent 60 years working for the Knoxville Iron Co., before retiring as a superintendent in 1964. I might mention his civic pride and dedication as a member of the Knoxville City Council between 1940 and 1956. Or perhaps I should point out that he began working at age 9 for 25¢ a day at a lumberyard.

These are the facts about Purn Hutchison, but the facts do not describe his strength, or the respect others hold for him. It is harder to paint an accurate picture with only words.

I got to know Purn Hutchison in the latter portion of his tenure on the city council when I served as city law director. He was a strong man, who would state his views with conviction. I always respected his counsel, and his support. Though we wore different political labels, he had an open mind, and I benefited from his experience, as have so many others.

On September 9, 1985, he will be 100 years old. He continues to be a valued and respected member of the Lonsdale community where he has lived since about 1910. Every Sunday he walks from his home of 71 years on Minnesota Avenue to the Lonsdale Baptist Church to attend Sunday School.

It is at the church he will be honored on August 11. His grandchildren, Don Hutchison of Knoxville, and Brenda Gravander of Potsdam, NY, will be there along with his daughter-in-law, Roberta V. Hutchison, and great-grandchildren, Kris Hutchison and Kristin and Meghan Gravander. It is this expression of love and honor which best captures the meaning of Purn Hutchison's 100 years.●

ANTHONY CASAMENTO: AN AMERICAN HERO

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to correct a terrible injustice inflicted on a man who risked his life for our Nation without thought of the consequences.

I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a man who during World War II displayed great heroism. His name is Anthony Casamento and he lives in West Islip, NY—my hometown.

Mr. Casamento, a marine, displayed unusual courage while manning a machinegun singlehandedly on Guadalcanal. Upon his return to the States to recuperate from wounds inflicted in battle, the Marine Corps investigative team did not follow up on Mr. Casamento's report of the battle at Guadalcanal. The failure of the Marine Corps to follow up its investigation left Mr. Casamento's reports unconfirmed. Mr. Casamento's company was then stationed in Australia and Mr. Casamento was thought to be dead. No investigative team contacted his company.

In 1964 two survivors of the battle came forward, having read an article on Mr. Casamento in the newspaper. In 1965, after a briefing by Mr. Casamento's commanding officer, the Navy Board of Decorations and Medals unanimously recommended that Mr. Casamento receive the Medal of Honor. This decision was overturned by the Secretary of the Navy.

In 1978, the President of the United States signed a bill waiving the time limitation for granting the Medal of Honor. Mr. Casamento's medal was eventually awarded in 1980, after a hearing before the Board for the Correction of Naval Records. Mr. Casamento's award clearly indicates that he deserves all entitlements that the Medal of Honor recipients normally have bestowed upon them.

In 1980, after a 35-year wait, Anthony Casamento was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for meritorious valor at Guadalcanal.

The legislation which I introduced today authorizes retroactive payments of the special pension that Medal of Honor recipients receive and Anthony Casamento, a living example of a great American, deserves.●

IN SUPPORT OF PUBLIC SERVICE FELLOWSHIPS

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, today I want to reaffirm my support for the Public Fellowship Program authorized under title IX of the Higher Education Act, which provides fellowships to graduate and professional students to prepare them for leadership careers in government and nonprofit organizations.

Title IX, in its 10-year history, has provided important support, especially to minorities and women, in assisting them in securing a graduate education. More than 65 percent of graduates in this program are females and/or minorities. Fellowships are provided to full-time students and have given important stimulus to encouraging public service career goals for those who have been traditionally under-represented in this sector.

Equally as impressive is the breadth and scope of public service positions that are filled by these fellowship recipients—in Federal, State, and local governments. In a recent survey of the program, conducted by the Society for Public Administration, a review of graduates reveals that they are serving in positions as administrative assistants to Governors and mayors, analysts for public service commissioners, grant and contract administrators, personnel administrators, including labor relations specialists and policy evaluators and performance auditors. In my own State of New York, eight universities and colleges have educated fellowship recipients in the fields of public administration and policy, as well as urban studies and affairs.

This program continues to serve an important function with the most amount of $750,000 that has been annually provided for it. It also responds, in a small way, to the current crisis being faced by graduate education in America, which was highlighted in a report by the National Commission on Student Financial Assistance, and authored by our former colleague John Brademas, who is now president of New York University.

At a time when we face hard educational choices in the face of ongoing threats to reduce the Federal role in promoting access to educational opportunity, this program deserves our continued support.●

THE 1985 FARM BILL—POSITIVE DEVELOPMENTS

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, although it is much too early to predict the outcome of the 1985 farm bill, a couple of developments have occurred which, I believe, are extremely positive and are deserving of recognition.

One of the most encouraging of these developments has been the emerging consensus among the major farm organizations. Virtually all the principal farm groups are united in their opposition to the Reagan administration's farm program—a program which, if implemented, would threaten the long-term stability and profitability of American agriculture. Moreover, while some significant differences remain among the different approaches taken by the major farm organizations, there is general agreement that strong production controls, a significant conservation reserve, and measures to stimulate agricultural exports are all required to address the serious problem of price-deflating surpluses. To further the building of this consensus, many of us in the House are cosponsoring more than one farm group's proposal; we seek thereby to highlight the areas of agreement between the farm organizations and to consolidate opposition to the administration's program.

I am also encouraged that both the House and Senate Agriculture Committees have recently voted to adopt as part of the 1985 farm bill a major portion of a soil conservation initiative that Congressman WIRTH and I advanced. Our soil conservation measure would create a 30-million-acre reserve which would pay farmers to remove highly erodible cropland from production. It would also deny Federal farm subsidies to those who plow highly erodible land or convert fragile wetlands to crop production. This program will help reduce both price-deflating agricultural surpluses and steadily rising costs of Federal farm programs. Toward this end, it will simultaneously benefit farmers, taxpayers, and our overall national conservation policy. I anticipate strong bipartisan support for this measure when the Congress considers the 1985 farm bill following the summer recess.

Mr. Speaker, many difficult policy choices still face the House in the weeks ahead. We seem to find ourselves at this point in the debate in a classical bind: attempting to find ways to cut Federal farm program costs, while at the same time seeking ways to protect farm income. Unfortunately, those factors that will help American agriculture the most—lower deficits, lower interest rates, lower trade deficits, and a stable world economy—are not things we can provide in a farm bill. However, I strongly believe that with the cooperative effort of all the major farm organizations we can pass a bill that, while perhaps not satisfactory to all, will insure greater stability and profitability for our Nation's farmers.●

CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, Yvengy Yakir and Leonid Byaly have been Soviet Jewish refuseniks since the 1970's. It is on their behalf as individuals and as symbols of thousands of other Jews similarly persecuted, that I join my colleagues in today's Congressional Call to Conscience.

Yvengy Yakir first applied for emigration privileges for himself and his family in October 1973. They were denied visas because Rimma, Yvengy's wife, was employed as an engineer and allegedly had access to state secrets. Since they submitted their first application for an exit visa, Rimma can no longer find work as an engineer. Their son Aleksandr is also an engineer by training, yet he has never been permitted to work in his field. He is now serving a 2-year sentence in a labor camp for alleged draft evasion. Military service almost always means access to state secrets and is thus another tactic of the Soviet Government to delay emigration.

Like the Yakirs, Leonid and Judith Byaly are engineers who were denied emigration privileges due to alleged access to state secrets. Judith was forced to leave her job when her employers refused to issue the certificate required by the Department of Emigration. Although her mother lives in Israel and had written numerous appeals for the Byaly's emigration, the Soviet authorities continue to threaten Leonid and Judith with exile from Moscow if they continue their efforts to emigrate.

There is a sad irony to the fact that this Congressional Call to Conscience takes place on the eve of the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki final act. We have spent the past 10 years searching for a way to encourage the Soviet Union to guarantee the fundamental human rights they pledged to uphold as signatories of that document. Only 499 Jews have been granted exit visas so far this year and only 36 for the month of June.

The U.S.S.R. insists that emigration is a domestic issue with which the U.S. Government should not concern itself. We believe that the issue of human rights is fundamental to our diplomatic relationship. The Soviets must make an effort to uphold previous agreements before we will have the confidence to negotiate further.

Years of harassment, persecution, and imprisonment have not forced the Jews to deny their culture and their traditions. In the words of Avital Shcharansky, wife of dissident Anatoly Shcharansky, "Their strength is our inspiration." We will pursue human rights for Soviet Jews until they are realized.●

SOVIET JEWRY

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Congress remains committed to pressing the Soviet Government, under the leadership of Mikhail Gorbachev, to allow those desirous Jewish citizens to emigrate freely and without harassment or delay. To this end, I am pleased to participate in this year's "Call to Conscience on behalf of Soviet Jewry."

Mr. Speaker, the number of Soviet Jews allowed to emigrate has dropped precipitously. In 1979, approximately 51,000 Jews emigrated from the U.S.S.R., mostly to the United States and Israel. In 1980, the number was 21,000. By 1984, however, the number had declined to less than 1,000. Obviously, Americans concerned with human rights condemn this blatant disregard for the political commitments made under the Helsinki accords.

Contrary to the claims of Soviet Government spokesmen, there are many Soviet Jews who still wish to emigrate. They have been repeatedly denied this fundamental human liberty, and many have suffered through persecution, detention, harassment,m and other reprehensible actions. Let us be clear in our position, Mr. Speaker. The Soviet Government is systematically violating the human rights of a large percentage of its citizens, and in the process is making a mockery of the agreements and accords which it has signed with the United Nations, the United States, and other nations and entities. By undertaking these activities, the Soviets are undermining world confidence in their reliability as a respectable and trustworthy partner in international relations and lending credence to assertions that the Soviet Communist system of government is bankrupt, both morally, politically, and economically, and cannot and should not be trusted.

Mr. Speaker, only 499 Soviet Jews have been allowed to emigrate from the "worker's paradise" this year. This number is far too low and is not representative of the number of Jews wishing to emigrate. I applaud the fact that Americans, including President Reagan, Secretary Shultz, and others, consistently raise this issue in their meetings with their Soviet counterparts. I urge the President to personally raise this important matter during his meetings in Geneva with CPSU General Secretary Gorbachev. Members of Congress will certainly continue to raise the issue and appeal to the Soviets to allow Soviet Jews to emigrate.●

JOHN-DAVID BARTOE, ASTRONAUT

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate Dr. John-David Bartoe on his successful lift-off into space yesterday. Dr. Bartoe, a former resident of Hulmeville, and a graduate of Neshaminy High School in Bucks County, is an astronaut on the space shuttle Challenger.

No one in the history of space flight has ever been assigned longer to a specific mission than Dr. Bartoe. Although selected for NASA's Space Shuttle Program in 1978, he was unable to go into space until yesterday due to several space shuttle postponements.

Dr. Bartoe is carrying three items into space from Bucks County. The borough historical society gave him a book on the American Bicentennial and a minimedallion from the Apollo 14 moon mission. Neshaminy High School gave him a Neshaminy pennant. These items will be returned to Bucks County to be put on display.

I commend Dr. Bartoe for his many contributions to the Space Shuttle Program. His success is not only a credit to himself, his family, and community, but reflects on the Nation as a whole.●

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

HON. KEN KRAMER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, in the months since this Congress convened last January, we've heard a lot about the perils of deficits—about the pressing need to rein in out-of-control Federal spending. Virtually all of our colleagues have at one time or another called for a freeze on this program or that, citing next year's projected $200 billion shortfall as making deficit reduction essential.

Unfortunately, rhetoric and reality have never met on cutting deficits. Today we're passing appropriations bills for next year right and left, waiving a budget blueprint we haven't even passed. The congressional budget process is coming apart at the seams, and we're even starting to hear the first rumblings of the need for another tax increase as the only solution for our deficit crisis. A tax increase—after 49 of the 50 States resoundingly rejected that approach at the polls last November.

Mr. Speaker, the American people overwhelmingly support making a balanced budget amendment part of our Constitution. They don't want more taxes; they want responsive Government. They don't want illusory spending restraints, they want a Government that lives within its means. I urge you to listen to the voice of the American people this fall and allow House consideration of a balanced budget amendment.●

STATE POLICE CAMP CADET PROGRAM

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to call your attention to a valuable service being provided to the youth of Butler County, PA, by Butler area law enforcement officials.

In 1970 the Pennsylvania State Police of Troop "D," headquartered in Butler, originated a camping program for the young people of Butler County. Known as Camp Cadet, the primary purpose of the Cadet Program is to foster and enhance relations between local law enforcement officials and Butler County youth. For 1 week each year 100 young people and several police officers gain a better understanding of each other. Not only do participants have a good time, but Camp Cadet provides law officers with an opportunity to demonstrate their interest in working with young people. In return, young people learn that police officers need not be feared.

Mr. Speaker, what is so significant to me about the Camp Cadet Program is the fact that Butler area law enforcement officials volunteer their own time to take these young people camping. They spend the entire week away from their own children and families so that others may benefit. In addition to operating the program on volunteer staff time, the Camp Cadet Program functions only through the generosity of local citizens who donate funds to this very worthwhile endeavor.

What began 15 years ago as an idea among three Pennsylvania State troopers has blossomed into a very successful summer program that enables Butler County youth and Butler area law enforcement officials to earn each other's respect.

SENATE—Wednesday, July 31, 1985

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished majority leader is recognized.

GUEST CHAPLAIN

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it is my honor this morning to welcome to this Chamber and to introduce to its Members and visitors our guest chaplain.

He is Father Donald R. Cullen, of St. Patrick's Catholic Church in Osage City, KS.

PRAYER

Father Donald R. Cullen, St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church in Osage City, KS, offered the following prayer:

Lord, Your blessing, please. Let us pray:

Lord, our God, the ultimate Ruler and Lawmaker, make our lives blameless. Help us to do what is right and to speak what is true, that we may some day dwell in Your tent and find rest on Your holy mountain after we die.

"Lord, who shall be admitted to Your tent and dwell on Your holy mountain? He who walks without fault; he who acts with justice and speaks the truth from his heart; he who does not slander with his tongue; he who does no wrong to his brother, who casts no slur on his neighbor, who holds the godless in disdain, but honors those who fear the Lord; he who keeps his pledge, come what may; who takes no interest on a loan and accepts no bribes against the innocent. Such a man will stand firm forever."—Psalm 15.

Father in Heaven, help the Senators to follow Your will in their work in our Nation's Capitol, so when they go back home to their people, they can tell them from the very bottom of their hearts an old blessing:

May there always be work for your hands to do
May your pockets always contain a coin or two
May the Sun always shine on your window pane
May you always have a rainbow to follow each rain
May the hand of a friend be always near you
And may God fill your hearts with gladness to cheer you.

May the blessing of Almighty God, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, descend upon you and remain forever. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the standing order, the leaders have 10 minutes each, to be followed by special orders in favor of the following Senators, for not to exceed 15 minutes each: Senators PROXMIRE, KERRY, and HEINZ.

The special orders will be followed by routine morning business, not to extend beyond 11 a.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

Following morning business, it will be the intention of the majority leader to proceed to the consideration of the conference report to accompany supplemental appropriations, as well as any other Legislative or Executive Calendar items which have been cleared for action. I would guess that the first item would be S. 63, In-Flight Medical Emergencies Act of 1985.

Also, I am advised that the Senate could proceed very quickly to the consideration of the conference report to accompany the State Department authorization bill.

I advise my colleagues that rollcall votes can be expected throughout the day and into the evening.

Mr. President, I again want to thank my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for their willingness to help us expedite a number of matters on the Legislative Calendar, and I hope we might have that continued cooperation for the remainder of the week.

There are a number of items that are of some controversy, but in many cases they can be resolved. It seems to me that if we have a few moments to focus on different areas, we can resolve a number of these items and pass the measures and send them on to the House.

So, again, I expect that the Senate will be in session not very late this evening, but probably into the early evening, as we prepare for the August recess.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANFORTH). Under the previous order, the Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may reserve my time for the remainder of the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

WHY THE NUCLEAR FREEZE IS IN COLD STORAGE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, those of us who have been strong supporters of the nuclear freeze have been taunted lately. Charles Krauthammer wrote a column for the Washington Post a few days ago entitled "Who Killed the Freeze?" The movement that seemed to be sweeping the country 2 or 3 years ago has almost faded away. Why? A big part of the answer is that Ronald Reagan was reelected President of the United States on November 6, 1984. That did it. Walter Mondale tried to make the nuclear freeze the central issue in the campaign. He did not.

The central issues in the 1984 Presidential campaign, the real reasons why Ronald Reagan won, were two: The Reagan personality versus the Mondale personality and the economy. The economy hit bottom in the fall of 1982. By election time 1984, it had roared back. We now know that in 1984 this country enjoyed the strongest gain in real economic growth—that is, in the growth of the gross national product, after subtracting inflation—that the country had enjoyed in 33 years. That 1984 economic recovery was possibly the biggest economic recovery in an election year in peacetime in American history. And in all American history no President has ever failed to win election by a handsome margin when the economy pushes on a massive roll right through election day. So how about the freeze issue? The freeze issue never had a chance. Except for the smashing U.S. victory over pathetic little Grenada, shortly before the election, the country was at peace. The terrorist killing of 241 marines in the Beirut barracks in Lebanon, obviously, constituted a serious American military and foreign policy failure. But it did not trigger the remotest suggestion of a hint or whisper of an armed conflict with the Soviet Union. So it did not trigger any arms control sentiment. President Reagan had ridden to victory in 1980 in the face of charges that his policies would push the country toward nuclear conflict with the Soviet Union. Four years later we seemed no closer to a military conflict with the Soviet Union. There had been no nuclear alert, no nuclear diplomacy. Sure the Geneva arms negotiations had begun in 1982 and had broken off in 1983. But both President Reagan and the Soviet leaders had expressed stronger opposition to the use of nuclear weapons than ever before. Yes, indeed, the President still opposed the freeze on nuclear weapons. No question about it, he refused to consider negotiations with the Soviets to stop nuclear weapon testing. But he favored arms control. He repeatedly said that he was willing to go back to the negotiating table with the Soviets and with everything on the table.

Under these circumstances it certainly should have been no surprise that an electorate that had repeatedly indicated its support of an end to the nuclear arms race through a negotiated mutual, verifiable freeze on the testing, production or deployment of nuclear weapons would also support a President of the United States who repeatedly claimed to favor arms control negotiations but opposed the particular formulation of arms control embodied in a nuclear weapons freeze. In sum, the country favored and still favors a nuclear weapons freeze. It reelected Ronald Reagan as President, in spite of the fact that the President opposed a freeze. Why did they reelect him and by such a smashing majority? For reasons that had nothing to do with the freeze.

So what happened to the nuclear freeze? Ronald Reagan happened. Here's why: When it comes to arms control—that is whether the country negotiates at all with the Soviet Union, whether we negotiate to limit or reduce a particular nuclear weapon or all weapons, and whether we accept or reject any Soviet arms control proposal who makes the determination? Answer: only one person. From the standpoint of this country the President of the United States is Mr. Arms Control. No one else counts at all. No other institution matters. Once the President is elected, for the next 4 years there is only one arms control game in town and that is whatever the President wants to make it. Any congressional resolution dealing with arms control has the same feeble force as a resolution adopted by the East Overshoe town board. It has absolutely no force at all, none. Even if the President should decide to accept and sign an arms control agreement and it is submitted to the Senate as a treaty, the power of the Senate depends on what the President wants to make it. Just suppose the Senate decides to get into the act. Let us say it refuses to ratify the treaty. Then what? Then the President can do precisely what President Carter and President Reagan have done with respect to SALT II. The President can simply announce that the United States will comply with the treaty. Of course, if the President does not want the country to comply with a treaty that has been negotiated by his negotiators we can simply tell the negotiators to reject the agreement. There will then be no treaty to submit. The President chooses his negotiators. He provides them with their instructions, if he wishes, down to the last comma and semicolon. He can fire and replace his negotiators at will and anytime. He can continue negotiations, end them, or postpone them as his heart desires. Is it any wonder that the nuclear weapons freeze is in mothballs. President Reagan will not change his mind on the freeze. So it is dead for at least the next 3½ years.

So who killed the freeze? Not the people of this country. They still support it enthusiastically and overwhelmingly. But they elected Ronald Reagan as President, in spite of his opposition to the freeze. That did not kill the freeze. It put the freeze in deep freeze until 1989, or later.

MYTH OF THE DAY: THAT THE ANTITRUST LAWS PREVENT PRICE-FIXING

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, today's myth of the day is that firms that engage in price fixing will be prosecuted by the Department of Justice. The fact is: They will not.

The August 5 issue of Business Week carries an editorial that reports as brazen and obvious a proposal to fix prices by Robert Crandall, the president of American Airlines, in a conversation with Howard Putnam, chairman of Braniff, that this Senator has ever seen. The proposal occurred in a telephone conversation. The Justice Department secured a tape of the phone conversation.

Here is the way the conversation went, and I might say it was a very colorful, scatalogical conversation with a lot of unfortunate profanity which, of course, I will not refer to in reporting the conversation. I simply will delete that.

Here is what Crandall, who is the president of American Airlines, said:

I think it's dumb to sit here and pound each other and neither of us making a dime.

PUTNAM [who was chairman of Braniff]. But * * * I can't just sit here and allow you to bury us without giving our best effort * * * Do you have a suggestion for me?

CRANDALL. Yes, I have a suggestion for you. Raise your fares 20%. I'll raise mine the next morning * * * You'll make more money, and I will too.

PUTNAM. We can't talk about pricing.

CRANDALL. We can talk about anything we want to talk about.

As Business Week observed:

Most businessmen would interpret Crandall's remark as an illegal invitation to fix prices. So did the Justice Department when it listened to a tape recording that Putnam, on advice of his lawyers, had made of the conversation.

And I just reported on the tape. So what happened? The Justice Department negotiated for 2 years with American Airlines and Crandall, and then on July 14, 1985, just a couple weeks ago, it allowed American and Crandall to sign a consent decree without admitting any guilt. As Business Week observed: "Deterrence, anyone?"

Mr. President, again and again this Senator has heard administration witnesses testify before the Banking Committee that we should relax the restrictions on interstate banking and mergers. When I protest that this would result in monopolistic concentration and price fixing among the surviving giants, they dispute that contention by saying the country can rely on the antitrust laws. The administration has followed a weak, permissive policy in mergers that concentrate economic power throughout our economy on the grounds that we can rely on the antitrust laws to prevent price fixing. This Senator has always regarded the notion that the American consumer can count on the vigorous enforcement of antitrust laws by the Justice Department as a myth under any Presidential administration of either party. The American Airlines incident makes the case that right now in this administration, Justice Department enforcement of antitrust laws prohibiting price fixing is indeed a myth.

Mr. President, I congratulate Business Week. The fact that this highly respected organ of American business speaks out this forthrightly about violations of law by big and powerful American corporations and their top executives constitutes a refreshing aspect of this sorry situation.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DOESN'T ANYONE GIVE A D - - -?

On or about Feb. 1, 1982, reads the Justice Dept. complaint, Robert L. Crandall, president of American Airlines Inc., talked on the telephone with Howard D. Putnam, chairman of the Braniff International Corp., about the competitive battle raging between American and Braniff on a number of routes served out of the Dallas/Fort Worth Airport. According to the complaint, the conversation included the following remarks, expletives modified:

Crandall: "I think it's dumb as hell for Christ's sake, all right, to sit here and pound the —— out of each other and neither of us making a —— dime."

Putnam: "But . . . I can't just sit here and allow you to bury us without giving our best effort. . . . Do you have a suggestion for me?"

Crandall: "Yes, I have a suggestion for you. Raise your —— fares 20%. I'll raise mine the next morning. . . . You'll make more money, and I will, too."

Putnam: "We can't talk about pricing."

Crandall: "Oh ——, Howard. We can talk about any —— thing we want to talk about."

Most businessmen would interpret Crandall's remark as an illegal invitation to fix prices. So did the Justice Dept. when it listened to a tape recording that Putnam, on advice of his lawyers, had made of the conversation. In February 1983, Justice filed a complaint in federal court charging American and Crandall with trying to fix prices and asking the court to bar Crandall for two years from any airline job with authority over prices. Then followed two years' negotiations with American and Crandall. On July 14, 1985, Justice allowed American and Crandall to sign a consent decree without admitting any guilt in the Braniff affair. Deterrence, anyone?

TIME IS RUNNING OUT FOR NAZI HUNTERS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on July 6, the Washington Post carried an article reporting that as many as 50,000 war criminal are still at large.

For Nazi hunters who have been pursuing these war criminals since the end of World War II, this statistic is heartbreaking.

It has been 40 years since the end of Hitler's genocide against the Jews. As these aging war criminals die off, the likelihood that the survivors of the Holocaust will ever see the vast majority of their tormentors brought to justice decreases.

According to Rabbi Marvin Hier, founder of the Simon Wiesenthal Center for Holocaust Studies in Los Angeles, about 10,000 former Nazis who are wanted are living in the United States. Only a handful of these former Nazis have been identified and deported to stand trial in the country where they committed their offenses.

For the past 40 years these so-called quiet neighbors have lived without any real fear that they would be brought to account for their part in the massacre of the Jews.

As these men advance in age, the whole question of deporting them to stand trial is likely to become moot.

That the United States finds itself in this position today is embarrassing. After World War II we had the opportunity to prosecute these men. Instead we gave them a haven.

That Klaus Barbie and other well-known murderers worked for U.S. intelligence agencies is a documented fact.

That we made inadequate checks into the backgrounds of those who immigrated to the United States and even facilitated the escape from Germany of war criminals is a documented fact.

Nazi hunters long ago despaired of bringing all the war criminals to justice. Numerically speaking not even a significant minority of the 50,000 at large will ever be prosecuted.

Former Nazis still being sought include men of enormous culpability.

There is Alois Brunner, a deputy of Eichmann, who is wanted for the murder of 125,000 people and who, it is believed, is now in hiding in Syria.

There is Walter Kutschmann, at large in South America, who is blamed for the deaths of 2,000 Polish Jews.

There is Leon Debrelle, a Belgian collaborator who now lives the good life in Spain giving lectures and seminars on Nazi history.

These are the types of men to which Nazi hunters give their highest priority today. But time is running out. It is unsatisfying to victims of the Holocaust that men such as Josef Mengele should die without ever seeing the inside of a courtroom.

Mr. President, the United States has made its mistakes in the past. Today we must make clear that we intend to bring to justice Nazi war criminals still at large and anyone else who would dare commit the heinous crime of genocide in the future.

We must ratify the Genocide Treaty.

We must join the 96 nations that have already made this commitment to human rights.

Ninety-six nations, Mr. President, every developed country in the world, except the United States, has ratified the Genocide Convention.

At the end of the last session, the Senate passed a resolution to take up the Genocide Treaty early in the 99th Congress.

Mr. President, we are now well into the 99th Congress. The efforts of Nazi hunters are imperiled by the passage of time. In the context of their struggle, I believe it is imperative that the Senate take up and ratify the Genocide Treaty at the earliest possible date.

WESTWAY LANDFILL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the Westway Highway and real estate project in New York has been portrayed by its advocates as having solid local support.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Both the New York Comptroller and city council president, two out of the three major citywide elected officials, have endorsed the bill I introduced with Representative FRANK GUARINI and Senators HUMPHREY, LAUTENBERG, and BRADLEY to end funding for the Westway landfill.

Many other New York area officials are also on the record in opposition to the project, including Congressman TED WEISS in whose district the project is located.

Mr. President, because of the importance of these local comments to the coming Westway Senate debate I ask unanimous consent that letters from City Council President Bellamy and Comptroller Golden be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER,
May, 16, 1985.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senator,
New York, NY.

DEAR PAT: Representative Guarini (H.R. 1888) and Senator Proxmire (S. 826) are sponsoring the "Westway Landfill Funding Prohibition and Hudson River Habitat Protection Act of 1985," precluding Federal funding (including Federal Highway Trust Funds) for the design and construction of the Westway landfill. Surely, New York must reconstruct a vehicular roadway on the West Side of Manhattan, by some estimates at a cost of $53 million (see Final Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement, November, 1984, Vol. I, p. VIII-6).

Even were the actual cost substantially higher, the remaining billion and a half dollar balance potentially available for mass transit represents money needed urgently to support rehabilitation of our subway, bus and commuter rail systems. But because this trade-in money may only be available until September, 1985 we must act quickly not only to ensure that New York City gets a highway on its West Side, but also to secure the mass transit funding that ought be part and parcel of the transaction. Accordingly, I hope you will support the Guarini-Proxmire legislation.

Sincerely,

HARRISON J. GOLDEN.

THE CITY OF NEW YORK, THE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL, CITY HALL,
New York, NY, May 16, 1985.

Hon. GARY ACKERMAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR GARY: I oppose the use of 1.7 billion dollars of federal transit funds to build Westway. I support a trade-in of Westway for mass transit improvements and construction of a sensibly designed roadway to replace the West Side Highway.

Westway will cost too much, promote the use of automobiles, cause environmental damage and deprive us of the opportunity to obtain much needed funds for our mass transit system.

The deadline for trading-in Westway for mass transit funding is September 30, 1985. I urge you to act now to stop this wasteful use of federal money.

Legislation now pending in the House and Senate would block funding for Westway and permit a trade-in to fund a replacement highway and provide more than a billion dollars in mass transit improvements. I urge you to support the legislation. The future of our City is at stake because our economic stability and prosperity depends on a safe, reliable and affordable mass transit system.

Sincerely,

CAROL BELLAMY.

MEDICARE AT 20: NEED FOR A PATIENT BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, yesterday's New York Times, in a front page article, headlined the problems for Medicare beneficiaries that result from implementation of the new prospective payment system for hospitals.

This new payment system revolutionized Medicare's approach to payment for inpatient care virtually overnight. Instead of simply paying bills after the fact, Medicare now establishes a price list, based upon 470 different categories of patient diagnoses, known as DRG's. Once the physician has established a diagnosis for a patient, the hospital knows, in advance, what payment it can expect from Medicare, based upon that price list.

And that change, together with new competitive pressures in the private sector, has turned hospitals upside down.

The incentives to pad the bills evaporated. The incentives to keep the patients in the hospital an extra day or two disappeared. Finally, there were incentives for administrative and clinical efficiency.

As the Times article points out, the average length of stay for Medicare patients has dropped 20 percent in little over a year, from an average hospital stay of 9.5 days to 7.5 days. And the decreased number of hospital admissions for patients of all ages means that an estimated 75,000 fewer patients are contracting new diseases in the hospital and 3,700 fewer patient are dying from those hospital-acquired diseases.

In general, those developments are positive and, on the whole, may well improve the quality of care that patients may receive. Unnecessary or prolonged hospital stays are simply not in the patient's interest unless they are medically necessary.

CONCERNS ABOUT QUALITY OF CARE

But there remains a strong suspicion that for some Medicare patients, the quality of care may actually decline. The reason lies in the very nature of prospective payment: Setting a price up front does encourage efficiency but it also provides rewards for those who skimp on services. So monitoring the quality of care provided becomes more important than ever for Medicare.

In theory, the agencies which monitor the quality of care for Medicare, the peer review organizations [PRO's], will deter unscrupulous providers. As will the threat of malpractice suits.

But as the General Accounting Office recently pointed out, the real threat may come, not from unscrupulous physicians or hospitals, but from the simple fact that there is widespread confusion regarding the way in which the DRG payment system works. And the evidence suggests that the confusion is just as strong among health care personnel as it is among Medicare beneficiaries.

HORROR STORIES THAT SHOULD NOT OCCUR

Two recent examples from the House and Senate Aging Committees make the point clearly.

Pat Hanson, a nurse with 20 years' experience, serves as DRG coordinator for a 400-bed hospital in Minneapolis. She testified before the House Aging Committee recently on her experience.

I also became very intimately involved with how prospective payment works with the elderly when last September my mother had a very severe heart attack. She lived in a rural area of Minnesota. The closest hospital is 20 miles away from her hometown . . . where she was taken after this heart attack. After she started recovering . . . 10 days afterwards, one of the three physicians at the hospital said to me, "Your mother is going to have to leave soon because her DRG is up." I don't think the doctor understood exactly what my position had been for the past year, and that I was very aware of the rules and regulations of prospective payment. So I took that opportunity to educate the physicians at the hospital plus some other staff members about prospective payment and what the DRG really meant.

But not every Medicare patient is lucky enough to have a DRG coordinator for a daughter.

Senator HEINZ tells the frightening example of "an 86-year-old constituent who was sent home with a large open wound after a gall bladder operation. The wound was 'grossly infected,' requiring daily dressing changes. The patient who is blind, diabetic, and has an ulcer, was told his 'DRG was exhausted' and he could not stay in the hospital another day."

MEDICARE PATIENTS' RIGHTS

Mr. President, many of the horror stories which the Aging Committees and our own offices have been told regarding the DRG system are the result of simple confusion regarding the way in which the system is meant to operate. But as you can see, they can have grave consequences.

It is important that we find a way to nip this problem in the bud before it becomes more widespread and it is essential that our efforts be directed toward health care personnel as well as Medicare beneficiaries.

We must make it clear that Medicare is not telling any patient that they are only entitled to a certain number of days of care. When a medicare beneficiary is appropriately admitted to a hospital, the patient is entitled to care until he or she no longer requires hospital-level care in the judgment of a physician.

For the physician, it is important to remember that they retain both a moral and legal obligation not to discharge a patient prematurely.

And for the patient, it is important to remember that there is a difference between no longer needing expensive hospital-level care and feeling fine. As lengths of stay drop, it is very likely that many patients will still require extra days of rest following their discharge from the hospital. And some patients will require continued care by nurses at a skilled nursing facility or home health care. But there is a difference between feeling poorly and premature discharge. And it is premature discharge that we must prevent.

THE PROXMIRE PROPOSAL

Mr. President, it is clear that this unintended confusion is needlessly adding to the anxiety that accompanies a hospital admission. It would be traumatic for a patient of any age, let alone the frail elderly. And we need to act quickly if we are to preclude any inadvertent repetition of these problems.

That is why I am introducing a resolution today which calls upon the Secretary of Health and Human Services to convene a working group to draft a Medicare patient bill of rights.

My proposal is based upon several basic principles:

Medicare beneficiaries are entitled to clear and accurate answers regarding their Medicare coverage when they need it most—when they are hospitalized.

Patients do not need a booklet or complex manifesto—they need a simple flyer in question-and-answer format that will answer their basic questions and will let them know where they can turn for additional help.

This flyer should be produced cooperatively by the Department of Health and Human Services, representatives of the major senior citizen groups, the hospital industry, and physicians participating in Medicare.

And this flyer should be produced as quickly as possible and distributed to all hospitals and physicians participating in the Medicare Program.

Mr. President, my resolution calls upon the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to use her good offices to convene a working group to draft this essential statement. It is only appropriate that the aging groups take the lead in identifying those questions most troubling to Medicare patients and, in conjunction with Department staff, the hospital industry and physicians draft clear and accurate answers.

The resolution urges the working group to complete action within 90 days; this is not a complex task and prompt distribution is essential.

The resolution also calls upon the hospital industry to make a voluntary commitment to reproduce and distribute this information to all Medicare patients entering their facilities, and their families or relatives, upon request. This is not a regulatory requirement but I cannot imagine a hospital administrator who would refuse in today's competitive environment. And by following this approach, we will not undermine those States and hospitals or senior citizen advocacy groups that may have already produced such a flyer for their area. The emphasis must be on accurate information, not who produced it.

Mr. President, this is a modest proposal but it will go a long way toward resolving the confusion of both Medicare beneficiaries and health care personnel. Our elderly deserve no less on Medicare's 20th birthday.

I ask unanimous consent that the New York Times article and the text of the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COST CONTROLS RAISE CONCERNS ON HEALTH CARE

(By Milt Freudenheim)

Actions taken by the Reagan Administration to curtail health costs have touched off a debate among health-care professionals and members of Congress over whether the quality of care is being endangered as an unwanted side effect.

More than 60 percent of the 7,800 physicians responding to a preliminary survey by the American Medical Association said that quality of care had already deteriorated or that they feared such a decline under what it sees as Government interference in doctors' decisions.

The General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress, also has relayed concerns about a decline in the quality of care in a preliminary report to the Senate Special Committee on Aging.

But some experts contend that quality of care is probably improving. They cite the increasing numbers of patients treated in offices and clinics and the sharp decline in the average hospital patient's stay. This is important, they say, if only because of reduced exposure to diseases caught in hospitals by hundreds of thousands of patients each year.

Both sides in the debate, however, agreed in telephone interviews last week that solid information was lacking to determine how the cost restraints are affecting quality of care. Members of Congress say they are making budgetary decisions without the information they need.

Last week the House Ways and Means Committee approved restrictions and cutbacks in Medicare designed to reduce projected spending by $10 billion over the next three years.

The Government will spend $71 billion this year for Medicare, covering most of the medical bills for 30 million elderly and disabled people, and $23 billion as the Federal share of state-run Medicaid programs for the needy.

The Administration says the new controls have helped to slow the rate of increase in the nation's health-care bill. "We have turned the corner in our fight against medical inflation," said Margaret M. Heckler, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, who is expected to announce the latest figures on health care spending this week.

The Administration has instituted several cost-control measures, the most far-reaching one a new system of paying for treatment of Medicare recipients. Under the system, which took effect last year, hospitals are paid a set amount for each specified ailment, regardless of the severity of the illness or other factors in treatment cost. Previously, the Government reimbursed hospitals and doctors for the costs of all services they considered necessary.

The General Accounting Office report on the new payment system "showed that patients are moved out of hospitals sicker and quicker," said Senator John Heinz, Republican of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Aging. "That means," he said, "that the burden of care necessarily shifts" to skilled nursing homes and home-care agencies.

But Government restrictions on Medicare and Medicaid patients for care at nursing homes and in the home have also been tightened. These restrictions, according to health professionals, often have discharged hospital patients in a "no-care zone."

"A CATCH-22 SITUATION"

The House Select Committee on Aging held hearings earlier this month that its chairman, Edward R. Roybal, Democrat of California, said "clearly demonstrated that as Medicare patients are discharged sooner and sicker, these same beneficiaries are having greater difficulty in getting the long-term services they need." Representative Roybal said it was "a Catch-22 situation."

A nursing home director told the committee that "overly restrictive eligibility criteria for Medicare" patients had forced her facility in Minneapolis to eliminate 180 beds.

The House committee heard testimony about people over 70 years of age who needed home-care treatment for severe ailments, including colon cancer, acute urinary infection and congestive heart failure. They were denied Medicare coverage "on the basis that the services could be performed by a nonmedical person," and in many cases they had to do without the treatment they needed after leaving the hospital. Possibly as a result, several died shortly after the Medicare denials, the committee was told.

In its preliminary report to the Senate committee, the General Accounting Office said its investigators had visited hospitals, nursing homes and home health agencies in six cities and also conferred with Administration officials and representatives of national health and medical associations. At each site, agency investigators were told that "patients are being discharged from hospitals after shorter lengths of stay and in a poorer state of health" than was the case before the new payment system took effect.

The Accounting Office is conducting more extensive research and is to report to Mr. Heinz's panel in the fall. "If we can't measure the appropriateness and quality of care after discharge from the hospital," Mr. Heinz said, "we have no handle on the central issue."

Carolyne K. Davis, a registered nurse and educator who is resigning in August as head of the Federal agency that runs medicare and Medicaid, said the Government was trying to monitor hospital care, by contracting with panels of health professionals known as peer review organizations. They "look at roughly one-third of all admissions to hospitals" to assess whether patients were treated properly.

U.S. PLANS NEW RESEARCH

She said the few complaints about inadequate care that her agency, the Federal Health Care Financing Administration, had received were hard to document. But she said, "I'm not saying it's not happening."

Peer review organizations are charged with seeing that costs are controlled and that quality of care is maintained. But they have been "mostly focusing on cost-effective utilization," said Bernard R. Tresnowski, president of the Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association. Blue Cross affiliates do Medicare's paperwork in many states.

Mr. Tresnowski said it would take three or four years to fully assess the new system's effects.

Mrs. Davis said her agency would soon be awarding research contracts to universities and other outside experts to study "quality of care indicators." One study will compare the treatment of patients before and after the payment system changed, following a suggestion by the Accounting Office.

Meanwhile, Senator Heinz said, "the major vehicle" for obtaining information about quality of care should be in Mrs. Davis's annual report, which was due last December and still has not been issued. He accused the Administration of supplying only "unsatisfactory answers" to repeated requests dating to April 1984 for information on quality.

But Mrs. Davis cautioned that the report would cover only the first year of the new system. An aide to Mrs. Davis said the report was awaiting approval in the Department of Health and Human Services, of which the health care financing agency is a part. The aide attributed the delay to difficulties in reporting for the first time on the complex new system.

"THEY ARE STONEWALLING US"

As a result, Congress may be making changes in the health care system before it is completely informed.

"We are about to make budgetary decisions," said Representative Henry A. Waxman, Democrat of California, chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee's Subcommittee on Health and the Environment. "I'm very worried about what impact those decisions will have on the quality of care. We don't have the evaluations of what is taking place."

Representative Fortney H. (Pete) Stark, Democrat of California, chairman of the Ways and Means Health Subcommittee, said, "Basically they are stonewalling us and trying to balance the budget on the Medicare program."

The American Medical Association does not regard its survery of doctors as definitive, and is working with the Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health to get more dependable data on the long-term effects of cost-control measures.

Dr. Alan R. Nelson, a Salt Lake City internist who is on the A.M.A. board, said the reported rate of readmissions to hospitals of patients who had been discharged, an important measure of quality of care, had not increased.

But he said smaller hospitals were feeling pressures to cut services because of the Federal cost restraints.

An American Nursing Association survey found that hospitals have been using a higher proportion of registered nurses, frequently dismissing licensed practical nurses, aides and orderlies. Dr. Nelson said highly trained nurses were thus "stretched" right to the limit," taking over duties that had been performed by others. "They may have the same number of patients," he said, "but they have much sicker patients" and more tasks to perform for them.

Some health experts see positive trends.

Andrew Webber, executive vice president of the American Medical Peer Review Association, representing the peer review panels, said quality of care may be improving, "because of incentives that drive hospitals to be more efficient, to eliminate unnecessary admissions, unnecessary tests and days in the hospital."

The average number of days in the hospital for Medicare patients dropped 20 percent, from 9.5 days in 1983, before the new payment system, to 7.5 last year.

In 1983, the nation's hospitals discharged 38,783,000 patients. Of these, an estimated 1,900,000 had acquired new diseases in the hospital and an estimated 96,000 died of causes attributed wholly or in part to these new diseases, according to calculation methods cited by Dr. William R. Jarvis of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

In 1984, when there were 1,500,000 fewer patients, an estimated 75,000 fewer patients became sick in the hospital and about 3,700 fewer patients died, according to the same methods.

John Rother, research and public policy director for the American Association of Retired Persons, which is concerned about Federal cost restraints' effect on quality of care, said, "Less hospitalization in most cases is a step forward."

S. CON. RES. 58

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), Whereas thirty million elderly and disabled Americans rely upon the Medicare program for essential health care;

Whereas the new prospective payment system for hospitals has resulted in unintended confusion among Medicare beneficiaries regarding their entitlement to hospitalization;

Whereas Medicare beneficiaries have not always had their questions regarding their rights and responsibilities clearly and accurately answered during their period of hospitalization;

Whereas the Congress believes that the Medicare program, senior citizen groups, the hospital industry, physicians and nurses should work together to resolve this problem cooperatively: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the Congress reaffirms its strong support for the Medicare program on this, its twentieth anniversay, and for the right of all Medicare beneficiaries to accurate and timely information regarding their Medicare benefits during a period of hospitalization;

(2) the Secretary of Health and Human Services should use her good offices to immediately convene a Working Group of represenatives from senior citizen groups, the hospital industry, physicians and nurses to draft within 90 days a simple statement of Medicare Patients' Rights and Responsibilities;

(3) the Secretary of Health and Human Services should transmit copies of the completed Statement to all Members of Congress, all hospitals and physicians participation in the Medicare program as well as provide copies upon request; and

(4) all hospitals participating in the Medicare program should voluntarily reproduce and distribute the completed Statement to all Medicare beneficiaries upon admission and to their families or guardians, upon request.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this concurrent resolution to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

S. 1533—NATIONAL SECURITY TRADE ACT OF 1985

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, today I am introducing my National Security Trade Act of 1985. This legislation improves the administration of a crucial part of our trade law, section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, as amended. This statute was designed to provide redress when imports of foreign products threaten to impair the national security of the United States. Unfortunately, the statute has not been given the vitality it deserves. This is alarming when we consider what is at stake. Without an effective statute to protect our domestic production capabilities, we run a serious risk of eroding our defense industrial base.

Since section 232 was enacted in 1962, 14 petitions alleging a threat to national security have been filed. This is not a landslide of cases, nor should it be. The language of the statute and the legislative history are quite clear in establishing what kinds of cases rise to the urgency of a threat to national security. The statute describes in detail the factors to be weighed in deciding whether or not there exists a national security question. But it is very clear from the legislation and the history behind it that Congress intended that the statute function to effectively prevent the destruction of American industries which are vital to the national security. Indeed, section "C" requires that the President "recognize the close relation of the economic welfare of the Nation to our national security, and * * * take into consideration the impact of foreign competition on the economic welfare of individual domestic industries."

The legislative history provides an unmistakable indication of congressional intent. When the predecessor statute was first considered in 1955, Congress extended the reach of prior law which dealt only with issues of "national defense" so that the act would encompass any industry important to "national security." The 1955 change was prompted by congressional concern over import injury to production of critical materials including petroleum, lead, and zinc. When the law was further refined in 1958, the Senate Finance Committee explained in its report:

> Language was further added directing attention and providing possible action whenever danger to our national security results from a weakening of segments of the economy through injury to any industry, whether vital to the direct defense or a part of the economy providing employment and sustenance to individuals or localities. The authority of the President is thereby broadened considerably, but the dangers inherent in an economy suffering from unemployment, declining government revenue, or loss of skills, and investment because of excessive imports of one or more commodities, must be recognized and avenues provided whereby they may be lessened.

In that same report, Congress noted its discontent with the ungenerous reading the statute had received:

> Considerable unfavorable comment has reached the committee about the administration of what was thought to be a strongly worded national security amendment in the 1955 extension. That section has been further strengthened so that sound results may be expected from it.

Despite a consistent effort to strengthen the statute, congressional intent remains frustrated by inaction on the part of successive administrations. For a confusing and sometimes elusive litany of reasons, presidents have not granted relief to any industries filing petitions under section 232, with the sole exception of petroleum products. Why? Have all other petitions been groundless?

Let me discuss one case with which I am familiar. The American ferroalloys industry is among the most modern in the world. Because of the value of the dollar and predatory, antimarket practices by foreign producers such as South Africa and the Soviet Union, 60 percent of the American market is now held by foreigners. The Office of Technology Assessment, in a recent report entitled "Strategic Materials: Technology To Reduce U.S. Import Vulnerability," summarized the importance of ferroalloy products in the first paragraph of that report by saying:

> These metals are essential in the production of high-temperature alloys, steel and stainless steel, industrial and automotive catalysts, electronics, and other applications that are critical to the U.S. economy and the national defense.

The report continues by describing the dangers of our overdependence on foreign ferroalloy production and the need to diversify supply sources.

Despite these facts, the petition filed by the ferroalloys industry in December 1981 was not acted upon by the President until May of 1984. In a perfunctory report, the administration denied any relief. Similarly, the machine tools industry—now devastated by imports—requested action in March of 1983. It has still no word from the administration. While the statute requires that the Commerce Department conclude its investigation within 1 year, it does not set a date for final action by the President. Of course, the authors of the statute could not have imagined that an allegation of a threat to the national security would be treated with disinterest by any President, particularly this one. But experience has shown that successive administrations are willing to wait in hopes that the problem goes away, rather than expose themselves to charges of protectionism.

Well, the problems have not gone away. But, in the case of ferroalloys and machine tools, those industries very nearly have. How is it that any

President or any administration would be willing to let a vital element of our defense production base disappear without action? Our trading partners in Europe and Japan would not be so complacent. Indeed, in the case of ferroalloys, the European and Japanese governments have in place national plans to assure the survival of critical ferroalloy production capacity.

But in the United States, I regret to say that we often refuse to see the fire until we feel the heat. Unless we are at war or otherwise face a conspicuous national crisis on the order of the gas shortage of a decade ago, our Government is often slow to recognize our defense needs. We seem doomed to repeat in every generation the mistakes that erode our defense production assets to the point that we are left scurrying to rebuild an industrial base that is the product of years of neglect. The administration's latest proposal to reduce the strategic stockpile and its inaction on the strategic petroleum reserve are recent examples of this trend.

The bill I introduce today will be an important step in reversing this trend. By revitalizing section 232, we will create a credible private right of action to assure that import-sensitive industries vital to our national security have a realistic chance for relief. What does the statute do?

First, since the political risk of being charged with protectionism has caused some Presidents to balk at issuing relief to injured industries, my bill moves the responsibility for this finding across the street from the White House to a place where it is more appropriate: the President's trade representative. Second, the bill enlarges the role of the Secretary of Defense to require a separate statement of concurrence or dissent from the chief cabinet officer charged with responsibility for national security determinations. Third, this legislation requires the trade representative to take action, or refuse to take action, within 90 days after the Commerce Department submits its report. Delays of a year or more following that finding of fact are unnecessary and create uncertainty. The industry and its workers—and the country as a whole—deserve to know whether or not the government will take action if there is an injury that threatens national security. Moreover, the bill requires that the Commerce Department's findings and the reasons for action or inaction by the trade representative be published in the Federal Register, to the extent that such information is not classified. This makes the process more open and visible, consistent with the importance of the national security issue involved.

Finally, my bill enumerates the available courses of action, should the trade representative determine that a threat to the national security does exist. This is intended to broaden, not limit, the existing options. The language here closely mirrors the broad statutory authority under section 301 of the Trade Act. But it also includes a procedure whereby the President can request, on an expedited basis, the authority to enter into negotiations with other countries to limit the offending imports. This is a novel step, and a significant one. If the trade representative finds an injury, he should be able, through the President, to request that Congress move decisively to provide the administration with appropriate authority to negotiate an end to the problem. Article XXI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade exempts national security issues from the terms of the GATT, but the President should be able to seek license from Congress to respond to an import crisis which threatens the national security through all appropriate means, including the right to negotiate away the problem.

Does this bill open a broad new avenue of trade relief? It does not. However, it does create a realistic avenue of relief when vital sectors of the economy are threatened by imports. It breathes life into a moribund statute and supports the original intent of Congress: that national security be understood to encompass economic security for critical sectors of our industrial base.

Which companies can expect relief under this legislation? Certainly industries such as the ferroalloy producers should have reason for hope. In addition, crucial high technology sectors, such as the semiconductor manufacturers should consider how this legislation applies to their provisions. Emerging technologies such as fiber optics and ceramics may be eligible. Often, foreign production in these new areas far exceeds domestic needs and the excess is targeted for the U.S. market so that nascent industries here are overwhelmed.

We need to get beyond the idea that national security is solely a function of how many troops and weapons we can field. The ability to sustain our defense production base and support our military in time of crisis is the measure of our national security. The economic well-being of vital industries must be as much of a national priority as the maintenance of a strong Armed Forces. I am convinced that this legislation will make an important contribution to safeguarding that production base.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD, and, of course, appropriately referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1533

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Security Trade Act".

SEC. 2. Section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 (19 U.S.C. 1862) is amended—

(1) by striking out "President" in subsections (b), (c), and (e) each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "United States Trade Representative",

(2) by striking out "Upon request" in subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) Upon request",

(3) by striking out ", Secretary of Commerce," in subsection (b),

(4) by striking out "Secretary of the Treasury" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary of Commerce",

(5) by inserting "and the Secretary of Defense concurs in such finding" after "threaten to impair the national security" in subsection (b),

(6) by adding at the end of subsection (b) the following new paragraphs:

"(2)(A) The report submitted by the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall include a written statement by the Secretary of Defense expressing concurrence or disagreement with the findings and recommendations of the Secretary contained in such report and the reasons for such concurrence or disagreement.

"(B) The report submitted by the Secretary under paragraph (1), or any portion of such report, may be classified only if public disclosure of such report, or of such portion of such report, would clearly be detrimental to the security of the United States.

"(C) Any portion of the report submitted under paragraph (1) which is not classified in accordance with subparagraph (B) shall be published in the Federal Register.

"(3) The United States Trade Representative shall take action, or refuse to take action, under paragraph (1) with respect to any report submitted under paragraph (1) by no later than the date that is 90 days after the date on which such report is submitted to the United States Trade Representative.

"(4)(A) The actions which the United States Trade Representative may take under paragraph (1) shall include, but are not limited to—

"(i) the issuance of orders to—

"(I) suspend, withdraw, or prevent the application of, or refrain from proclaiming, benefits provided under any trade agreement to any foreign country from which the imports that threaten to impair the national security are imported, or

"(II) impose duties, quotas, or other import restrictions on the products of, and fees or restrictions on the services of, such a foreign country for such time as the United States Trade Representative determines appropriate, or

"(ii) the submission of requests to the President that the President submit a draft of a bill to the Congress that gives authority to the United States Trade Representative to enter into negotiations with such a foreign country for the purpose of entering into an agreement which limits the importation into the United States of such imports that threaten to impair national security.

"(B) Any draft of a bill submitted by the President to the Congress upon request of the United States Trade Representative under subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be—

"(i) introduced in each House of the Congress (by request) by the majority leader of each House on the first day such House is in session after the day on which the President submits such draft,

"(ii) referred to the appropriate committees, and

"(iii) treated as an implementing bill for purposes of subsections (d), (e), (f), and (g) of section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2191).

"(5) The United States Trade Representative shall make a written statement of the reasons why the United States Trade Representative has decided to take action, or refused to take action, under this section with respect to each report submitted to the President under paragraph (1). Such statement shall be included in the report published under subsection (d).", and

(7) by striking out "proclamation, Executive order, or other Executive act" in subsection (e)(2)(B) and inserting in lieu thereof "order".

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, if I have any time remaining, I yield it to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KERRY.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR KERRY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. KERRY. Thank you very much, Mr. President. I thank the distinguished minority leader for whatever additional time I may have to proceed.

PREJUDICING JUSTICE

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, justice is an ideal that our Nation, among all nations, has come closest to making a reality in the actual workings of its system of justice. But today our system is threatened with a kind of corruption that is dangerous to not only our judiciary, but to our political system and the Constitution itself. The threat is the threat of prejudiced justice, justice which by definition cannot be justice because it is prejudged.

I am speaking of attempts to mold a judiciary to the narrow litmus tests of an ideology, Mr. President.

The American judicial system, from Marbury versus Madison and the days of John Marshall to the present, has been one of the natural wonders of our civilization.

Among all of our institutions, it is the one which has continued, generation after generation, to retain the universal respect of our people. Even when our judiciary has been embroiled in controversy, our judges accused of deciding cases based on their prejudices, rather than the law, we have never swerved from guaranteeing its independence—as the universal condemnation and rejection of President Roosevelt's court packing proposal demonstrated.

There have been many controversial decisions by the Supreme Court—from the Dred Scott case that helped bring about the Civil War, to the invalidation of New Deal legislation in the 1930's, to Brown versus Board of Education in the 1950's, the Miranda decision, Roe versus Wade, the Bakke case. The judiciary has survived with undiminished respect. Through two centuries, our Federal judiciary has been a model institution, one which has insisted on the highest standards of conduct by our public servants and officials, and which has served to improved piece by piece our legal institutions from what had been inherited from the British.

Today, I fear that this institution is threatened in a way that who have not seen before. The threat endangers the fundamental integrity of our judiciary and thus the quality of our entire system of justice. It risks undermining the respect that we have always maintained for our judiciary and even the balance of powers as set forth in the Constitution itself.

This threat is that of the appointment of a judiciary which is not independent, but narrowly ideological, through the systematic targeting of any judicial nominee who does not meet the rigid requirements of litmus tests.

We are seeing attempts to prejudice justice itself through the exclusion of any candidate for a judgeship in the Federal courts who does commit himself or herself to the narrow political beliefs of the right wing of one of our Nation's two political parties.

Mr. President, I am sorry to note that there are some colleagues in this Chamber who have been at the forefront of the effort to mold the judiciary. I do not think personally in my interpretation of the legislative role that those of us who are charged with the solemn duty of protecting the interests of all of our constituents—of whatever religion or political beliefs—should put themselves at the forefront of a movement to force judicial nominees to submit to ideological and religiously based litmus tests. While I do not deny the sincerity of a wish to have judges reflect one's own viewpoint, and the legitimacy in a President making choices with regard to a viewpoint, the current goal of a broader group is both dubious, and I think the methods carry with them a certain danger.

Mr. President, our judiciary is too important to permit anyone to compromise its independence or its integrity, yet that could be the result of these current efforts.

Mr. President, on September 7 of last year, a questionnaire was sent to Andrew Frey, Deputy Solicitor General of the United States and the Federal Government's chief advocate on criminal matters before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Mr. Frey had been nominated by President Reagan last July to serve on the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, not an unimportant position in the judiciary.

At the time of his nomination, he was universally regarded as a capable lawyer who had represented the Government of the United States vigorously and well.

In the questionnaire, Mr. Frey was asked a number of questions. They included whether a fetus is a person—whether he supported prayer in public schools, the equal rights amendment, the Supreme Court's decision on desegregation in Brown versus Board of Education—whether the granting of exclusive representation powers to unions by the National Labor Relations Act is unconstitutional. He asked Mr. Frey whether he supported the provisions of the Republican platform on firearms as adopted in Dallas in the summer of 1984. They asked him to cite what articles, books, and papers he had read regarding firearms "to show your knowledge of firearms issues that would contribute to your impartiality." These last questions were asked after it had been learned that Mr. Frey had been a member of the National Coalition to Ban Handguns.

This March, these two Senators were joined by 11 other Members of this body in writing the President to oppose Mr. Frey's appointment. They complained that Mr. Frey had been a "consistent supporter of organizations dedicated to the continuation to legalized abortion" and "a proponent of the judicial philosophy espoused in Roe versus Wade," as well as a "staunch advocate of gun control." They said that these positions disqualified him from being a judge—a judgment they made despite the fact that as a Government prosecutor he would be likely to bring a strong law and order orientation with him to the bench.

Similar actions were taken against four other individuals to be nominated for judgeships by the Reagan administration—Judith Whittaker, William Hellerstein, Stanley Sporkin, and Joseph Rodriguez, each of whom has outstanding credentials for a judgeship.

Take the case of Judith Whittaker. She is associate general counsel of Hallmark Cards, was first in her law school class, and rated "outstanding" by the chief judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. In 1981, the Reagan administration was ready to nominate her to that court. But she had publicly supported the equal rights amendment—a position which was part of the Republican platform as recently as 1980. After the rightwing complained to Lyn Nofziger in the White House, the White House eliminated her from consideration.

William Hellerstein was disqualified despite the advocacy of Senators MOYNIHAN and D'AMATO for his appointment to a Federal judgeship in New York when Roy Cohn, former counsel to Senator Joseph McCarthy objected to him on the ground that he was an "ultraliberal." Senator MOYNIHAN wrote White House Counsel Fielding after Hellerstein was removed from contention for the job. "There is a word for the ideological tests for the judiciary which are seemingly now in place in the White House and the Justice Department," wrote Senator MOYNIHAN. "The word is 'corruption.'"

Stanley Sporkin, former chief of the Enforcement Branch of the Securities and Exchange Commission and current general counsel of the CIA was nominated to a district judgeship last year at the request of CIA Director William Casey. But the rightwing opposed him, partly because of his record at the SEC enforcing our Nation's security laws. And to date, Mr. Sporkin's nomination has been held up, with no assurance that he will be confirmed.

Finally, Mr. Rodriguez was asked to answer questions similar to those put to Mr. Frey in a questionnaire—questions about whether a fetus is a person and whether the National Labor Relations Act is constitutional. In this questionnaire, Mr. Rodriguez was also asked to list every political contribution he ever made over $15 over the last 10 years.

Happily, during Mr. Rodriguez' confirmation hearing, the Judiciary Committee decided to debate the questionnaire itself, and the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator THURMOND, prohibited the further issuance of such questionnaires.

Mr. President, I think the chairman of the Judiciary Committee acted wisely in deciding to stop the issuance of these questionnaires to judicial nominees.

There is a doctrine in our legal system which is one of our core concepts of legal decisionmaking that says that no judge should issue an opinion on a subject unless the subject is presented within an actual case or controversy.

This doctrine reflects the idea that the judicial power can only be honestly exercised in the actual context of a case as it has developed through trial and advocacy, in the context of an actual dispute.

In the absence of a case or controversy before them, it is improper for judges to say just how they might decide an issue. The issue has not been framed yet. To predecide an issue is to demonstrate prejudice—which is exactly what the judiciary must not do.

The questionnaires sent to these judicial nominees were in effect asking them to declare their prejudices before their nomination. But if ever judicial nominee is forced to declare their prejudices, how can any judge maintain his or her independence?

What is important is the approach of a judge to the role of being a judge. How does the nominee view a judge's role in relationship to the body of cases behind him? How does a judge choose between different legal doctrines? In his or her view, what kinds of issues are justiciable? How does one choose, as an appellate judge, which cases should be heard?

The emphasis here must be on process as much as substance. It is the fairness of the process of our judicial system that has helped ensure its integrity through the centuries. It is the fairness of the process that the Supreme Court has slowly and systemically sought to improve year after year.

As Judge Abner Mikva, who served in this Congress for so many years, has wisely said, the litmus test of a good appointment and confirmation process is not ensuring the conformity of all judges to a narrow ideology—it is the concept of restraint.

As Judge Mikva has said:

There ought to be executive restraint—while the President is entitled to appoint people he likes and respects, he ought not exact or expect any pledge of fealty to the Chief.

There ought also to be Senatorial restraint. If I may quote Judge Mikva again:

The Senators may have understandable curiosity about the candidates views on the hot issues of the day. They can look, but they better not touch. . . . Satisfying a Senator's curiosity is not the way to enhance judicial independence.

And the nominees must exercise restraint.

Knowing which questions are properly posed to a nominee, and which are not, is perhaps the best litmus test of the qualities we want in a judge—the ability to judge and the exercise of good judgment.

Felix Frankfurter, Sandra Day O'Connor, Thurgood Marshall, and Joseph Rodriguez all refused to answer questions submitted to them by Senators. Each was confirmed, and properly so.

Mr. President, the attempts to remold the U.S. judiciary to a narrow, right-wing ideological cast has spawned the objections of many Americans, and an effort at the grass-roots level to stop it from happening.

One organization, People for the American Way, has taken out advertisements in newspapers across the United States seeking to stop this kind of destruction of judicial independence. I would like to quote from testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee by Anthony T. Podesta, president of People for the American Way, because I think he had some wise things to say about the problem.

First, it is morally and constitutionally wrong to subject judicial nominees to an inquisition on specific issues which may come before them as judges before they are confirmed. Pre-judgement subverts the American tradition of an independent judiciary that hears each case without prejudice or political partisanship. Judges are not opinion journalists or politicians. They must judge, by weighing evidence and applying precedents, in specific cases. Anyone who seeks to pin down a prospective judge on how he or she would decide a hypothetical case, in the absence of those specific contending parties which make each case unique, demonstrates a contempt for the judicial function and a desire to cheapen, politicize and undermine it.

Secondly, the litmus test that is being imposed extends beyond ideological issues to those which are theological and expressly prohibited by Article VI of the Constitution: A religious test for public office. The questionnaire referred to views on legislation that are "based on the belief that the conduct proscribed is morally wrong" when such beliefs are based on "a belief in the existence of a Supreme Being." Other questions referred to the personhood of the fetus. Different religious traditions have different viewpoints on the beginning of life. If we were to have uniform standards, it would be tantamount to saying that adherents of some religions would not be qualified to sit as federal judges.

Finally, as Mr. Podesta argues:

These tactics constitute a new Moral McCarthyism. The tactics perfected by Joe McCarthy, such as guilt by association, secret investigations and character assassinations, are used to damage nominees. Today's question is, "Are you or have you ever been a member of Planned Parenthood?" If so, you are disqualified from becoming a federal judge."

Mr. President, this is not the way the Senate should be carrying out its constitutional duty of "advise and consent" to Presidential nominees for judgeships. As a former prosecutor in the Massachusetts State courts and who worked closely with Federal prosecutors, and as an attorney who practiced in the Federal courts, I never was in the position of knowing that a judge had predecided my case. No judge that I practiced before had ever been forced to articulate narrow and formal positions on issues in public outside of his legal practice, such as "I believe in the death penalty," or "I'm in favor of prayer in schools," or "I agree that we should change our labor laws." Those are not the kind of statements a judge should put on the record in the absence of a case or controversy before him. Those are not the kind of statements Members of this body should be soliciting from judicial nominees.

In the day to day of politics we may sometimes overstep the bounds of good judgment in matters of policy. One of the most profound safeguards on Congress when it does so is the integrity of our Federal judges. If we fail to preserve that integrity, we have weakened our own ability to legislate and to govern, and gnawed away at what is simultaneously the strongest, and yet most frail, of the three great legs of our political system.

I ask unanimous consent that the questionnaire to Mr. Frey, the letter to the President regarding Mr. Frey from 13 Senators, the remarks by U.S. District Judge Abner J. Mikva, and an article in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch by Anthony Podesta of People for the American Way be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, September 7, 1984.

ANDREW L. FREY,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. FREY: As members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator East and I are interested in reviewing the qualifications of nominees to the Federal Bench and, therefore, find it prudent to inquire about the nominees' positions on various issues. In this vein, Senator East and I have enclosed two series of questions which we would like you to respond to within thirty days.

We look forward to your responses.

Sincerely,

JEREMIAH DENTON,
U.S. Senator.

QUESTIONS BY HON. JEREMIAH DENTON AND HON. JOHN P. EAST, TO ANDREW L. FREY, NOMINEE TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS

1. Do you believe that the Constitution guarantees a "right to privacy"? If so, please indicate the constitutional sources of that right, its precise nature and its limitations.

2. (a) In his dissent to the majority opinion of the Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), Justice Byron R. White made the following statement: "As an exercise of raw judicial power the court perhaps has authority to do what it does today, but in my view its judgment is an improvident and extravagant exercise of the power of judicial review which the Constitution extends to this court." Do you agree or disagree with Justice White's statement? Why or why not?

(b) In his dissent to the same Roe opinion, Justice William H. Rehnquist made the following statement: "The decision here to break the term of pregnancy into three distinct terms and to outline the permissible restrictions the state may impose upon each one partakes more of judicial legislation than it does of the determination of the intent of the drafters of the Fourteenth Amendment." Do you agree or disagree with this statement? Why or why not?

3. (a) In Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court determined that even the "viable" unborn human fetus is not a "person" as that term is used in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution. Do you believe that a "viable" fetus is a human being? If so, do you agree with the court's finding that the "viable" fetus is not a "person"? If so, on what basis can a valid constitutional distinction be drawn between a "human being" and a "person"?

(b) Is a child who is born alive after an abortion a "person" under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments? Does the "right to an abortion" that the court created with its Roe decision have any application after a child is born alive as the result of an abortion?

(c) Is a handicapped, or severely handicapped, child born alive a "person" under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution?

4. (a) Does the "right to privacy" from which the Roe v. Wade abortion privacy doctrine of the Supreme Court is derived have any application to any right of the parent of a handicapped newborn child to decide whether to provide him or her with life-saving medical care, and/or ordinary care in the form of nutritional sustenance and liquids (whether by natural or intravenous means)? If so, why? If not, why not?

(b) Do you believe that legislation ever can be held to be invalid because those who enacted it did so based on the belief that the conduct proscribed is morally wrong, or that an activity or institution encouraged or helped by the legislation is morally right? What difference, if any, does it make whether such moral beliefs are based on a belief in the existance of a Supreme Being?

5. In 1972 the Supreme Court in Furman v. Georgia 408 U.S. 238, struck down Federal and state death penalty statutes that allowed for unguided discretion by the trier of fact to determine whether or not the death penalty should be imposed. On February 22, 1984, through the able leadership of the distinguished Chairman of this Committee, the Senate passed by a vote of 63–32, S. 1765, a bill to establish constitutional procedures for the imposition of the sentence of death for certain federal offenses. What is your view on the death penalty?

6. The Department of Justice recently noted that the number of prisoners challenging the validity of their state convictions through Federal habeas corpus petitions rose nearly 700 percent from 1961 through 1982, but only a small number of inmates were successful in gaining any type of release. In an attempt to control the flow of frivolous collateral attacks on a criminal defendant's convictions, the Senate, again through the able leadership of Chairman Thurmond, passed on February 6, 1984, S. 1763, a bill to reform current habeas corpus procedures.

In your view, should any limits be placed on criminal defendant's ability to collaterally attack this conviction? If so, what are the limits?

7. On February 7, 1984, the Senate passed S. 1764, a bill which limits the use of the Exclusionary Rule by providing that evidence obtained in a search or seizure and which is otherwise admissible as evidence will not be excluded in a Federal trial if the search or seizure was undertaken in a reasonable, good faith belief that it conformed to the Fourth Amendment.

Do you believe that there should be any limits placed on the use of the Exclusionary Rule? If so, do you believe that S. 1764 or this type of limitation is appropriate?

8. The First Amendment forbids the establishment of a State religion. The First Amendment also prohibits interference with the free exercise of religion. This second prohibition apparently is often overlooked. Please share with the Committee your views on the free exercise clause as it relates to prayer in public schools.

9. Is it unconsitutional for state or local governments to give tuition vouchers to parents of all children who attend nonpublic schools? Does it make any difference whether most of these children attend religious schools, provided that the law makes no distinction between religious and nonreligious schools?

10. The Second Amendment to the Constitution states that "a well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." In light of that constitutuional prohibition, to what extent, if any, do you feel that Congress could curtail the right of the people to keep and bear weapons that are of value to common defence?

11. Would you give your present personal position with regards to the Equal Rights Amendment?

12. (a) What did the Supreme Court holds in Regents of the University of California v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 256 (1978)? Do you believe that this holding was correct? Why or why not?

(b) In his dissent to the majority opinion on the Supreme Court in Fullilove v. Klutznick, 448 U.S. 448, S37–S48, (1980), Justice John Paul Stevens noted that the compelling government interest of curing the effects of past racial discrimination will justify a classbased infringement of the legitimate interests and expectations of innocent third parties only to the extent necessary to restore proven discriminatees to the position they would have occupied in the absence of the discrimination. What role should affirmative action type remedies take in dealing with individuals who have not been the victims of discriminatory practices?

13. (a) Do you believe that Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954), was correctly decided? What disagreements, if any, do you have with the language or reasoning of the Court's decision in that case?

(b) Do you believe that Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education, 402 U.S. 1 (1971), was decided correctly? If so, do you believe that there is a conflict or tension between the constitutional right to color-blind treatment that was announced in Brown and the right (or, if it makes a difference, the remedy) of race-conscious school assignment that was announced in Swann? If so, how do you reconcile this tension or conflict?

14. (a) What limitations, if any, do you believe there are on the constitutional power of Congress to enact exceptions to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and regulations of this jurisdiction?

(b) What are the sources of these limitations?

15. Section 9(a) of the National Labor Relations Act states:

Representatives designated or selected for the purposes of collective bargaining by the majority of the employees in a union appropriate for such purposes, shall be the exclusive representatives of all the employees in such a unit for the purposes of collective bargaining in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment or other conditions of employment . . .

Keeping in mind that unions are private associations rather than governments, do you think that the granting of exclusive representation powers to unions by the National Labor Relations Act is unconsitutional?

16. Do you concur with the supreme Court's decisions in Abood v. Detroit Board of Education and Ellis/Fails that mandatory service fees collected from non-union members under the jurisdiction of an exclusive bargaining agent can only be used to pay direct collective bargaining and grievance administration costs?

17. In United States v. Enmons, the Supreme Court affirmed a District Court ruling that the Hobbs Act did not prohibit the use of violence in obtaining legitimate union objectives. What is your analysis of the Enmons decision?

QUESTIONS BY THE HONORABLE JEREMIAH DENTON AND HONORABLE JOHN P. EAST FOR THE NOMINATION HEARING OF ANDREW L. FREY

(1) Please explain your view of whether the Bill of Rights, or rights in general, protect citizens or governments?

What do you think the Founding Fathers thought they were doing when they wrote the Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution?

What do you think the Second Amendment means? Why?

(2) Do you believe the use of force for protection should be legal?

If legal, should one be able to own the means for protection? Incorporate in your response the restrictions on the use of shotguns and rifles in the District of Columbia.

Note, a survey commissioned by an anti-handgun organization has found that 9% of handgun-owning households report having used a handgun for protection from a criminal within the past five years, which works out to at least 1.7 million adults. Comment on the results of this study.

(3) Mr. Frey, given your membership in an organization which advocates banning the possession of handguns (The National Coalition to Ban Handguns, Inc.) and your statements that you favor regulations to control handgun ownership, would you disqualify yourself, because of bias, in any case involving the District of Columbia firearms statutes should you be confirmed?

If not, please explain.

(4) As a Republican nominee do you support the provisions of the Republican Platform on firearms as recently adopted in Dallas?

If not, why not?

(5) Please elaborate on your views on (a) mandatory penalties for the use of a firearm in the commission of a crime, approved by the voters in the District of Columbia in 1982, (b) mandatory penalties for possession/transportation of firearms.

(6) In order to take away a person's firearms after dismissal/acquittal, it was necessary to overturn many years of precedent. Do you believe that persons who have had their firearms confiscated and then the charges dropped or they are acquitted, should have their firearms returned?

If not, why not?

What are your views on the confiscation of firearms absent specific legislation allowing such action?

(7) Many have questioned your membership and donations to gun control groups. Some assume you therefore would have a predisposition against firearms cases that would come before you.

A judge should hear courteously, answer wisely, consider soberly and judge impartially.

What specific readings of law review articles, books, papers and other documents can you cite to show your knowledge of firearms issues that would contribute to your impartiality?

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, March 6, 1985.

Hon. RONALD W. REAGAN,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: For a number of reasons, we oppose the nomination of Andrew L. Frey to be a judge on the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. We are persuaded that Mr. Frey's own political and judicial philosophy is very much at odds with your own philosophy and the public positions you have taken.

Mr. Frey has, for example, been a consistent supporter of organizations dedicated to the continuation of legalized abortion and is a proponent of the judicial philosophy espoused in Roe v. Wade. Mr. Frey has also been a staunch advocate of gun control, as evidenced by his support for the National Coalition to Ban Handguns.

Mr. President, the platform that we adopted in Dallas last summer—your platform—clearly expressed positions opposite to Mr. Frey's conduct on these issues. There could well be other points where he will be at significant cross-purposes to the philosophy that we mutually share.

We respectfully request that you personally look into Mr. Frey's background and that you reconsider sending his nomination back to the Senate. There are few members of this body who can claim the degree of support for your initiatives and programs as can the undersigned; we will, however, have no choice but to oppose Andrew L. Frey should his nomination come before us.

As always, Mr. President, we are available to discuss this matter with you at your convenience.

Very respectfully,

Steve Symms, Jeremiah Denton, Chuck Grassley, Jesse Helms, Jim McClure, John P. East, Paula Hawkins, Don Nickles, Paul Trible, Malcolm Wallop, Jim Abdnor, Phil Gramm, Bob Kasten.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, March 14, 1985.

Hon. RONALD W. REAGAN,
The White House
Washington, DC

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am concerned regarding the nomination of Mr. Andrew L. Frey for a judgeship on the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Judging from the gentleman's resume and from newspaper reports on his career, as well as other sources, it is clear that Mr. Frey's judicial and political viewpoints are seriously at odds with your own.

I respectfully request that you reconsider sending Mr. Frey's nomination back to the Senate. Mr. Frey, for example, is a supporter of abortion and Roe v Wade. Mr. Frey has supported the National Abortion Rights Action League, the National Coalition to Ban Handguns, Planned Parenthood, SEICUS, and the Population Institute.

Let me thank you for your review of this situation. Mr. Frey's record implies that he would not be an advocate of the solid conservative values which you and I share.

With warmest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

GORDON J. HUMPHREY,
U.S. Senator.

REMARKS BY U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGE ABNER J. MIKVA TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BAR ASSOCIATION

JUDGE-PICKING

At the Constitutional Convention, legend has it that Ben Franklin suggested that Supreme Court nominations be made by lawyers. Franklin thought that lawyers would want to eliminate their strongest competitors, and so would nominate only the ablest lawyers. If a keen intellect were the only quality sought in judges, Franklin's suggestion may have had some merit. But the Convention opted for a judicial selection procedure that incorporates more than simply judgments of ability, giving the power to the President, to be exercised "by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate."

I confess that even after my years in the Congress, I overlooked the significance and the complexities of that nomination process. I remember the day, over five years ago, that I was called by the Attorney General to tell me that President Carter was going to nominate me for one of the new judgeships on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. I remember wondering what the President's timetable was, and how long it would be before I moved to my new offices down the street.

What naivete! At the time I thought the only cause for delay would be the period of time required for the ABA and the FBI to review my credentials and past. I saw no reason for worry—after all, I had spent 25 years in the fishbowl we call electoral politics. I had no ghosts in my closet that campaign opponents had not previously exposed. My financial affairs were uncomplicated, current and public—I was broke, but out of debt. Everything I had said and done was in the unrelenting limelight of a public forum—first as a member of the Illinois State Legislature, and then, for five terms, as a Member of the United States Congress.

The nomination process began to operate as I had envisioned. From time to time, I would hear from lawyers, former classmates, and neighbors that the FBI had spoken to them about me. I was teased by my friends in the Senate about how they would finally give me a plurality that was larger than my election pluralities of the last few years. I was asked to fill out some lengthy questionnaires for the FBI and for the American Bar Association. None of the questions were embarrassing. On the contrary, I enjoyed the opportunity to brag about past experiences that I though qualified me for my new job—the time I had spent practicing law before I came to Congress, my law clerk days to Supreme Court Justice Sherman Minton, my oral advocacy days before the Supreme Courts of the United States and of Illinois, as well as various Courts of Appeals and District Courts. To complete my feeling good symphony, I was a member of the fraternity-sorority we call the Congress of the United States—the Congress always did well by its own. All in all, I was feeling pretty good.

The excitement began to crumble when a friend advised me that the National Rifle Association was considering opposing my appointment. My first reaction was puzzlement—not that the NRA and I had not previously clashed. We had on many occasions. But I had not made gun control a high priority of mine for several years, even though I had continued to sponsor a bill banning the sale and distribution of handguns. In any event, I could not understand why the NRA would rather see me stay in Congress where I could raise their hackles than go to the court where I would have no influence or voice about the policy issues of gun control. When I thought hard about the role of judges, the NRA's opposition seemed to pose little threat.

Unfortunately, I was wrong. Regardless of what I had been taught and what I believed about the role of judges in deciding issues of social policy, the NRA began its views. In May of 1979, the executive director of the NRA's lobbying arm announced I was "unfit for judgeship," that my views were "those of a Fascist," and my attitudes those of a "tin-pot dictator." It began to appear that he was not really for me. While I continued to receive support from the media and from friends on the Hill, the NRA was producing results. One Senator who earlier had volunteered his support, embarassedly explained that he had not been aware of the NRA's opposition, and told me there was no way he could support me. The senator candidly said, "You have to understand the folks back home. They would take after me with no mercy if I supported someone whom the NRA opposed." The same scenario unfolded in Senate office after office. I became a household word in little towns in Mississippi and Montana and Idaho.

The story came out all right for me. The Senate gave me an enthusiastic sendoff, by a vote of 58 to 31—I was confirmed. Not quite the overwhelming plurality I had anticipated—but better than any constituents had given me in Congress. The NRA reportedly spent a million dollars in their effort to prevent my confirmation. But the memories of that battle, and the oddity of single issue opposition to a candidate for a nonelectoral role has remained close. Unfortunately, the process is neither new nor diminished. Indeed, the current political challenges to important constitutional cases—abortion, busing, prayer in the schools—have caused the selection of judges to become a hot political issue. In the last campaign the Democratic candidate tried to make Supreme Court selections a campaign issue. While it didn't fly, it did focus some attention on the institution—and how it gets its judges. In 1980, the Republican party included in their platform a plank pledging to "work for the appointment of judges at all levels of the judiciary who respect traditional family values and the sanctity of innocent human life."

This new, or revived attention is beginning to make a difference. Take, for example, Joseph Rodriguez, New Jersey's Public Advocate. Following his nomination, he was subjected to a test of his "liberal" philosophies. Some members of the Senate Judiciary Committee sent an eight page questionnaire to Rodriguez, asking him to spell out his opinions on the Equal Rights Amendment, abortion, the death penalty and school prayer. The questions did not address Rodriguez's general philosophy, but rather sought answers that would indicate the way Rodriguez would decide cases that raised certain issues. For example, question 9 asked: "Is it unconstitutional for state or local governments to give tuition vouchers to parents of all children who attend nonpublic schools? Does it make any difference whether most of these children attend religious school, provided that the law makes no distinction between religious and nonreligious schools?"

Another question asked: "Keeping in mind that unions are private associations rather than governments, do you think that the granting of exclusive representation powers to unions by the National Labor Relations Act is unconstitutional?"

The Senators also sought a list of all political contributions Rodriguez had ever made as well as a list of all organizations to which Rodriguez had ever belonged. Rodriguez deftly filled out the questionnaire without answering a single question. Surprisingly, the Senators backed off, possibly sensing that the questionnaire raised more serious questions about judicial independence than about Mr. Rodriguez's qualifications. Rodriguez was eventually confirmed.

One local nominee was blocked, however, even though his professional credentials were impeccable, and even though he had performed brilliantly in a public office, building a deserved reputation as a hardliner in the criminal justice field—because he had contributed to gun control organizations and financially supported pro-choice candidates for public office. Another potential judicial nominee was shot down early, even though both of his states' Senators supported him, apparently because he had served too well as a public defender.

Is this substantive screening by the Senate and by other political forces a new phenomenon? Only since 1795. George Washington was unable to obtain the confirmation of one of his nominees to the Supreme Court for interesting reasons. Washington nominated former Justice John Rutledge for Chief Justice of the United States. Rutledge had left the Court before the seat of the Chief Justice became open. Washington nominated Rutledge to the Chief Justice position, and assumed that his nomination of the man who was an author of the Constitution as well as a former Supreme Court justice would meet no resistance. The Great Communicator of his time had enjoyed remarkably successful relations with the Congress, and had every reason to assume that Rutledge would be the new Chief Justice.

Unfortunately, a few weeks after his nomination, Rutledge attacked the Jay Treaty, which was designed by Washington to ease tensions with Great Britain. To the Federalists, who strongly supported the treaty, Rutledge's opposition called into question his views on foreign policy—whatever that had to do with his capacity to serve as Chief Justice of the United States. After a bitter debate, the Senate refused to confirm Rutledge.

The desire to install likeminded judges also transcends party and political labels. During the confirmation hearings of Justice John Paul Stevens, Senator Kennedy pressed Stevens for his views on numerous topics. At one point he asked: "As a private citizen, what are your views on the Equal Rights Amendment?" Contrast this to question 11 of the questionnaire sent to Rodriquez which asked: "Would you give your present personal opinion with regards to the Equal Rights Amendment?"

Like the Equal Rights Amendment, the question of race has been raised at confirmation hearings by people on both ends of the political spectrum. Harold Carswell's name did not make it through the Senate once his 1948 campaign pledges to support white supremacy surfaced. Taking a different view of race relations, some Southern Senators delayed the confirmation of Justice Potter Stewart for four months in 1959 after he admitted to the Judiciary Committee that he had no intention of voting to overturn Brown v. Board of Education.

Is this a politicization of the Court system? Is it bad? Is it new, or getting worse? Is it avoidable? The answers are as complicated as the interplay between the three branches of government, and I cannot give you any precise answers. Let me give you instead some highly obiter dicta.

First of all, the questions raise another question. What kind of a judiciary do we want? The major pronouncements of our federal courts—the ones that most directly affect the social and economic life of the nation—those decisions unavoidably have political impact. Over 100 years ago, Alexis de Tocqueville commented that "there is hardly a political question in the United States which does not sooner or later turn into a judicial one." We expect judges to be impartial, but our courts are not isolated from the political domain.

The Washington Post once ran an editorial deploring the view that a person with political beliefs is unfit to serve as a judge. The Post suggested that if we really want to avoid judges who have been exposed to politics, we should breed a class of judges. These judges would be selected in early childhood, trained to make decisions as Little League Umpires, and would be shielded from the pressing questions of our times. The editorial pointed out that this system might well improve the quality of baseball umpires but it would not do much for the judiciary.

We do not want judges who are completely devoid of political content, for that means they have spent no time in the mainstream of American life and have no connection with the hearts and minds of the American people. Being detached from day-to-day partisan affairs is one thing; wholly divorced from the world of real people is something else. Judges need to know something about legal theory, but they also need to know something about the real world. Justice Rehnquist recognized this when he said: "Proof that a Justice's mind at the time he joined the Court was a complete tabula rasa in the area of constitutional adjudication would be evidence of lack of qualification, not lack of bias."

If we acknowledge that politics and the judiciary have some enduring connection, why not use litmus tests—like abortion, prayer in the schools, the Equal Rights Amendment—to determine the political leanings of potential judges? Many people argue that litmus tests are simply a new way of doing what Presidents and Senators have always done. The problem with litmus tests is that they aim at much more than just an assessment of political views or preferences.

A President may certainly nominate judges who share his world view. What a President may not do is use the nomination process as a means to amend the Constitution or recast important constitutional precedents. A President may want judges who start out sharing his values. What he ought not seek is judges who forget or are willing to forego the anti-majoritorian purpose of the Bill of Rights. During the 1980 Presidential campaign, then-candidate Reagan said: "Time and again in recent years, we have seen the Supreme Court override public opinion concerning school prayer, forced busing, the treatment of criminals. . . . There must be new justices on the Court, women and men who respect and reflect the values and morals of the American majority. I pledge to make such appointments."

President Reagan's goals in appointing Justices are very similar to those of President Roosevelt when the Supreme Court began to strike down his New Deal Legislation:

[If the Supreme Court strikes down the Wagner Act, the Social Security Act, and other pieces of New Deal legislation], Congress can enlarge the Supreme Court, increasing the number of justices from nine to twelve or fifteen.

While the specific court packing plan FDR proposed died aborning, FDR did get to appoint Justices who shared his New Deal views, including Hugo Black. Justice Black met opposition from all quarters when he was nominated, due to his advocacy of New Deal legislation while a Senator and his alleged membership of the Ku Klux Klan as a young lawyer in Alabama. Upon Black's confirmation, former President Hoover remarked, "The Court is one-ninth packed." The media was equally critical of Black: the Chicago Tribune dubbed his nomination "the worst [the President] could find," while the New York Herald Tribune called it "a nomination as menacing as it is unfit." We all know that Justice Black went on a long and distinguished career of confounding his critics. The line we are concerned about in judicial selection is between a judge who constantly remembers who appointed him and a judge who remembers that popular decisions can be made easily by the popular branches of government, but that his function is to protect minority rights from majority passions. By minorities I mean not only racial, religious and political groupings—I include every defendant in every criminal case—by definition a minority is one who the public-square judges of the French Revolution would guillotine first and try later. Think of any important criminal law precedent where a constitutional right was upheld. Every one of these cases would have been decided differently if the decision had been by referendum—Miranda, Monte Durham, Mapp v. Ohio, Escobedo, Gideon.

And that is why the Senate, as the reflecter of popular will, must also be circumscribed in its inquiries. What the Senate ought not do is determine, through questioning, a nominee's views on emerging constitutional doctrine, on issues likely to face courts in the near future. Why? Because these questions are really a signal to a nominee that he will become a judge only if he promises to be obsequious, to be a yes man to the powers that be. During Justice Thurgood Marshall's confirmation hearings, he was asked by Senator McClellan whether society must always sacrifice its security and safety in order to provide every conceivable right to suspects in criminal cases. Marshall answered that he did not believe that a society should give up its security. The question may have sounded innocent, but Senator McClellan's rejoinder makes clear that it was intended as a sharp warning to Marshall to cut back on the rights of the accused; Senator McClellan told Marshall: "I hope that [belief] will have some influence with you, as you weigh some of these cases. It is one man's decision that often determines what the Constitution is."

The Constitution clearly does not permit the judiciary to be a subdivision of the Senate, nor judges to serve as inferior officers to the President. Just as the President must not seek to impact the independent and frequently unpopular judgments of the judges, the Senate also cannot use its confirmation power to create judicial I.O.U.'s. Justice Rehnquist has said that: "For [a nominee] to express any but the most general observation about the law would suggest that, in order to obtain favorable consideration of his nomination, he deliberately was announcing in advance, without benefit of judicial oath, briefs, or argument, how he would decide a particular question that might come before him as a judge."

I am also disturbed by another message of these judicial I.O.U.'s. I think that when we ask prospective judges their views on an issue likely to arise in the future, we are locking those judges into a position. Today's litmus tests tell nominees that when the question is abortion, the answer is no, and when the question is prayer, the answer is yes. Do we want judges who have decided the outcome of a case even before looking at its facts? Do we want judges who disregard statutes and regulations to reach a particular result? The constitutional prohibition on advisory opinions tells us that justice is achieved by well-informed, concrete decisions, rather than by mere hypothetical speculation.

There is still another defect to the litmus test approach to picking and confirming judges. The test is always about a single ailment—a single cause. It tells you little about the rest of the corpus. What must be avoided is the selection of a nominee based solely on how he or she would decide a particular issue. Judges are appointed for life. No one can really predict what issues will be important in ten or twenty years. Andrew Jackson wanted to appoint a justice who would oppose the Bank of the United States. He found him in Roger Taney. Twenty years after President Jackson left office, Chief Justice Taney was still around to author the Dred Scott opinion. President Jackson's appointee almost succeeded in throwing out the Union with the Bank.

I would like to raise one last difficulty with the over-involvement of popular concerns and institutions in judicial selection. We can agree that Judges and the appointment process are not without political content, but to be effective, courts must operate outside of the political sphere. There is a tendency, I think to become so mesmerized by the awesome trappings of the judiciary and its historical power that we overlook just how fragile the courts' power is. The legislature controls the money, the executive the army; all the judiciary has is its own moral authority. The Supreme Court's mandates are obeyed not because of police in the streets but because of public perceptions of the Court's legitimacy. When the Court is perceived as an apolitical, wise and impartial tribunal, the American people have evinced a willingness to abide by its decisions. But if the Court is viewed as simply a Congress in black robes, the Court's ability to perform its constitutional function is threatened. Former ABA President William Reece Smith, Jr. said: "Attempts to politicize the judiciary lend legitimacy to the notion that federal judges make the law solely according to their own private viewpoints and prejudices . . . That implication . . . confounds the public's perception of the legal system and encourages disrespect of the vital role that judges play in our government."

What should a wise President and a forebearing Senate do in the best of worlds? I believe close examination should be made of a potential jurist. As Senator Ervin once remarked about nomination hearings: "[If the Senate] ought not to be permitted to find out what [a nominee's] attitude is toward the Constitution, or what his philosophy is, [then] I don't see why the Constitution was so foolish as to suggest that the nominee for the Supreme Court ought to be confirmed by the Senate."

It is perfectly fair for presidents and senators to seek judges who share their view of the role of government in American life, who in the long run will do what presidents and senators believe is best. But to assess this compatability, it is not merely unnecessary, it is patently offensive, to ask of a potential judge what he or she will decide in a future case. Nominees usually have made a public record, whether in past decisions, in writings, or in speeches. I do not believe there is an inherent impropriety in a nominee appearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee, although until fairly recently, nominees, including my former boss, Justice Minton, regularly declined the invitation. Some limits on a nominee's questioning by the Committee are required. Perhaps Felix Frankfurther, in refusing to answer certain questions in his confirmation hearings, said it best: "My attitude and outlook on relevant matters have been fully expressed over a period of years and are easily accessible. I should think it is not only bad taste, but inconsistent with the duties of the office for which I have been nominated for me to attempt to supplement my past record with present declarations."

Justice O'Connor, at her 1981 confirmation hearings, was asked a litany of abortion-related questions. Numerous Senators attempted to extract her views on abortion in general and the Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade in particular. Justice O'Connor consistently refused to respond to these inquiries, believing them to be beyond the scope of permissible questioning at a confirmation hearing. Justice O'Connor's approach seems to have been fair and correct: the Court's integrity remained intact, and she was confirmed by a vote of 99 to 0.

The litmus test, then, of a good appointment and confirmation procedure is restraint. There ought to be executive restraint—while the President is entitled to appoint people he likes and respects, he ought not exact or expect any pledge of fealty to the Chief. Some of the best of Justices and judges have confounded their appointees, whether we talk of John Marshall or Earl Warren, or William Brennan. There ought to be Senatorial Restraint. The Senators may have understandable curiosity about the candidates views on the hot issues of the day. They can look but they better not touch. As Senator Eastland said, "If the nominee thinks that the question is improper, he can decline to answer. And that when he declines his position will be respected." Satisfying a Senator's curiosity is not the way to enhance judicial independence.

And the nominees themselves must exercise restraint. Knowing which questions are properly posed to a nominee, and which are not, is perhaps the best litmus test of the qualities we want in a judge—the ability to judge and the exercise of good judgment. What a nominee will decide in a particular case tells us nothing about the nominee's judgment. But the refusal to respond to improper questions, invoking, as Senator Ervin once said, the "judicial fifth amendment," tells us that this nominee possesses the independence and courage we ought to want in our judges. And history tells us that when Senators display restraint and respect, and when nominees display good judgment, confirmation will not be denied. Felix Frankfurter, Sandra Day O'Connor, Thurgood Marshall, and Joseph Rodriquez all refused to answer certain questions; all were confirmed.

Mostly, we come back to the questions of the beginning. Do we really want a "popular" judiciary? Do we want a judiciary that has no strong views on anything, except the importance of being confirmed? I think not. What we want are women and men with integrity, with wisdom, with good judgment, and with the strength to take unpopular positions. I think that nominees who would answer the current breed of litmus tests lack these necessary qualities. Perhaps we can all take a lesson from Judge Bork of the D.C. Circuit. In a recent interview published in the District Lawyer, he was asked whether he could identify any Supreme Court doctrines that he regards as particularly worthy of reconsideration in the 1980's. His response? "Yes I can, but I won't." I think Abraham Lincoln would have liked Judge Bork, and not just because they both spent their formative years in Illinois. When Lincoln sought to appoint a Justice, he wanted a person with certain views, but he knew better than to ask. Instead, Lincoln said: "We cannot ask a man what he will do, and if we should, and he should answer us, we should despise him for it."

THE THEO-POLITICS OF THE RIGHT

(By Anthony T. Podesta)

During the 1984 campaign, the Democrats thought they had at least one sure-fire issue: Do you want Ronald Reagan appointing up to five new Supreme Court justices? But that issue was ineffective because, as political commentator mark Shields pointed out, the voters remembered that Reagan had already selected one Supreme Court Justice—Sandra Day O'Connor. And she is a capable jurist, not an ideological automation.

Now, the 1984 campaign is history, and the Reagan administration and some of its staunchest Senate allies have adopted a new process for selecting federal judges: an ideological inquisition that will not produce another Sandra Day O'Connor. In recent weeks, judicial appointments have been entangled in bizarre inquests into the nominees' views of political, social and even religious issues. President Reagan has withdrawn the nomination of Andrew Frey for the District of Columbia Court of Appeals and refused to support the nomination of William Hellerstein for the Federal District Court in New York.

Under ordinary circumstances, both nominations would have received White House support. Frey has already served the Reagan administration as deputy solicitor general. However, he is a member of Planned Parenthood and the National Coalition to Ban Handguns, and that was enough to arouse the ire of 13 conservative Republican senators—and make the president reverse himself.

As for Hellerstein, he has the support of New York's conservative Republican senator, Alfonse D'Amato. However, Hellerstein is an official of the Legal Aid Society, and presumably that's why he was "not consistent with what the (Federal Judicial Selection) Committee was looking for," in the words of White House Counsel Fred Fielding.

Fielding denied that the administration is imposing an ideological "litmus test." But Attorney General Meese has said he is seeking appointment of judges who believe in "the sanctity of human life." Meanwhile, "ideological litmus test" scarcely describes the inquisition to which another judicial nominee has been subjected. Joseph Rodriguez was slapped with an eight-page questionnaire more appropriate to weeding out security risks from Pentagon jobs than screening a nominee for a judgeship in New Jersey.

In a line of questioning uncomfortably reminicent of the McCarthy Era, Sens. Jeremiah Denton, R.-Ala., John East, R-N.C., and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, demanded that Rodriguez name every organization he belongs to and list every political contribution of $15 or more during the past 10 years. In order to receive his ideological security clearance, Rodriguez was also asked whether he agreed that a viable fetus is a "person," affirmative action should be cut back and the National Labor Relations Act is unconstitutional.

This inquisition was foreshadowed by the 1984 Republican Platform, which declared: "We reaffirm our support for the appointment of judges at all levels of the judiciary who respect traditional family values and the sanctity of innocent human life."

To most Americans, this platform language simply opposes abortion, but the people who wrote it know what they meant. To the religio-political extremists who exerted unprecedented influence at the 1984 Republican Convention, "traditional values" is a code word for restoring an idealized vision of a long-gone America before women's rights, before desegregation, before labor unions and before the full acceptance of religious pluralism.

That is why the Denton/East/Hatch questionnaire reads like a religious inquisition, not just a political one. Rodriguez is asked to endorse the novel doctrine that the First Amendment simply forbids the establishment of a state religion and presumably tolerates other infringements upon the separation of church and state. And, in a particularly convoluted line of questioning, Rodriguez is asked his views on legislation that is "based on the belief that the conduct proscribed is morally wrong" when "such moral beliefs are based on a belief in the existence of a Supreme Being."

As Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan has observed, the imposition of these ideological tests upon federal judges is a form of "corruption." When these inquisitions cover theological, as well as ideological, issues, they verge upon something specifically prohibited by Article VI of the Constitution: a religious test for public office. At the very least, these inquests subvert the American tradition of an independent judiciary that hears each case without prejudice or political partisanship.

That is why Sandra Day O'Connor objected to ideological interrogation during her confirmation hearings, explaining: "I do not believe that as a nominee I can tell you how I might vote on a particular issue which may come before the court . . . To do so would mean that I have prejudged the matter or have morally committed myself to a certain position."

At a time when five of the nine Supreme Court Justices are over 75 and one-seventh of all federal judgeships are vacant, the Reagan administration and its senatorial allies should listen to the wisdom of Justice O'Connor—and stop the theo-political inquisitions that would have barred her from the nation's highest court.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I yield back any time remaining and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. KASSEBAUM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

CYPRUS

Mr. TRIBLE. Madam President, in January of this year, I and my colleagues looked with hope to the United Nations sponsored summit talks between Cypriot President Kyprianou and Mr. Rauf Denktash as the first real indication that peace in Cyrpus might be at hand. While that first round of talks ended inconclusively, it was useful in establishing the framework for the peaceful resolution of this crisis.

During committee and floor deliberations on the fiscal year 1986 foreign assistance bill, we concluded that we should not restrict aid to Turkey because of the good faith exhibited during the summit process. However, while we rewarded this progress toward peace, we also made it clear that we would not hesitate to take immediate action if this good faith did not continue. It was the clear intent of the Foreign Relations Committee that the summit process be continued.

Unfortunately, recent developments seem to indicate that our clear message was not heard by Ankara and Mr. Denktash. Since the January breakdown in the summit talks, Mr. Denktash has held two so-called elections in a clear attempt to consolidate his illegal regime's hold on the occupied area. The mere Scheduling of these elections was a source of concern to the committee as far back as April, and I am deeply troubled that they have now been held.

Further, just last month, Mr. Denktash announced yet another conveyance of thousands of acres of land formerly owned by Greek-Cypriots to Turkish-Cypriots now occupying the area. And, the Turkish Foreign Minister's recent statement that Ankara had no intention of removing the Turkish troops from Cyprus even after a peace settlement casts serious doubt on Turkey's commitment to the summit talks.

Despite these acts of intransigence, I am pleased to say that the Republic of Cyprus remains committed to resuming the summit process. In fact, last month, the U.N. Secretary-General announced that the Republic of Cyprus had accepted the draft consolidated document continuing the principles that will be followed in any peace treaty. Mr. Denktash, on the other hand, has given no indication that he is willing to resume the summit process at this time.

On July 20, 1985 the people of Cyprus marked the sad occasion of their 11th year of occupation by a foreign military force. On October 1, they will mark another anniversary: Their 25th year of independence from Britain. But these have been a tortuous and turbulent 25 years. I encourage Ankara and Mr. Denktash to display the good faith they did back in January and resume the all-important summit process in order to bring peace and stability to Cyprus.

FRANCES BREATHITT

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, on July 11, Frances Breathitt died after a courageous struggle against cancer. Frances was a woman of great strength and vitality. She fought her illness with remarkable perseverance and determination, just as she faced so many other challenges in her long and distinguished career.

Frances was a member of the board of directors of the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, and all of us who served with her were deeply impressed by her interest and active support for the center's programs. Largely through her leadership, the education programs at the center became both a model and a vehicle for education in the arts. This unique outreach programs serves each State and enhances access to the arts by bringing important arts initiatives to thousands of families across the country.

Frances Breathitt was First Lady of Kentucky in the 1960's, and to her family, friends and countless admirers whose lives she touched, she remained "First Lady" throughout her life, a symbol of her warmth, her compassion, and her commitment to public service.

Madam President I ask unanimous consent that tributes to Frances Breathitt at a memorial service at Metropolitan Memorial United Methodist Church may be printed at this point in the RECORD, along with the article from the Lexington, KY, Herald Leader.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY ROGER L. STEVENS, CHAIRMAN, BOARD OF TRUSTEES, THE JOHN F. KENNEDY CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS, MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR FRANCES H. BREATHITT

Frances Breathitt was a beautiful person whose outward beauty reflected an ever more beautiful spirit. She was a remarkable Trustee whose personal efforts on behalf of the Kennedy Center irrevocably affected not only those of us who had the good fortune to know and work with her, but also the Education programs to which she dedicated so much of her energies. Frances was loved and will be missed by all of us at the Center. Her contributions in building a national Education program sprang from her love for the arts and for children, and the IMAGINATION CELEBRATIONS now hosted around the country are a testament to her commitment and that love.

To those of us who were fortunate enough to see Frances, not only at Trustees meetings but at other meetings at the Center, there was no task of too little importance that she would not devote herself to if the cause were one that she cared about. For both the Honors Gala and her beloved Education program, she would write lists, stuff envelopes, knock on doors, and always be there in attendance to see and enjoy the fruits of all these efforts.

We will miss her deeply and on behalf of all the Trustees who have had the privilege of serving with her, and from the staff who worked alongside her on so many occasions, we extend our deepest and most heartfelt sympathy to the Breathitt family.

A TRIBUTE BY HER FRIENDS

What we say here all too briefly is not the reflection of an emotional lament. It is our concept of Fran, Frannie, or Frankie, as we variously called here, when she was in our midst, enriching our lives. She will continue to do so for many years to come.

If there were defects we should record, we would do so. The truth is we do not know them, or they were so overshadowed by her virtues that they went unnoticed.

There was a tenderness wrapped in strength such as we have rarely seen. She showered these twin virtues upon her family without denying us our share. Her devotion to family was absolute and uncompromising. How often we heard a comment or two, even so brief but profound, of her parents, her brothers and sister. How often we observed her dedication to her beloved husband, her four treasured children, and her obsessive delight with her precious two grandchildren. All their joys and, inevitably, their sorrows became intimately hers. She protected them in their concerns with unselfish wisdom.

Hers was an almost silent, self-effacing way of leading and inspiring. There was an innate modesty balanced by a subtle self-confidence. Never was an unnecessary or unkind word uttered. She was forever learning by listening and watching, but her occasional disagreement would never be withheld or concealed if she numbered you among her friends.

She was endowed with a deep religious faith, quietly pursued but without the slightest intolerance toward others less believing.

Her long, final struggle for survival—and how she loved life—became her finest hour. Her inner strength, her uncommon valor, her rare unselfishness, her deep faith, confronted by the brutal test of agonizing pain and uncertainty, reached their ultimate climax. She has left a legacy of leadership and inspiration for others to inherit.

We have mentioned her happy reverence for the memory of her parents. She now becomes the object of that reverence for her children, her grandchildren, and those yet unborn.

A young amateur poet, with an Irish whimsy and humor that Frances so richly possessed, described many years ago how we view our friendship with her:

"We have touched the hem of a glory."

REMEMBRANCE OF FRANCES HOLLEMAN BREATHITT—REMARKS OF ANN BLESSING BRAY

As I thought about the deep loss we share today and as I thought about Frances, I remembered a passage from letters the Apostle Paul wrote to the Corinthians that seems fitting for remembering her.

Paul wrote:

"Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love I am become as a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal and though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries, and have all knowledge, and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains and have not love, I am nothing and though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love it profiteth me nothing. Love suffereth long and is kind. Love envieth not. Love wanteth not itself, is not puffed up. Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil. Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things. Love never faileth." For love, you see, governed Frances' life.

It was 40 years ago this summer that I first met her. We had both arrived at the University of Kentucky, each from a small town at opposite ends of the state. She was from Mayfield and I from Harlan. Both of us were a little awed by the huge campus. But there was Frances, with her bright blue eyes and captivating smile, ready for the challenge. For me, at least, it was love at first sight. We become roommates through college and friends for life. But I was only one friend in a whole legion of them—and the number grew with the passing years. For Frances was irresistible. She received more flowers, more candy and more invitations than anyone in our sorority house.

But there was something deceptive in this. Some confused her charming ways with a kind of helplessness. Nothing could be farther from reality. Frances could take care of herself. She was strong and forthright and had a great capacity for compassion. Those qualities did not escape another student in those long-ago years, a young war veteran, Ned Breathitt. He and Frances Holleman fell in love and when Ned took the sometimes bumpy road of public life, Frances traveled it with him. She was his partner. She could cast a spell over a crowd with her charm. Not because doing so was a political asset but because she genuinely loved people.

But as important as that was it was all secondary. For being Ned's helpmate also meant being a loving and devoted mother to their four children—Mary Fran, Linda, Susan and Edward. Each of them was special and different. And Frances gave each of them her full and unending love. She had her priorities straight.

Frances loved to laugh and she had a wonderfully subtle sense of humor. Once, her daughter Mary Fran brought home a bunch of funny valentines and showed them to her mother. Frannie looked at them, handed them back and teased Mary Fran. "These are not valentines. Where does it say, 'I love you'? Well, Frannie, love is indelibly written wherever you passed. It was on the walls of your hospital room in the carefree drawings Blake and Jenifer sent to cheer their beloved grandmother, their Frankie.

Goodbye, Frances. Our days are filled with the love you left us.

Love never faileth.

FRANCES BREATHITT DIES; WAS FORMER KENTUCKY FIRST LADY

(By Jennifer Hewlett)

Former Kentucky first lady Frances Holleman Breathitt, 58, died of cancer yesterday at Georgetown University Hospital in Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Breathitt, the wife of Edward T. "Ned" Breathitt, who served as governor from 1963 to 1967, had been forced to curtail her activities for the last several months because of her illness, said Field McChesney, a family friend.

The Breathitts moved to Washington about 15 years ago, when the former governor became a lobbyist for Norfolk Southern Corp.

While in Washington, Mrs. Breathitt was active in the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts and was appointed to the center's 45-member board of trustees in 1979 by then-President Jimmy Carter. She was chairwoman of the board's National Education Committee at the time of her death.

Mrs. Breathitt was characterized as her husband's silent partner during his political life.

Don Mills of Lexington, who was Breathitt's press secretary while he was governor, said Mrs. Breathitt was "a very lovely, low-keyed person who loved children very much and her family."

The former first lady was mother and father to the couple's four children during much of the time that her husband was campaigning for governor, and later when he became governor, Mills said.

"She spent a great deal of her time during that period taking care of all the problems. She did the usual entertainment that a first lady does provide," he said.

At one point during the 1960s, President Lyndon B. Johnson called Breathitt and asked him to run for the U.S. Senate, and Mrs. Breathitt "really insisted that he spend time at home," Mills said.

In a statement yesterday, Gov. Martha Layne Collins said: "Frances Breathitt brought a rare grace to her role as first lady of the commonwealth. While Governor Breathitt was in office, her strong will enabled her to balance their family's private life with the demands of public life. My prayers and sympathy are with Governor Breathitt and his family."

She met Breathitt in 1946 in a philosophy class at UK, and the couple were married in Mayfield on Dec. 20, 1948.

She was a member of Metropolitan Memorial United Methodist Church in Washington and a former member of First Methodist Church in Hopkinsville.

In addition to her husband, she is survived by three daughters, Mary Frances Breathitt and Linda Breathitt, both of Washington, and Susan Brickman of Dallas; a son, Edward T. Breathitt III of Dallas; two brothers, M.L. Holleman of Jackson, Miss., and Wallace Holleman of Nashville, Tenn.; a sister, Mary Anna West of Nashville; and two grandchildren.

Services will be at 2 p.m. CDT Monday at First United Methodist Church in Hopkinsville. Burial will be in Riverside Cemetery in Hopkinsville. Visitation will be from 4 to 9 p.m. CDT Sunday at Fuqua-Hinton Funeral Home in Hopkinsville.

There also will be a memorial service later in Washington.

CYPRUS INVASION ANNIVERSARY

Mr. PRESSLER. Madam President, the Republic of Cyprus marks with sadness this month the 11th anniversary of the Turkish invasion of their country. The people of Cyprus will remember the thousands killed during Turkey's military occupation and the many more who are still mourning. They will remember their homes and properties now exploited by the more than 50,000 illegal settlers brought in from Turkey to occupy their land.

The tragedy of Cyprus must not be allowed to continue indefinitely. The artificial division of the Republic of Cyprus poses dangers not only for Cypriots but for the whole eastern Mediterranean region. The division of Cyprus jeopardizes American security interests in the area and it is the greatest obstacle to the restoration of good relations between Greece and Turkey, the anchors of NATO's southeastern flank.

There is hope in the current initiative by the United Nations' Secretary-General. The Greek-Cypriots have already replied affirmatively to the "consolidated draft agreement," prepared by the Secretary-General, which outlines the principles that will be included in any peaceful resolution of the crisis. We ask that Turkey and the Turkish-Cypriots not derail this process through divisive actions in the occupied area of Cyprus. Mr. Denktash's recent holding of two so-called elections and Ankara's increasingly frequent statement that it will not remove troops from Cyprus even after a peace settlement, are distressing examples of divisive actions.

I believe that the United States, with vital interests in the area, must continue to press for the removal of Turkish troops from Cyprus and encourage the Turkish-Cypriots to reply affirmatively to the U.N. initiative.

Madam President, on this sad anniversary, we must reaffirm our dedication to finding a peaceful solution to the Cyprus conflict. The recent humanitarian assistance given by Cyprus to the TWA hostages is the most recent manifestation of the friendship the people of Cyprus feel for our country. The people of Cyprus look to the United States as their best hope for peace. We should not let our good friends down.

RAILROAD SAFETY RULES

Mr. DANFORTH. Madam President, today, Secretary Dole announced that the Department of Transportation has adopted new railroad safety rules prohibiting alcohol and drug use on the job. I commend her for focusing on this grave problem and I look forward to reviewing the new rules.

One year ago, I chaired a hearing to examine the seriousness of the alcohol and drug abuse problem on railroads and to review what the Government was doing to combat the problem.

During that hearing, the tragic dimensions of this problem were only too well documented. For example, Secretary Dole testified that her Department had found that 23 percent of railroad operating employees were problem drinkers, that 5 percent of all employees reported to work very drunk or got very drunk while on duty at least once a year, and that 13 percent of all employees reported to work a little drunk one or more times a year. Further, the National Transportation Safety Board testified that in the 2 years prior to the date of the hearing, it had investigated nine accidents in which either alcohol or drugs were involved. These accidents resulted in 14 fatalities and more than $26 million in property damage.

At the hearing, Secretary Dole announced that she was proposing new safety rules for the railroad industry dealing with the alcohol and drug problem. Today, the rules are final. It has been a long and painstaking process, but I hope that the rules will have a positive impact and prove that it was well worth the effort.

THE FOREIGN AID BILL

Mr. MATHIAS. Madam President, I want to salute the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. LUGAR, and the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. FASCELL, for their masterful production of a 4-year wonder: a foreign aid bill.

Presidents, and professors, diplomats, and even some Democrats have been calling upon us to reach a bipartisan consensus on foreign policy issues, and while that may be much tougher to do than many people think, we can thank these two gentlemen for setting the stage for just such a consensus on a vital ingredient in our foreign policy.

However difficult, however exhausting and however unsatisfactory for some, the work of the Senate, the House and the Senate-House conference committee was conclusive this year. For the first time in 4 years, we will be able to deliver on our commitment to peace and security around the world with a carefully drafted and debated piece of legislation which represents the best efforts of the Congress. Instead of running on the outdated fuel of continuing resolutions, we can move ahead with timely, fresh measures which address important interests and goals of the United States.

With this report, we make a renewed commitment to peace and progress in the Middle East, with crucial aid to help Israel maintain its security and improve its economy and with assistance to Egypt and other moderate Arab States that need and deserve our encouragement and support.

With this measure, we make a critical contribution to development throughout the world, by providing the kind of assistance that really addresses the deeper problem of underdevelopment that leads to famine, to overpopulation, to conflict, and unrest, and broader, regional turmoil. I would note in particular two small but very successful programs of the Agency for International Development—the International Fund for Agricultural Development, which helps small farmers in sub-Saharan Africa, and the Housing Guaranty Program, which offers important private-sector help to housing efforts.

With this measure, we extend our continuing support to a number of vital U.N. agencies, such as UNICEF, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Development Program. And with this measure, we send clear, timely messages to areas of conflict—especially to the Philippines, where economic and military assistance is needed to shore up a troubled economy and combat a Communist insurgency, but where we also need to support reformist elements—civilian and military—that can guide that nation back to democratic ways and, true, not temporary, stability. We also send a message to Guatemala, where we must do everything we can to bolster democratic forces as elections approach. And in Central America in general, we support 2 years of economic assistance, going at least part of the way to meet the recommendations of the Kissinger commission on multiyear funding.

Foreign aid is a controversial subject in the United States, particularly in troubled times. But we cannot forget our role as a great power and as the leading nation in the free and democratic world. We would bear a direct responsibility if, for lack of our assistance, a nation, beseiged by the problems of underdevelopment and conflict, turned to more extremist ideas and values. We would share a major portion of the blame if, for lack of our assistance, a nation turned away from the path of modernization and peace to one of backwardness and war.

Many people say we are giving money away when we approve foreign aid. But the truth is far more complex.

First of all, I would point out that our overall efforts are still not as generous or extensive as those of most of our allies. The United States ranks near the bottom in percentage of gross national product that is devoted to development aid.

But I would also point out that most of the foreign aid money ends up generating economic activity within the United States. The materials for foreign aid programs are purchased within the United States, thus creating business activity here. American experts customarily are employed or American companies are given contracts for foreign aid training programs so that there is employment here as a result of the foreign aid money.

Furthermore, when the United States channels foreign aid money through multinational institutions, the United Nations, or other development organizations, we not only stir up economic activity by our own investment of dollars, but we attract the contributions of other nations, and those funds are spent within the United States as well, thus contributing even more to economic activity here.

There is a related economic benefit which could, indirectly, extend our economic position in the world. For example, if we sell an American tractor to the foreign aid program to be donated to another country, the simple fact of life is that someday the tractor will break down, or need a spare part, or a new tire. In the normal course of business, the farmer using the tractor will send to the United States for that spare part or that new tire. So customers for American products are built into the world economy, and this is extremely important. We create markets for American goods as we donate the benefit of American production and American expertise to help develop the poverty-stricken areas of the world.

This kind of help is the heart and soul of the foreign aid bill that we adopted yesterday. The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. LUGAR, and the ranking minority member, Mr. PELL, deserve our thanks for a job well done.

BALTIMORE VA HOSPITAL: ANOTHER STEP CLOSER

Mr. MATHIAS. Madam President, S. 876, the Veterans' Administration Health-Care Programs Improvement Act of 1985, authorizes the expenditure of fiscal year 1986 funds from VA's major construction working reserve fund to build a new Veterans' Administration hospital in Baltimore. Yesterday's vote marked the culmination of 8 years of effort by Congress, the Veterans' Administration, service organizations, citizens, and the medical community to replace the aged Loch Raven Hospital and improve medical facilities for veterans in the Baltimore area.

Many of my colleagues have been following the development of the long awaited, long overdue VA medical facility on the Baltimore area requested by the Senate and House Appropriations Committee. It will be 4 months overdue on August 1. I anticipate, however, that the VA will recommend this facility and that it has the coveted OMB stamp of approval.

The House Appropriations Committee has provided funds for the redesign of the proposed hospital. S. 876, as reported by the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, authorizes those redesign funds in the Senate. The Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN] has advocated and supported the authorization of these funds. I am pleased to report that his appropriations subcommittee this week approved $2 million in redesign funds, and has instructed the VA to request full construction funding for fiscal year 1987.

Let me assure my colleagues that I am mindful of the fiscal constraints we face regarding new construction. But every day we delay in making a full and final decision on the medical needs of the veterans community in Maryland perpetuates inadequate health care and results in a higher price tag for the project. How much longer must I tell the 630,000 Maryland veterans, one-quarter of them reside in Baltimore, that they must settle for existing facilities that have been inadequate since 1972 and are years behind in modern technology? Of the veterans currently in Loch Haven VA Hospital, 71 percent have no health insurance and no hope outside the veterans' system. With the passage of S. 876, we are striding toward making the proposed new hospital a reality. I shall thank my colleagues and Maryland's veterans will thank them.

BEN BRADLEE

Mr. MATHIAS. Madam President, I am advised that today is the 20th anniversary of the tenure of Benjamin Crowninshield Bradlee as the editor of the Washington Post.

Ben Bradlee, as he was more familiarly known to readers of the Post, has been a major figure in Washington during those entire 20 years. The extraordinary coverage that the Post under his direction, has given to stories of national and worldwide interest has made it one of the great and leading newspapers in the world, a paper that is must-reading in every major capital of the world.

Ben Bradlee has, of course, had the assistance of an able staff of reporters and editors. But in every large organization it is the genius of leadership that makes the difference, and as Ben Bradlee passes this milestone, I take the opportunity to convey to him my congratulations and my hope that he will continue the leadership of the Post in the same spirit for many years to come.

DONALD F. COLLINS

Mr. COHEN. Madam President, I rise to pay tribute to Caribou ME, native Donald F. Collins, one of Maine's leading entrepreneurs who has successfully headed his family's lumber business for nearly 40 years.

As president of the S.W. Collins Co., in Caribou, Don Collins carries on a family tradition of excellence and quality workmanship extending back to 1845, the year Don's great-grandfather built the first Collins sawmill.

Through the years, the family business has changed with the times, growing from a one-sawmill operation into a major logging and manufacturing business serving the needs of small businesses and homeowners throughout northern Maine.

Along with his business success, Don has followed in the Collins tradition of public service. He served as a Caribou city councilor, and later served in the Maine State House of Representatives and Maine Senate. He has made community affairs a top priority, lending his spirit, enthusiasm, and expertise to benefit many local organizations. His leadership ability deserves to be commended.

I would like to take this opportunity to submit an article for the RECORD about Don Collins from the Aroostook Republican of July 24, 1985.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Aroostook (ME) Republican, July 24, 1985]

DON COLLINS MAINTAINS FAMILY TRADITIONS

(By Liz Chapman)

His office is upstairs over the store and his desk looks like he has a dozen projects in the works. A thank you for not smoking sign hangs like a coat on the back of one door, and a picture of his father hangs on the wall beside a window. Through the pane he can see the stream where 140 years ago his great-grandfather, Samuel, built Caribou's first saw mill, establishing a company and a legacy that would become stronger with time.

Donald F. Collins joined the family lumber business in the summer of 1949. He was the fourth man by the name of Collins to own and operate S.W. Collins Company on the bank of the Caribou Stream.

"Everyone in the family is actually interested in the lumberyard and in Caribou," Collins said. "They have both been very kind to us."

Collins was graduated from Caribou High School in the class of 1943. He enrolled in the University of Maine at Orono that year to earn a degree in business administration. After one semester of study, Collins enlisted in the Reserve Corps and was stationed in war-ravaged Europe at the height of World War II. In December of 1944, he was injured in the Battle of the Bulge while fighting in the 87th Infantry Division. He was reassigned to a support group in France until he returned to the States in January of 1946.

Years earlier, though, Collins had decided to enter the lumber business with his father. After the war he studied for his degree and was graduated from UMO in February, 1949.

Collins said the family business has survived 140 years because "we've been able to change as the times change." Gone are the logging and manufacturing operations common in the early days of Aroostook County. The Collins now caters to home owners and renovators and has branched out to sub-contract such items as doors, windows, paneling and roofing materials.

"The changes are what kept us in touch, kept us going," he said. "And I guess they're what kept us interested."

Although the lumber business has made for some "dreadfully busy" years, Collins, like his forefathers, found time for public service at both the local and state levels.

A former Republican state senator (1977-78) and representative (1971-72), Collins said the national budget, a new tax system and "a strong leadership role in promoting peace" are issues he is concerned about in 1985.

"We have to recognize that we've got to live with the Russians and with China. Dialogue goes in dips and swells. It's important to continue conversation, it's important not to give up.

"I'm not a doomsday person," Collins continued, "I think we'll overcome."

Collins said he is optimistic that a new tax law will be enacted by late 1986. On the budget he said: "The national budget has to be the most critical area to be resolved. If we don't, there will be another cycle of inflation that will make us all poorer. We cannot spend in excess of what we can afford."

Public service dates back as far as lumber in the Collins family. Samuel Collins was elected to the Maine House of Representatives in 1856 and to the Maine Senate in 1870. Samuel's son Herschel, an outspoken citizen of Caribou in the earyly 1900's, also served in the Legislature. H.D. Collins' son, also named Samuel, served two terms as representative and three terms as senator.

Collins was a city councilor in the 1960's before staging successful campaigns for state election. His wife, Patricia, also served on the council and was Caribou's mayor in 1981 and 1982.

"I liked public service, but I've had enough for a while," he said. "It's an important contribution though, and I think a lot of people ought to make an effort to run for public office. The younger generation, especially, needs to be encouraged to run."

Traveling the Maine coast, swimming, sailing and "very little" golf are Collins' favorite pasttimes. He's not ready to retire yet, he said, as he spends his days as "coach and critic" for his son Sam, who is the fifth generation Collins to take a desk at the lumberyard.

Greg, the youngest of Collins' six children, will be a senior at UMO this fall. He has also taken an interest in the family business, although he hasn't quite "made up his mind."

Collins continues an active role in Caribou as he serves on the boards of directors for the Aroostook Trust Co., Maine Public Service and the Maine Mutual Fire Insurance Co.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF MEDICARE

Mr. LONG. Madam President, I am pleased to join with many of my colleagues in commemorating this 20th anniversary of the Medicare Program.

The Medicare Program had its roots in the Social Security Program which was adopted at a time of crisis in this country—at a time when some were questioning whether our fundamental institutions were capable of coping with the problems of the 20th century.

I am pleased to say that when my father was a Member of the U.S. Senate, he campaigned for a broad program to provide for the needs of the less fortunate in this country and my father voted for the Social Security bill of 1935.

The Social Security Act of 1935 translated the basic good sense of American society into a practical solution to the problems of economic security for those who face the problems of old age and unemployment and for children in need. Subsequent amendments have added similar protections for those who have become severely disabled. The signing of the Medicare bill by President Johnson on July 30, 1965, in Independence, MO, President Truman's hometown, filled the last major gap in the economic security of the elderly of this Nation.

Today, Medicare provides health insurance protection to over 27 million persons 65 and over. Medicare also provides protection to persons under 65 who have been entitled for a period of 24 months to Social Security or Railroad Retirement benefits because they are disabled, and to certain workers and their dependents who need kidney transplantation or dialysis.

It was my privilege to manage the Medicare bill on the Senate floor, and it was my pleasure to accompany President Lyndon Johnson to Independence, MO, where he signed the bill in the presence of former President Harry Truman.

Madam President, I am proud to have been a member of the Finance Committee which enacted this major bill to provide health protection for our senior citizens.

STAGGERS RAIL ACT AND "COAL RATE GUIDELINES"

Mr. LONG. Madam President, as cosponsor of the Long-Cannon provisions of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980, I have long been concerned that "captive shippers," those railroad shippers without transportation alternatives, be protected in this era of railroad deregulation. Because of my frustration with the Interstate Commerce Commission's total failure to protect captive shippers in its implementation of the Staggers Act, I am an original cosponsor of the Consumer Rail Equity Act (S. 477) which is pending before the Senate Commerce Committee.

On Thursday, June 20, the Interstate Commerce Commission announced its final "coal rate guidelines." These are the rules for determining the reasonableness of captive coal rates. The Commission indicates these rules will probably be applied to all captive commodities, including grain, sugar, phosphate, and other bulk commodities. As for the concerns of captive shippers, the Commission limited its response to promising to apply more diligently the protections in the Long-Cannon provisions and to consider phasing in those high rates that the Commission finds to be reasonable, but which could, nevertheless, cause economic dislocations.

These two minor clarifications fail to address the major issues in determining rate reasonableness. First, the Commission maintained the link between rate reasonableness and the "revenue adequacy" of a railroad. The Commission indicates that it will tolerate even higher rates for captive shippers if a railroad is not "revenue adequate." But, under the Commission's present test for "revenue adequacy," no railroad since 1980 has been found to be revenue adequate—not even the Norfolk Southern which was selected by the Secretary of Transportation to buy Conrail because NS is, as she said, "very highly profitable."

Second, the ICC adopted stand alone costs—the cost to shippers of building their own railroad—as the measure of when a captive shipper rate becomes unreasonable. The ICC softened its earlier rule by allowing this mythical railroad to carry the commodities of several shippers. The fundamental problem remains—new railroads are not being built today because of their prohibitive start-up costs. Any regulatory system that incredibly ties the reasonableness of rates to the cost of building the shipper's own mythical railroad provides no fairness to shippers.

Finally, the ICC has done nothing to lessen the burden of proof required of captive shippers—a burden the Commission's own administrative law judges have found to be unreasonable.

In light of the ICC's action, enactment of the protections in the Consumer Rail Equity Act (S. 477) is imperative. Senators MARK ANDREWS, WENDELL FORD, TED STEVENS and I recently asked Chairman DANFORTH to schedule early hearings on this important legislation. I hope the chairman will honor our request so that we may assure that captive shippers will receive the protections promised in the Staggers Rail Act of 1980.

SPENDING ON NATIONAL DEFENSE AND SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. DENTON. Madam President, our budget debates this year have been, and to some extent still are, characterized by concern about the proportions of Federal spending that go to national defense and to social programs. Many people who talk about the issue seem to have the impresson that our spending on national defense is inordinately large in historical terms, and that our spending on social programs has been drastically cut compared to the historical levels.

In 1983, the General Accounting Office published an excellent study on "Defense Spending and Its Relationship to the Federal Budget" (GAO/PLRD-83-80, June 9, 1983, revised). Perhaps the most valuable part of that study is the initial table 1, found on page 2. It showed the pattern of actual budget outlays by large cluster—national defense, human resources, net interest, and all other—for the period from 1962 through 1982, with estimates projected to 1988.

The table disclosed that, in fact, defense spending under the current administration has been running at a proportionate level considerably less than during most years since 1960, and the spending on social programs has been substantially larger.

Earlier this year, I asked the General Accounting Office to update and expand the table. The GAO has done so, and I am pleased to make the results available to my colleagues.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the table "Budget Outlays by Large Cluster: 1940-90" be printed immediately following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, there are a couple of things to note about the table. First, actual outlay figures are available only through fiscal year 1983.

Second, the projections for 1986 and subsequent years are based on budget figures already badly outdated by congressional action. Specifically, the apparent decision to constrain real growth in the defense budget to 3 percent or less will obviously revise the total outlays and the proportion that national defense constitutes of total outlays. As a corollary, spending on human resources may well increase as a proportion of total outlays, even if it does not increase in dollar terms.

Third, it is important to note that the historical figures have been calculated using current practices. For example, and perhaps most important, spending on Social Security, which was off budget until the early 1960's, has been shown as on budget for the entire period. There is no distortion in the table caused by changes in the Government's accounting practices.

A look at the historical record makes it clear that, from 1941 through 1970, defense was consistently the major portion of Federal expenditures. Even during the great demobilization after World War II, defense spending never fell below 30 percent of outlays. Only during the period since 1974 has defense spending dropped below 30 percent of Federal outlays, to a level between 23 and 27 percent. One must go back prior to World War II to find defense spending that low.

One cannot help but note that, even during the peaceful years of the Eisenhower administration after the end of the Korean war, defense spending never dropped below 52 percent of Federal outlays, and was higher in most years.

By contrast, spending on human resources was below 50 percent of outlays, and generally far below 50 percent, until 1974. Only starting in 1974 did we spend more than half of Federal outlays on human resources, and we have done so consistently ever since. Even the projections that show human resources spending dropping below 50 percent beginning in 1985 may now be subject to revision because of congressional action.

One other thing that I note is that interest payments, now running at about 10 or 12 percent of the budget, are at about the same proportionate level as they were from 1947 through 1951.

Madam President, obviously the big numbers hide a lot of the small details, but they do disclose a clear pattern. In historical terms, defense spending as a proportion of Federal expenditures has dropped radically during the last dozen years, and spending on social programs has radically increased.

We have seen a sea change in the pattern of Federal expenditures, and it is one of which we must be aware. Those people who argue that next year's budget will have too much for defense and too little for human resources need to look at the historical context.

We have radically changed Federal spending patterns to emphasize social programs at the expense of defense. People can debate about the wisdom of doing that, but we must recognize that we have done it.

In my view, the change was not a wise one, for the threat that we face, the challenge to our national security, is certainly no less severe than it was during the Eisenhower or Kennedy administrations when the country devoted a far greater part of its Federal resources to the national defense.

Madam President, I wish to thank the Comptroller General and his staff at the General Accounting Office for their assistance and effort in preparing the revised table. They have done a valuable service, and I hope that they will, each year, issue an updated version of the table so that we all can see the broad historical pattern of our spending decisions.

VICE ADM. JAMES B. WILSON MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS

Mr. DENTON. Madam President, on Memorial Day this year, my good friend Vice Adm. James B. Wilson, USN (ret.), delivered a most appropriate Memorial Day address in his home town of Wayne, PA. I want to bring it to the attention of my colleagues.

Vice Admiral Wilson, a classmate of mine at the U.S. Naval Academy, had a distinguished naval career. A submarine officer who commanded U.S.S. Andrew Jackson (SSBN-619) from 1962 to 1966, he served in senior positions in the Department of Defense, was the last commander of U.S. Naval Forces in Vietnam, and was Chief of Naval Education and Training from 1974 to 1978.

Moreover, Vice Admiral Wilson established a reputation as a serious and thoughtful officer whose qualities of intellect matched his professional achievements. I was gratified that he was willing, during the early years of my term in the Senate, to assist me as my administrative assistant as well as my friend.

In his speech, Vice Admiral Wilson points out that:

The responsibility for how a democratic nation reacts to challenge rests not on the shoulders of its politicians, but of its citizens.

That is a point that we in the Congress, as well as all Americans, should consider seriously.

He points out that history tells us that the maintenance of peace, the avoidance of war, depends on the citizens of a democracy demonstrating "that a democratic society is competent to support a wise, persistent military and foreign policy founded on history's lessons that weakness, of will or of strength, invites war," and that "national weakness, deliberately chosen as policy, is immoral, given its all too predictable consequences."

Madam President, I thank Vice Admiral Wilson for his excellent Memorial Day speech. It is but the most recent example of his thoughtful and devoted service to our country.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of Vice Admiral Wilson's speech, delivered on May 27, 1985, be printed in full in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS

(By Vice Adm. James B. Wilson, USN (Ret.))

On the eighth of May, last, the 40th anniversary of the end of hostilities in Europe was marked by nations formerly allied in the struggle against Hitler's Germany, and, curiously, by the states of East and West Germany as well. I say "marked" rather than "celebrated" because, in the aftermath of these ceremonies in Europe, there seemed precious little to celebrate. Press coverage documented, in the West, a Europe still traumatized by the experience of World War II.

Certainly one finds reason enough for trauma in that war, and one of the principal functions of an observance such as this is to keep fresh the memory of war's hideous face. Remember: 51 million civilians killed—and the mind simply cannot comprehend that number in that context—among these, perhaps as many as 10 million innocents exterminated in death camps.

And political realities in today's Europe are not calculated to relieve this trauma rooted in the past: barbed wire separating West from East; former allies now a set of totalitarian states, each with its glittering military panoply arrayed against the Western democracies.

And there is the painful knowledge that only 21 years separated World War II in time from World War I—the war to end all wars, you remember, which did not lack for horrors of its own: 15 million civilians dead; the youth of Europe—almost an entire generation shorn away amongst millions of military casualties.

In one brief offensive in 1917, for example, the British suffered 448,614 casualties (I don't round off that number—each digit represents human beings), all this to gain six miles of wasteland, a wasteland gutted by trenches and made virtually impenetrable by barbed wire.

Moving forward in time from the World War II datum, we have the vicissitudes of Korea and, more recently, Vietnam that remain vivid and searing memories, all contributing to trauma, particularly in the United States.

What are we to make of all this? Are we not bound to search for some meaning in this tragic history as we seek perspective with which to view the deaths of those brave men and women, many of them our friends, who died in war and whom we honor today?

Is there not a lesson to be learned from a close study of events leading up to these various cataclysms of war?

In looking back on these wars, it seems clear that action taken when the threat to peace was first recognized could have been decisive in preserving peace. We know that action was not taken. For example:

Before World War I, in 1911, the Kaiser's armies were described by observers as awesome, yet the alliance linking Britain and France was a weak thing, and, even in 1914, England was spending less of its revenues for military purposes, proportionately, than it had ten years before, and the situation in France was, if anything, worse.

Before World War II, in March of 1936, Hitler militarized the Rhineland in violation of the Treaty of Versailles. Italy, France, and England, those nations most directly threatened, did not respond when to do so would have cost virtually nothing in blood and treasure.

As John Roche has written recently, the ominous auguries of today's crises began to accumulate in 1946–47, ironically soon after V-E Day, as Stalin's forces "moved to establish the totalitarian order in Eastern Europe." But even by this time, Americans were indifferent to foreign affairs and our armed forces, as is our custom after wars, had been reduced to impotence. Korea and Vietnam lay ahead.

There are many more examples, all painfully redundant in showing that the early prudent steps that might have prevented war and crisis in this century were not taken. World War II is particularly instructive in shedding light on this phenomenon, I believe. Many of us here today remember the concessions to Hitler at Munich in October 1938. As a consequence of those concessions, by March 1939 Czechoslovakia ceased to exist as a nation; on September 1, 1939, German troops crossed the Polish border at all points of attack, and the abyss gaped before the civilized world.

Munich has become a symbol of decisions to retreat, wrongly reached because of fear and weakness owing to failure to maintain adequate strength over years of peace. It is a particularly melancholy episode because great powers broke their promises and yielded up a small democratic nation to the obscene appetites of a criminal regime openly preaching racial hatred and bent on conquest.

But is this the only lesson of Munich? Certainly to assert that weakness invites disaster and that adequate military strength must undergird a foreign policy is a commonplace.

In my view, there is another, perhaps more important, lesson of Munich: A search of the archives finds a common theme uttered in the statements of British politicians like Baldwin and Chamberlain, and their counterparts in France, as they sought to excuse, after the fact, their monumental failure of nerve in confronting Hitler. They were unanimous in asserting that the lack of preparedness reflected the unwillingness of the public to support a strong defense program! Stanley Baldwin, in a notorious admission, stated that elections simply could not be won by asking for public sacrifice in the interests of defense. (And I ask if there are not echoes of this sentiment in our own time?)

It is instructive that these politicians accepted no responsibility for failure to mobilize public opinion in favor of national defense in their long years of political leadership. Adolph Hitler made the Munich crisis, and Neville Chamberlain resolved it by sacrificing Czechoslovakia. All this is true, but it needs to be remembered that in so doing he acted for the men and women of Britain as he understood their wishes. The consequence was a slaughter of unimaginable scale and ferocity.

And so there you have it. The responsibility for how a democratic nation reacts to challenge rests not on the shoulders of its politicians, but of its citizens. It is we as individuals who give substance to the policy of our nation.

As we seek, then, to reconcile ourselves to the deaths of those we honor today, it is incontestable that they died to serve the democracy of the living. If we are to keep faith with them, we as citizens must demonstrate that a democratic society is competent to support a wise, persistent military and foreign policy founded on history's lessons that weakness, of will or of strength, invites war; that successful arbitration and negotiation proceed from a posture of strength; that national weakness, deliberately chosen as policy, is immoral, given its all too predictable consequences.

On such a basis, perhaps, we can reconstruct the failed hopes of this century, and come one day, God willing, to look upon our last war as our last. If we fail, the imagery of Winston Churchill's words spoken in World War I (in 1915) will become a metaphor for our own times, and I close by quoting, in part, his words: ". . . death is familiar, and sorrow numbs. The world is in twilight; and from beyond the dim flickering horizons comes tirelessly the thudding of the guns."

MYASTHENIA GRAVIS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, today I am introducing on behalf of myself and Senator METZENBAUM a joint resolution designating the week of October 6 through October 12, 1985, as "Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week". Myasthenia gravis is a neuromuscular disease that causes voluntary muscles to become weak and to tire easily. It's estimated that from 100,000 to 300,000 Americans are afflicted with the disease. Women are twice as susceptible to the disorder as men, with the highest incidence occurring between the ages of 20 and 40. It is a difficult disease to cope with, one where the victim may not even be able to finish drinking a glass of water without resting because the muscles in the back of the throat cannot sustain the effort. There is no known cause of the disease and much research is needed in finding its cause and for improving the treatment of its victims.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my resolution be printed in the RECORD following my remarks, and that the resolution remain at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

The joint resolution is as follows:

S.J. RES. 183

Whereas the incidence and prevalence of myasthenia gravis present a significant health problem in the United States;

Whereas myasthenia gravis is a severe neuromuscular disorder, characterized by weakness of the voluntary muscles of the body;

Whereas an estimated one hundred thousand to two hundred thousand diagnosed, and over one hundred thousand undiagnosed, Americans of both sexes, and all races and ages, are afflicted with the disease;

Whereas the Nation faces a continuing need to support innovative research into the causes, treatment, and cure of myasthenia gravis; and

Whereas it is appropriate to focus the Nation's attention upon the problem of myasthenia gravis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of October 6 through October 12, 1985, is designated as "Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all Government agencies and the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 1986 AND 1987—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 2068 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2068) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report will be printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD.)

Mr. LUGAR. Madam President, I rise to support the conference report on H.R. 2068, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act for fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

The conference report authorizes programs vital for the conduct of American foreign policy and essential for our national security. The report authorizes $2,752,896 for fiscal 1986 and $2,795,918 for fiscal 1987, largely for the State Department's administration of foreign affairs and its support for international organizations and migration and refugee assistance. The report also authorizes $887.9 million for the U.S. Information Agency in each fiscal year, and $125 million for the Board for International Broadcasting in each fiscal year. In adopting these amounts, the conferees have ensured adequate funding, but they have also recognized the necessity for fiscal restraint by authorizing a total that is $130.5 million below the administration's request.

In addition to authorizing funds for these departments and agencies, the conference report contains a number of other provisions that will strengthen our national security and international relations. The conferees adopted, with small modifications: a Senate provision first offered by Senator KASSEBAUM that will help bring about budgetary restraint in the United Nations; a provision first offered by Senator HELMS that will create an independent Inspector General in the State Department; provisions first offered by Senator HAWKINS that earmark vital funding for Radio Marti, strengthen radio broadcasts to Soviet Jews, and create a U.S. International Narcotics Control Commission; a provision first offered by Senator HUMPHREY that creates a Radio Free Afghanistan, and provisions first offered by Senators ROTH, COHEN, and LEAHY that will enhance our ability to prevent foreign diplomats from acting in ways that are hostile to the interests of the United States.

The conferees also adopted an important provision first offered by Senator MATHIAS that creates a structure for a scholarship program for foreign undergraduates; a provision offered by Senator BIDEN that increases the administration's ability to coordinate information concerning drug trafficking; and a provision first offered by Senator D'AMATO that authorizes funding for international competitions among disabled athletes.

There are many other excellent provisions in the report, among them those offered by Senators EVANS, KASTEN, ZORINSKY, WARNER, TRIBLE, DOMENICI, BYRD, and GRASSLEY. Several of these amendments were first offered on the Senate or House floors, and agreed to by the conferees. In all, the conferees resolved over 100 disputed issues in a spirit of compromise and mutual concern for a strong and effective foreign policy. I am pleased, as conference chairman, to commend Chairman FASCELL, Mr. BROOMFIELD, Mr. MICA, Ms. SNOWE and the other House conferees, and, on our side, Senators PELL, HELMS, MATHIAS, and BIDEN. We believe that we have produced a conference report which sets a prudent budgetary and programmatic framework for our foreign policy over the next 2 years. I urge the Senate to adopt this report.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I wish to join Senator LUGAR in supporting the passage of the conference report on H.R. 2068, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, fiscal years 1986 and 1987. The Senate conferees did a commendable job in defending the Senate position on this bill. There were over 103 separate issues resolved by the conferees, ranging from a statement of extreme concern for the plight of the refugees located in Thailand to a report requirement on compliance with arms control agreements by the world community, and adherence by the United States to such agreements.

The primary purpose of this bill is to authorize appropriations for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the Asia Foundation, and the National Endowment for Democracy. The total amounts authorized by this legislation in fiscal year 1986 and 1987 are $3.7 billion and $3.8 billion respectively. While these amounts are well below the administration's requested levels, I am pleased to note that the conferees agreed to a funding level for the Department of State which will allow it to accelerate the vitally important security enhancement project designed to provide increased protection for U.S. diplomats abroad.

The conference report also strengthens the ability of the Office of Foreign Missions and other Federal agencies to restrict the illicit activities of diplomats from nations hostile to U.S. interests.

In addition to the above, this conference substitute provides funding for the two key agencies of American public diplomacy, the U.S. Information Agency and the Board for International Broadcasting. The conference substitute provides $179,190,000 in fiscal year 1986 and $192,575,000 in fiscal year 1987 for certain educational and cultural exchange programs, comprised of separate earmarked funding for the Fulbright Academic Exchange Programs, the International Visitor Program, the Humphrey Fellowship Program, and a program of exchanges with Latin American and the Caribbean. In the case of the Fulbright, Humphrey, and International Visitor Programs, the earmarked levels are only floor levels; and I would hope the Agency could provide the full funding requested for these programs by the President.

The bill also includes major funding for modernization of the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty. The bill strengthens the oversight of Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty by requiring the Secretary of State to be represented at all BIB and RFE/RL board meetings and by designating a liaison office in the Munich Consulate to coordinate with the RFE/RL management. This should help limit program violations by the Radios.

The very significant increases contained in this bill for exchange-of-persons program as well as the long overdue funding for radio modernization represents a very major advance for these two critical elements of American public diplomacy.

I am also pleased to report that the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency authorization approved by the conference committee will provide an appropriate level of funding for ACDA in this and the next 2 years. The House and Senate agreed on the overall funding levels, and the conference committee accepted the Senate provision earmarking an additional $4,321,000 this fiscal year and earmarked $6,146,000 in each of the next 2 fiscal years specifically for the support of the negotiations in Geneva. We realize how critically important these negotiations are to our national security and wanted to ensure that the Congress provided the necessary financial backing. In addition, the committee of conference accepted an amendment I offered, which had been approved by the Senate, requiring that the President submit an annual report, prepared by the Director of ACDA on the adherence of the United States to obligation undertaken in arms control agreements with other nations and on any problems related to compliance by other nations with arms control agreements with us. I believe that this report will underscore and reinforce the efforts of the Congress to emphasize the importance of compliance with and adherence to arms control obligations.

Madam President, in conclusion, this conference report will do much to strengthen the U.S. foreign policy apparatus. It merits the strong support of my colleagues.

Thank you, Madam President.

AMERICA'S RELATIONS WITH JAPAN AND CHINA

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I wish to compliment the distinguished chairman and distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations for their leadership in crafting the conference report on the fiscal 1986 Department of State Authorization Act.

I also wish to highlight two sections of this conference report which represent important policy statements by Congress regarding our relationships with two of the key nations in the Far East—Japan and the People's Republic of China.

I am especially gratified that conferees adopted, with only minor modifications, the sense of the Congress amendment that I introduced on behalf of myself and Senators BENTSEN, THURMOND, LEVIN, BOREN, and KERRY, strongly urging Japan to significantly increase its defense spending to meet its mutual security commitments.

For far too long, Japan has failed to carry a fair share of the common defense burden and has continually delayed the necessary improvement of her self-defense forces, so that her responsibilities under the Mutual Security Treaty with the United States can be met and her commitment to defend her air space and sea lanes out to 1,000 miles from the home islands can be fulfilled.

The language adopted in this conference report sends a strong message from the entire Congress, not just the Senate, that the American people are running out of patience with this failure by Japan to fulfill her own self-defense commitments.

This message calls on Japan to increase significantly its defense spending during the next 5 years in order to develop this promised 1,000-mile self-defense capability by 1990.

The language also requires the U.S. Government to inform Congress annually whether Japan is providing sufficient resources to make the promised improvement in her self-defense forces by 1990 and it calls on Japan to reduce substantially the shortfalls in ammunition, logistics, and sustainability which now limit the self-defense effectiveness of her combat forces.

It also requires the executive branch to inform Congress as to what actions it is taking to encourage Japan to, on her own, develop these capabilities by the end of this decade.

The language puts both the U.S. Government and the Government of Japan on notice that the American people want fewer promises and more action by Japan to improve her own self-defense. The required information will permit Congress to better understand whether Japan's self-defense spending performance is matching her positive-sounding promises.

Madam President, we are not asking Japan to assume new, offensively oriented military responsibilities. We are calling on her to develop only self-defense-oriented capabilities. We have received testimony from the newly appointed chairman of our Joint Chief of Staff, Adm. William J. Crowe, Jr., that Japan can increase her defense spending significantly and meet her self-defense commitments to the United States without developing the offensive forces which would threaten her neighbors.

My language, now endorsed by the full Congress, sends an appropriate message to our ally. I hope that Japan will heed it as she develops, this summer, her defense program for 1986–90. If so, she will make a meaningful contribution to her own security and that of the United States.

Finally, I was pleased to note that the conferees accepted in its entirety my amendment encouraging greater emphasis on United States/China trade development. We learned yesterday that our trade deficit for the first half of 1985 exceeded $70 billion. In June alone, we experienced the second highest 1-month trade deficit in our history; $13.4 billion. American firms deserve all the support we can give them in establishing themselves in new markets. The Chinese economy is expanding by leaps and bounds, and our European and Japanese competitors are making aggressive efforts to establish a foothold in that expanding market. China plans to spend some $14 billion over the next 2 years in its modernization campaign. I want to assure that, consistent with American security objectives, we participate in that expansion through a determined export program. Jobs in this country depend upon our ability to reach new markets with our products, and I am pleased to have authored an amendment which, I am confident, will demonstrate congressional intent regarding the promise of the Chinese market.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, the conference report on the authorization for the State Department includes dozens of very important measures, above all the means to keep one of our most vital agencies functioning smoothly and more effectively.

Among other things, the legislation includes a promising new International Scholarship Program which many Members of the Senate and House believe can address a fundamental lapse in our efforts to promote democratic values throughout the world. This program embodies a simple but compelling idea: To try to bring more future leaders from the developing countries to the United States—at a younger age, at an increased rate, and, we hope, with even more constructive results than several other programs have produced.

Under the conference agreement, we would identify and invite undergraduate students from all economic classes in Latin America, Asia, Africa, and other areas to come to this country. Following the example of the Fulbright-Hays Act, the bill does not specify the level of funding and number of scholarships at this time. Policy decisions will have to be made on the proper balance between academic and technical education. But the Scholarship Program attempts to perform a task that the Fulbright Program cannot: Reaching out to undergraduate students from lower-income families who lack opportunities in their countries but who nevertheless often become very influential individuals in the evolution of their societies.

Several authoritative commissions and surveys have documented our lack of sustained effort in this regard. Last year, the Kissinger Commission noted that the Soviet Union offers such scholarships to a far greater number of students than does the United States.

In May 1983 the Foreign Affairs Committee in the other body concluded that the Nation has virtually ignored the need for viable Exchange Programs with lesser developed countries.

We live in a great country with an exciting past, a promising future and an unmatched set of sustaining values and beliefs. Yet far too few students from other countries, particularly in the Third World, are able to come here to experience our society—both the good and the bad—firsthand. It is in our long-term interest to expose them to our freewheeling political system, to our opportunities, to our freedom of expression, to our free enterprise system. It is in our interest as well to expose our own students to the views of people from other lands.

I cannot promise that everyone who comes will be an unwavering advocate of our way of life, of our democracy. But I'm willing to wager that in the final analysis, the vast majority will get a real taste of the strengths and weaknesses of our country, and go away with a positive and lasting impression that can only help us in our relations with their countries.

This bill also includes several other provisions that strengthen our diplomatic efforts. For example, it authorizes a pilot program for spouses in the foreign service. We need to find a way to make more productive use of the education and work experience of the husbands and wives of State Department personnel abroad. And this study will help identify means to attract an increasing number of talented individuals who represent us abroad.

I am confident that this program will address a serious problem, at limited cost, with far-reaching benefits in both the morale and the effectiveness of our diplomatic efforts.

I also want to note another cost-effective provision: The increase in funds for the Asia foundation. The additional funds, up to $10.5 million, will enhance the foundation's ability to influence the evolution of democratic institutions in the region.

And I would like to underline the importance of a brief but essential technical amendment, one to bring our National Emergencies Act in line with our constitution.

The Supreme Court decided in the Chadha case that decisions of such enormous importance must be made in strict compliance with provisions of the Constitution. Chadha requires that for any act of Congress to have the full effect of law, it must be approved by both houses and signed by the President.

We must have a rational system under which the need for a national emergency may be debated in the Congress and brought to a vote in a manner consistent with our democratic process. After studying the Court's opinion and our National Emergencies Act of 1976, I concluded that we should amend the act and replace the use of the concurrent resolution for ending a national emergency with the procedure of a joint resolution.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the conference agreement on the State Department-USIA authorization bill marks a new commitment by Congress to closer relations between the United States and other countries of the Western Hemisphere, especially those in Central America.

The conference agreement on H.R. 2068 includes a number of important provisions relating to scholarships and exchange activities, but I am particularly pleased that the U.S. Information Agency is now madated to give top priority to activities in our own hemisphere. Congress recognizes that our Spanish-speaking neighbors, as well as our neighbors in Brazil and the Caribbean islands, find it easier to travel to and study in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe than to sample the good and bad sides of these marvelous United States. This imbalance is now partially corrected.

Last year the Bipartisan Commission on Central America, headed by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, made a number of recommendations concerning Education Exchange and Undergraduate Scholarship Programs. The bipartisan commission envisioned 10,000 scholars from Central America coming to the United States during the remainder of the decade, and that recommendation is made official U.S. policy by this legislation.

Specifically, the conferees agreed to the amendment offered by me and several other Senators to earmark $45 million in each of the next 2 fiscal years for scholarship and exchange programs in Latin America and the Caribbean. Of this amount, $12 million was requested for Central America Undergraduate Scholarship Programs. Although much of this $45 million would be administered through the traditional, ongoing Fulbright and Humphrey Exchange Programs, all of these funds, including the Undergraduate Program, are by law to be used in a manner consistent with the recommendations of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America.

The conferees also agreed to an amendment—section 614—that requires the Director of the USIA to report on the feasibility of greater utilization of universities located in border states with sizable Hispanic populations. The Agency for International Development and the USIA are encouraged to take advantage of the unique cultural characteristics of such areas in California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Louisiana, and Florida as they implement the provisions of the bipartisan commission.

Enactment of these amendments and my service on the bipartisan commission have marked my introduction to Latin American affairs, and I fully intend to continue to work with Chairman LUGAR and other members of the Foreign Relations Committee to encourage better understanding and cooperation between our country and our neighbors to the South. I am encouraged that so much of the work of the Kissinger Commission has been made national policy in this legislation and in the foreign aid authorization bill that was sent to the President today. I thank the managers of the bill for their help and encouragement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE AGENDA

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I would hope that in a few moments if we can, unless there is some big dispute, turn to the in-flight emergency care, S. 63. It is my understanding there was a problem that may have been resolved.

Could I ask the distinguished Senator from Ohio if that is a fact, or whether there is still a problem.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, there is still some problem.

I want to make it clear that I support Senator GOLDWATER. I just want to go further than he does.

We have been in negotiations with him. I am not here on the floor to keep the Senator from moving to the disposition of the matter. But I think if we did not do it right at the moment possibly we would get it worked out. But I am certainly not going to object to proceeding forward.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I think it could be worked out. It is better to wait to see if we cannot work it out.

Is it with reference to the Good Samaritan provision?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I think that is correct, yes. It does involve the Good Samaritan rule. But it is not what I consider one of those insurmountable hurdles that possibly some compromise could not be found.

We like what Senator GOLDWATER is attempting to do. We would just like to do a little bit more of it.

But I do not want to stand in the way of the majority leader. If he feels strongly about moving forward, I would not object to him doing so. But I think there might be advantages to not doing so for at least the moment.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I am advised that the distinguished Senator from Missouri, Senator DANFORTH, the chairman of the committee, might be able to help resolve that issue. So I will not proceed to S. 63.

What about S. 1218, the International Air Transportation Protection Act? Is that less possible for resolution?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Let me say that the Senator from Ohio has an interest in that measure and again would not stand in the way of the majority leader moving forward on it.

My concerns have to do with whether or not, since it is legislation that is so zeroed in on a specific kind of issue vis-a-vis the matter of takeovers, Congress should be acting on that. Therefore, it is entirely likely that I would address myself to that subject with some discussion, but I do not want to say that I am opposed to the majority leader proceeding forward. nor would I stand in the way of his doing so.

But once we get on the measure, I do have some concerns about the substance of it.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

We might probably move more quickly if we did not bring up either bill at the moment and try to resolve the question with S. 63 and then make a decision on the other one.

So, Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

IN-FLIGHT MEDICAL EMERGENCIES

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of S. 63, In-Flight Medical Emergency Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 63) to encourage the rendering of in-flight emergency care aboard aircraft by requiring the placement of emergency first aid medical supplies and equipment aboard aircraft and by relieving appropriate persons of liability for the provision and use of such equipment and supplies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 563

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] proposes an amendment numbered 563.

On page 4, line 9, insert "(other than a physician or an osteopath)" immediately after "personnel".

On page 4, strike all from line 24 through line 11 on page 5.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I will be happy to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Arizona for offering this amendment. As the bill was orginally submitted, there was concern that in supplying these medical kits, which I think is an extremely important step and in the right direction—which is required by the bill and which will force the FAA to act in order to see that these medical kits are on the plane—there were some provisions in it that provided for exemptions from liability which were pretty broad.

What Senator GOLDWATER'S amendment does—and I might say this has been worked out with the cooperation of the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the Commerce Committee, Senator DANFORTH, and myself—is we are limiting the limitation on liability to flight attendants, nurses, and paramedics. We are not providing an exemption from liability for the most important, and that is to the air carrier.

As a consequence, I believe that the air carriers will have a sense of responsibility to train their personnel to see to it that they are able to use some of this equipment that will now be on board.

I think all of that is a major step in the right direction. I commend the Senator from Arizona and I am happy to join with him in supporting this amendment.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I believe the Senator makes a good point. I urge the FAA to use its complete discretion in deciding what items should be included in these kits, notwithstanding the report language to the contrary.

Mr. President, this all came about some 3 years ago when a good friend of mine had a piece of meat lodged in his throat. There was no equipment on board to dislodge it. He was far to big a man to use the customary Heimlich maneuver on. Fortunately, they were flying over Ohio and the pilot was able to land before much damage was done. But the man has never been the same since. His brain was damaged from a loss of blood.

I have always asked every airline on which I fly to show me their medical kit. They all say they carry it. What they carry is what we used to use when we were Boy Scouts, a little tin box. Sometimes they have aspirin in the box; sometimes they do not. Sometimes there is adhesive tape; sometimes there is not. There is always a little wooden splint. I never figured out what that was for unless you broke your finger.

Mr. President, the airlines were very reluctant to accept this legislation. In fact, they fought it.

The airlines in our country are the only airlines in the world that do not carry medical kits.

In most of the kits you will find drugs that can be used if they are needed, but they are not released except when the captain, under whose jurisdiction and control the kit comes, is satisfied by the disclosure of a card that the person asking for the use of the kit is qualified to use it.

We all recognize that not on every airline passenger list will be doctors, although surprisingly research will show that most every airline is carrying a doctor or two or three at all times. Even that is beside the point.

The point is that when you run into the type of situation that I have described, which is not uncommon—someone having a piece of meat lodged in their throat—it is not difficult to dislodge it if you have the proper tool. They do not have that today.

I am very glad that the Senator from Ohio has assured us that we should change our language. I think the bill now is a perfectly acceptable bill. I am waiting for adoption of the amendment.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I was very happy to hear the Senator from Arizona indicate that he urges the FAA to use its complete discretion in deciding what items should be included in the kit. We went on to point out, notwithstanding the report language to the contrary.

Mr. President, I think that is important because the report language did contain some language that might have been otherwise confusing to the FAA. S. 63 does not set forth the items which should be contained, but the report language says the kits should not contain dangerous surgical instruments, such as scalpels or other incisive devices, or controlled substances as defined in the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970.

The FAA, in its notice of proposed rulemaking, states its intent to include in these medical kits scalpels and certain medications which may or may not be considered controlled substances.

Mr. President, frankly, I was concerned about that report language, concerned because it could affect safety on the airlines and the fear that drugs and sharp objects might fall into the wrong hands being the argument that was originally made for excluding those items. However, I think it is a mistake to tell the FAA not to include these items if they, through a lengthy investigation, find that such items are necessary to save lives.

I join with the Senator from Arizona in strongly saying to the FAA, "Use your discretion. Do what you think is right. Do not worry about the report language. When the bill was handled on the floor of the Senate, the author of the legislation and the Senator handling the matter on the other side of the aisle both agreed that the report language was not binding or instructing the FAA and that the FAA may use such judgment and discretion as it deems advisable with respect to what should be included in the kit."

Mr. President, I feel confident in saying that the chairman, of the Commerce Committee would agree that the report language in this instance should not be binding.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, first I would like to say that I do agree with the Senator from Ohio. Furthermore, I think he has once again demonstrated his great concern and care for some of the finer points of the legislative process. I think his suggestion relating to the discretion to be provided to the FAA is an important suggestion. I commend him and express my appreciation for his assistance in working out the details of this bill.

I also commend the Senator from Arizona. This has been a matter that has been very dear to his heart, growing out of a personal experience which he described earlier. I have no doubt that adequate medical equipment carried on aircraft, together with training of personnel who work on the aircraft, is going to save people's lives. Therefore, I compliment the Senator from Arizona for his outstanding contribution to safety in commercial aviation.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, just to conclude, I stated earlier that the United States is the only country where airlines do not carry these kits. The Canadian kit is one that I used as an example in the testimony last year. I think it sells for $200. I think the British kit goes for a little bit more than that. There are not many things that can happen to you on an airplane. If you get into real excessive turbulence there and you have not fastened your belt, it is possible to break an arm, it is possible to break a leg, in which case, it is not a question of whether you can set the bone. That can be handled later. It is a question of relieving pain. That is the reason and the only reason that some kind of pain reliever might be carried in that kit.

People do get violently sick on aircraft just as they would get sick if they are in their own homes and they need some kind of medication that would relieve that, something that would stop whatever is happening. That would be included in the kit.

The kit is not the type of kit that a doctor is going to carry to the operating room. There might be a scalpel needed in it in the case of a person receiving a large splinter of some sort on the aircraft. But what we are after is the protection of the health and safety of people flying on airliners. I am glad to see that the amendments have been made.

I am very pleased that the airlines have removed their total objection to this and we no longer have to put up with Boy Scout kits.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, as a concluding remark, I would like to say that I have appreciated working with Senator GOLDWATER and Senator DANFORTH. I very much appreciate the kind comments Senator DANFORTH saw fit to make. But I would like to thank publicly the staff members who are always at the right hand of so many of us Senators—Steve Johnson and Allen Moore for Senator DANFORTH, and Ellen Bloom, who was so helpful to me in the handling of this matter.

I think we are going to pass a good piece of legislation and I think it serves the public interest well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 563) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, on January 3, 1985, Senator GOLDWATER introduced S. 63, the "In-flight Medical Emergencies Act of 1985." He introduced this bill to encourage more effective emergency medical care aboard commercial aircraft.

This legislation directs the Federal Aviation Administration to formulate rules to require passenger aircraft to carry medical supplies for the temporary treatment of in-flight emergencies. Current medical kits are inadequate and outdated for this purpose. In addition, the bill would relieve from liability any designated airline employee or licensed medical person, other than a physician, when the kit is used in good faith, and without gross negligence or recklessness.

On May 16, the Commerce Committee unanimously reported this legislation. I commend Senator GOLDWATER for his initiative—which he has pursued through two Congresses—which promises to increase passenger aircraft safety substantially.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to give this bill their full support.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 63, the In-Flight Medical Emergencies Act. Introduced by Senator GOLDWATER in each of the last 3 Congresses, this legislation would encourage and improve the medical care for injured and ill airline passengers. It's a worthy step toward ensuring adequate safety for air travelers against the many ailments that may afflict them while in flight.

Airline medical kits have changed little since the first round-the-world flight in the 1920's. The only medical items that the FAA currently requires an airline to carry are bandages, ammonia, burn ointments, and some splints.

Times have changed and needs have changed with them. U.S. airlines currently fly some 300 million passengers per year. Many of these trips involve a significant amount of time in the air—perhaps 8 or 10 hours—time enough for an individual or crew member to suffer from a heart attack or a seizure. Clearly, an existing medical kit would be of little, if any, assistance in either situation.

Some foreign airlines carry more sophisticated kits, containing certain drugs and equipment capable of aiding ill or injured passengers. For example, an improved kit that is reportedly on the market includes medications for cardiovascular emergencies, asthma, seizures, diabetic shock, and instruments such as blood pressure cuffs, stethoscopes, and devices to stop bleeding and save choking victims.

Mr. President, S. 63 also would provide the basis for protecting certain qualified individuals from liability when they properly use these drugs and equipment. The committee heard of numerous situations aboard aircraft where qualified personnel have refused to offer their assistance for fear of being held liable should the victim not fully recover. Greater harm is done by not encouraging that individual to come to the aid of the victim. S. 63 provides that protection in hope of promoting greater medical attention for ill and injured air travelers.

I do believe that it is important to note, however, that this bill would not relieve an individual from being held liable for using a medical kit in a reckless or grossly negligent manner. Nor is that bill designed to discourage the flight crew of an aircraft with an ill passenger from making the responsible decision to land the aircraft, if such action were deemed necessary for adequate medical care.

Mr. President, we in Congress can take great pride in the fact that America is the safest Nation in the world. American consumers can nearly always rely on the premise that the products or services they use are least likely to cause them harm.

Unfortunately, when in-flight medical emergencies occur, U.S. air carriers do not rank as high as some of their foreign counterparts, simply because they do not carry some of the most basic emergency medical equipment. S. 63 will solve this problem. I urge its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to be proposed on the bill? There being no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 63), as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 63

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "In-Flight Medical Emergencies Act".

SEC. 2. As used in this Act, the term—

(1) "aboard an aircraft" means physical presence in an aircraft from the time of embarkation of any flight crewmember or passenger, through flight and culminating in the disembarkation of all flight crewmembers and passengers;

(2) "air carrier employee" means any person who is employed by an air carrier, as that term is defined in section 101(3) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1301(3));

(3) "aircraft" has the meaning given such term in section 101(5) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1301(5)), and includes—

(A) civil aircraft of the United States;

(B) aircraft of the national defense forces of the United States;

(C) any other aircraft within the United States;

(D) any other aircraft outside the United States (I) that has its next intended destination or last point of departure in the United States, if that aircraft next actually lands in the United States, or (II) having an "offense" (as defined in the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft) committed aboard, if that aircraft lands in the United States with the alleged offender aboard; and

(E) any other aircraft leased without crew to a lessee who has his principal place of business in the United States or, if such lessee has no such principal place of business, who has his permanent residence in the United States;

(4) "emergency care" means care, first aid, treatment, or assistance rendered to an injured or ill person, but does not include the operation of an aircraft;

(5) "good faith" means a reasonable opinion (even if mistaken) that a situation is such that the rendering of medical care is needed and should not be postponed;

(6) "licensed medical personnel" means any person, including a physician or nurse, who is licensed to render medical care in any State; and

(7) "State" means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the territories and possessions of the United States.

SEC. 3. Within one hundred and eighty days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration shall issue final rules requiring each aircraft carrying passengers for compensation or hire to carry sufficient first aid medical supplies and equipment for the rendering of emergency care aboard the aircraft in response to in-flight medical emergencies. Such rules shall also require that first aid medical supplies and equipment be made available to any licensed medical personnel and any air carrier employee who the Administrator has determined, in promulgating such final rules, can properly use such supplies and equipment.

Sec. 4. (a) Any licensed medical personnel (other than a physician or an osteopath) or any air carrier employee specified in section 3 of this Act who, in good faith, renders emergency care aboard an aircraft shall not be liable for any civil damages as a result of any act or omission by such licensed medical personnel or air carrier employee in rendering such care, including the rendering of emergency care from the time of disembarkation through transportation from the aircraft to a medical facility for further medical treatment or care.

(b) The relief from liability accorded in subsection (a) of this section shall not apply if any such act or omission is done recklessly or in a grossly negligent manner.

(c) Nothing in this section shall alter or abridge the authority of the pilot in command of such aircraft, including whether, where or when emergency care should be rendered.

Mr. DANFORTH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

USE OF OFFICIAL MAIL IN THE LOCATION AND RECOVERY OF MISSING CHILDREN

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, the action I am about to take has been cleared with the leaders on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 1195.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 1195) entitled "An Act to require that a portion of the mail of Congress and the executive branch include a photograph and biography of a missing child", do pass with the following amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. AUTHORITY TO USE PENALTY AND FRANKED MAIL.

(a) AUTHORITY.—Chapter 32 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 3220. Use of official mail in the location and recovery of missing children

"(a)(1) The Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, after consultation with appropriate public and private agencies, shall prescribe general guidelines under which penalty mail may be used to assist in the location and recovery of missing children. The guidelines shall provide information relating to—

"(A) the form and manner in which materials and information relating to missing children (such as biographical data and pictures, sketches, or other likenesses) may be included in penalty mail;

"(B) appropriate sources from which such materials and information may be obtained;

"(C) the procedures by which such materials and information may be obtained; and

"(D) any other matter which the Office considers appropriate.

"(2) Each executive department and independent establishment of the Government of the United States shall prescribe regulations under which penalty mail sent by such department or establishment may be used in conformance with the guidelines prescribed under paragraph (1).

"(b) The Senate Committee on rules and Administration and the House Commission on congressional Mailing Standards shall prescribe for their respective Houses rules and regulations, and shall take such other action as the Committee or Commission considers necessary and proper, in order that purposes similar to those of subsection (a) may, in the discretion of the congressional official or office concerned, be carried out by the use of franked mail sent by such official or office.

"(c) As used in this section, 'Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention' and 'Office' each means the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention within the Department of Justice, as established by section 201 of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974.".

(2) The analysis for chapter 32 of title 39, United States code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"3220. Use of official mail in the location and recovery of missing children.".

(b) DEFINITION.—Section 3201 of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (4), by striking "and";

(2) in paragraph (5), by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(6) 'missing child' has the meaning provided by section 403(1) of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 3204(a) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "section," and inserting in lieu thereof "section or section 3220(a) of this title,".

SEC. 2. ISSUANCE OF GUIDELINES, RULES, AND REGULATIONS.

(a) GUIDELINES.—The guidelines described in section 3220(a)(1) of title 39, United States Code, as added by this Act, shall be prescribed not later than ninety days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) RULES AND REGULATIONS.—The regulations described in subsection (a)(2) of section 3220 of title 39, United States Code, as added by this Act, and the rules and regulations described in subsection (b) of such section, as so added, shall be prescribed not later than one hundred and eighty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. REPORTS.

(a) GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—Not later than two years after the date of the enactment of this Act, a written report containing the matter described in subsection (b) shall be prepared by—

(1) the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention and submitted to the President, the President pro tempore of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives;

(2) the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration and submitted to the President pro tempore of the Senate; and

(3) the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards and submitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

(b) CONTENT OF REPORTS.—Each report under this section shall include—

(1) an assessment of the effectiveness with which any authority provided by section 3220 of title 39, United States Code, as added by this Act, has (during the period covered by the report) been used, insofar as such authority was subject to guidelines or rules and regulations prescribed by the reporting entity;

(2) recommendations as to whether the authority under such section should, insofar as such authority was subject to such guidelines or rules and regulations, be extended beyond the termination date otherwise applicable under section 5; and

(3) any other information which the reporting entity considers appropriate.

SEC. 4. CLARIFICATION RELATING TO COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the authority provided by section 3220(b) of title 39, United States Code, as added by this Act, shall not be considered to be subject to the authority of any agency within the executive branch of the Government of the United States to coordinate programs relating to missing children.

SEC. 5. TERMINATION DATE.

The amendments made by section 1 and any guidelines, rules, or regulations prescribed to carry out such amendments shall cease to be effective two and one-half years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to amend title 3, United States Code, to authorize the use of penalty and franked mail in efforts relating to the location and recovery of missing children.".

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I commend Chairman WILLIAM FORD of Michigan and FRANK MCCLOSKEY of Indiana for their stewardship in the House.

The House amended S. 1195 in several respects:

First, participation will be voluntary instead of mandatory; second, the program will sunset in 2½ years; and third, executive agencies will be required to publish regulations within 180 days.

I believe that this measure will accomplish the purposes that I intended—a national effort to disseminate pictures of missing children. Similar efforts in the private sector have proven successful in returning missing children to their families, and I believe that this national effort will prove as rewarding.

AMENDMENT NO. 564

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments with a further Senate amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] proposes an amendment numbered 564.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Subsection (c) of section 1 of the bill is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" before "Section 3204 (a)"; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following:

(2) Section 733 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the second sentence of the second undesignated paragraph the following: "Franks may also contain information relating to missing children as provided in section 3220 of title 39.".

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, this amendment is purely technical in nature. It amends section 733 of title 44 to conform that provision to the language and intent of S. 1195. Without this amendment Members of Congress will be prohibited from printing pictures of missing children on their franked envelopes. It is my understanding that this amendment has been cleared by both sides of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPECTER). The clerk will call the roll.

The Legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DURENBERGER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I inquire of the minority leader if he is in a position to pass the following calendar items: calendar nos. 251, 259, and 262?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, those matters have been cleared for action on this side of the aisle.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the calendar items just identified be considered en bloc and passed en bloc, and all amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

USE AND DISTRIBUTION OF CERTAIN INDIAN JUDGMENT FUNDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1349) to provide for the use and distribution of funds awarded in docket 363 to the Mdewakanton and Wahpekute Eastern or Mississippi Sioux before the U.S. Court of Claims and Claims Court, which had been reported from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

SECTION 1. (a) That notwithstanding any other law, except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the funds for awards to the Mdewakanton and Wahpekute Sioux appropriated on January 30, 1981 ($800,000), on October 15, 1982 ($591,058), and one-half of the funds appropriated on March 2, 1981 ($7,500), all in docket numbered 363 before the United States Court of Claims, and the funds appropriated on August 1, 1983 ($3,468,246.48), in docket numbered 363 before the United States Claims Court, less attorney fees and litigation expenses, and including all interest and investment income accrued, shall be divided by the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter the "Secretary") as follows:

	Percent
(1) Santee Sioux Tribe of Nebraska	58.69
(2) Flandeau Santee Sioux Tribe	15.84
(3) Prairie Island Sioux, Lower Sioux, and Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Communities of Minnesota to be divided on the basis of the respective members of each of the three communities, born on or prior to and living on the date of this Act	25.47

(b) To the share of the Santee Sioux Tribe of Nebraska in subsection (a) of this section shall be added $172,363,20, and to the share of the Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe $135,244,32, both sums appropriated on August 1, 1983, in docket numbered 363, less attorney fees and litigation expenses, and including all interest and investment income accrued.

SEC. 2. The share of the Santee Sioux Tribe of Nebraska shall be used an distributed as follows:

(a) Eighty per centum of the funds apportioned shall be used and distributed as follows:

(1) the Secretary shall make a per capita distribution of $300 to each tribal member born on or prior to and living on the date of this Act, except that those members at least sixty years of age on that date shall be paid $900.

(2) the balance of the 80 per centum portion of the funds shall be invested by the Secretary for a tribal investment fund designed to yield periodic dividend payments to all tribal members born on or prior to and living on the dates such dividend payments are declared. Only the interest and investment income accrued shall be available for dividend payments. The amounts and payments dates shall be determined by the tribal governing body with the approval of the Secretary, and the first of such payments shall not be made earlier than five years from the date of the per capita payment in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(b)(1) Twenty per centum of the funds shall be utilized for tribal social and economic development purposes, and for the establishment of a tribal burial fund; $200,000 of such program funds shall be invested by the Secretary for the purpose of establishing a burial fund utilizing the interest and investment income accrued. Such funds shall not be available for burial services until two years after date of initial investment. The tribal governing body, with the approval of the Secretary, shall develop criteria for the implementation of tribal burial services.

(2) The balance of the 20 per centum portion shall be invested by the Secretary and the interest and investment income accrued shall be utilized by the tribal governing body on a budgetary basis, with the approval of the Secretary, for programs designed to enhance the social and economic development of the tribe. None of the 20 per centum programming portion of the funds shall be available for per capita or dividend payments.

SEC. 3. The share of the Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe shall be used and distributed as follows:

(a) Twenty-five per centum of the funds shall be distributed in the form of per capita payments to each tribal member born on or prior to and living on the date of the enactment of this Act, except that those members at least sixty years of age as of that date shall be paid twice the amount of other per capita recipients.

(b) Seventy-five per centum of the funds (which includes funds previously advanced to the tribal governing body) shall be used by the tribal governing body on a budgetary basis, with the approval of the Secretary, for programs designed to enhance the social and economic development of the tribe. None of the 75 per centum programming portion of the funds shall be available for per capita payments.

SEC. 4. The share of the Prairie Island Sioux Community shall be used and distributed as follows:

(a) Eighty per centum of the funds shall be invested by the Secretary for a Tribal Investment Fund designed to yield periodic dividend payments to all tribal members born on or prior to and living on the dates such dividend payments are declared. Only the interest and investment income accrued shall be available for dividend payments. The amounts and payment dates shall be determined by the tribal governing body with the approval of the Secretary.

(b) Twenty per centum of the funds shall be utilized by tribal governing body on a budgetary basis, with the approval of the Secretary, for programs designed to enhance the social and economic development of the tribe. None of the 20 per centum programming portion of the funds shall be available for per capita or dividend payments.

SEC. 5. The share of the Lower Sioux Indian Community shall be used and distributed as follows:

(a) Eighty per centum of the funds apportioned shall be used and distributed as follows:

(1) the Secretary shall make a per capita distribution of $300 to each tribal member born on or prior to and living on the date of the enactment of this Act;

(2) one year from the date that the per capita payments in paragraph (1) of this subsection are made, an additional per capita payment of $300 shall be made to each tribal member who is at least sixty years of age living on such date.

(3) the balance of the 80 per centum portion of the funds shall be invested by the Secretary for a Tribal Investment Fund designed to yield periodic dividend payments to all tribal members born on or prior to and living on the dates such dividend payments are declared. Only the interest and investment income accrued shall be available for dividend payments. The amounts and payment dates shall be determined by the tribal governing body with the approval of the Secretary, and the first of such payments shall not be made earlier than five years from the date of the per capita payment in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(b) Twenty per centum of the funds shall be invested by the Secretary and the interest and investment income accrued shall be utilized by the tribal governing body on a budgetary basis, with the approval of the Secretary, for programs designed to enhance the social and economic development of the tribe. None of the 20 per centum programming portion of the funds shall be available for per capita or dividend payments.

SEC. 6. The share of the Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community shall be used and distributed as follows:

(a) Eighty per centum of the funds shall be invested by the Secretary for a Tribal Investment Fund designed to yield periodic dividend payments to all tribal members born on or prior to and living on the dates such dividend payments are declared. Only the interest and investment income accrued thereon shall be available for dividend payments. The amounts and payment dates shall be determined by the tribal governing body with the approval of the Secretary.

(b) Twenty per centum of the funds shall be invested by the Secretary and the interest and investment income accrued shall be utilized by the tribal governing body on a budgetary basis, with the approval of the Secretary, for programs designed to enhance the social and economic development of the tribe. None of the 20 per centum programming portion of the funds shall be available for per capita or dividend payments.

GENERAL PROVISION

SEC. 7. (a) No person shall receive benefit payments as a member of more than one of the tribes under this Act. An individual who is a member of more than one of the tribes under this Act must designate the tribe from which he or she will receive per capita or dividend payments prior to receiving a per capita or dividend payment under this Act.

(b) The per capita shares or dividend payments of living, competent adults shall be paid directly to them. The shares or payments of deceased individuals, legal incompetents and minors, shall be determined and distributed under regulations prescribed by the Secretary pursuant to the Act of October 19, 1973 (87 Stat. 466), as amended (96 Stat. 2512; 25 U.S.C. 1401 et seq.)

SEC. 8. Per capita and dividend payment distributions made pursuant to this Act shall be subject to the provisions of section 7 of the Act of October 19, 1973 (87 Stat. 466), as amended, (96 Stat. 2515; 25 U.S.C. 1407).

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN AUTHORITY OF THE MAINE-NEW HAMPSHIRE INTERSTATE BRIDGE AUTHORITY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1515) to authorize a partial transfer of the authority of the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority to the States of Maine and New Hampshire.

MAINE-NEW HAMPSHIRE INTERSTATE BRIDGE AUTHORITY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, in late June, both Maine and New Hampshire enacted identical bills regarding the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority [IBA]. These measures require congressional ratification in order to be implemented. This legislation, which I have sponsored with my colleague from New Hampshire, Senator HUMPHREY, would accomplish this.

The IBA was created by an act of Congress in 1937 to oversee the construction, maintenance, and operation of a toll bridge and approach roads between Kittery, ME, and Portsmouth, NH. This facility presently constitutes what is commonly referred to as the U.S. Route 1 bypass connecting Kittery and Portsmouth, and provides the only rail service to the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard.

The discontinuance of tolls on October 31, 1972, combined with limited revenues derived from interest on the IBA endowment account and high inflation in the last decade have forced the Authority to delay or cancel several capital improvement projects for the facility. As a result, the entire facility is experiencing increasingly rapid deterioration.

A task force comprised of representatives from both State transportation agencies analyzed the mandate, operation, and viability of the IBA. It found, after assessing numerous alternatives over the past 2 years, that the IBA cannot financially carry out its mandate. The Authority needs the assistance of both States and their available Federal funds in order to continue to provide transportation services for the shipyard and for vehicles utilizing the bypass. The State and Federal bills would provide them assistance.

The Federal legislation would constitute an amendment to the original 1937 compact as ratified by Congress. No additional funds are necessary to support this legislation as the proposed realignment of responsibilities will be funded by a combination of Authority assets and currently allocated Federal highway funds.

The provisions of the proposed act would accomplish the following:

First, transfer ownership of the approach roadways and grade separation structures—underpasses, overpasses, and so forth—to the respective State transportation agencies.

Second, allow each State to channel available Federal aid primary highway funds to the transferred portion of the facility for capital improvements and rehabilitation.

Third, require the Authority to fund the non-Federal share of such capital improvements and rehabilitation when deemed necessary by the Authority and engineering representatives of both States.

Fourth, continue the Authority's obligation for the main bridge structure as well as the roadway and railway facilities presently on the structure.

Fifth, transfer Authority employees to Main or New Hampshire's transportation agency, thus providing comparable wages and benefits.

Sixth, transfer Authority equipment presently used on the facility to the respective State transportation agencies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on a third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed; as follows:

S. 1515

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Act approved July 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 536), is amended by striking out in the first paragraph thereof, "and approaches thereto" and by inserting at the end thereof "The States of Maine and New Hampshire are authorized to assume all construction, maintenance, and operational authority over the approach roads and grade separation structures in their respective areas. As provided in Maine Private and Special Law, Chapter 38, 1985, and New Hampshire Statutes, Chapter 415, 1985, the respective States shall require the Authority to provide Authority funds for capital improvements."

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

USE AND DISTRIBUTION OF CERTAIN INDIAN JUDGMENT FUNDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1106) to provide for the use and distribution of funds appropriated in satisfaction of judgments awarded to the Saginaw Chippewa Tribe of Michigan in dockets numbered 57, 59, and 13E of the Indian Claims Commission and docket numbered 13F of the United States Claims Court, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments, as follows:

(The parts of the bill intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets, and the parts of the bill intended to be inserted are shown in italic.)

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE: DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the "Saginaw Chippewa Indian Tribe of Michigan Distribution of Judgment Funds Act".

(b) For purpose of this Act—

(1) The term "tribe" means the Saginaw Chippewa Indian Tribe of Michigan.

(2) The term "Tribal Council" means the Saginaw Chippewa Tribal Council.

(3) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

ABROGATION OF PRIOR PLAN

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding Public Law 93-134 (25 U.S.C. 1401 et seq.) or any plan prepared or regulation promulgated by the Secretary pursuant to such law—

(1) the funds appropriated in satisfaction of judgments awarded the tribe in dockets numbered 59 and 13E of the Indian Claims Commission, and

(2) the balance of any undistributed funds appropriated in satisfaction of the judgments awarded the tribe in docket numbered 57 of the Indian Claims Commission and docket numbered 13F of the United States Claims Court, any any interest or investment income accrued on the amount of such funds on or before the date of any transfer made pursuant to section 5 or 8 (less any attorney's fees and court costs), shall be distributed and used in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

INVESTMENT FUND

SEC. 3. (a)(1) The tribe, through the Tribal Council, [hereby authorized to] shall establish a trust fund for the benefit of the tribe which shall be known as the "Investment Fund". The principal of the Investment Fund shall consist of—

(A) the funds transferred by the Secretary to the Tribal Council pursuant to section 5(a),

(B) the amounts required to be included in principal under subsection (c) or section 8(c),

(C) such portion of the funds paid to the Tribal Council under section 8(a) as the Tribal Council may elect to add to the principal, and

(D) such other amounts of the income of the Investment Fund which the Tribal Council may elect to retain and add to the principal.

(2) The Tribal Council shall be the trustee of the Investment Fund and shall administer the Investment Fund in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

[(b)(1) The principal of the Investment Fund shall be used exclusively for—

[(A) investments (including loans to enrolled members of the tribe), or

[(B) expenditures which the Tribal Council determines are reasonably related to—

[(i) economic development beneficial to the tribe or enrolled members of the tribe, or

[(ii) the development of tribal resources.]

(b)(1) The principal of the Investment Fund shall be used exclusively for investments or expenditures which the Tribal Council determines—

(A) are reasonably related to—

(i) economic development beneficial to the tribe, (or)

(ii) the development of tribal resources, or

(B) are otherwise financially beneficial to the tribe.

(2) Under no circumstances shall any part of the principal of the Investment Fund be distributed in the form of per capita payments to the members of the tribe or used or expended for purposes other than investment or economic development projects and programs.

(3) None of the income of the Investment Fund may be distributed or expended before the date that is 18 months after the date on which the amendments to the constitution of the tribe referred to in section 4(a) are adopted and ratified by the qualified voting members of the tribe (within the meaning of such constitution).

(c) At least 10 percent of the income earned on the Investment Fund during each of the first ten fiscal years of the Investment Fund beginning after such Investment Fund is established shall be retained in the Investment Fund and become part of the principal of the Investment Fund.

(d)(1) The Investment Fund shall be maintained as a separate book account.

(2) The books and records of the Investment Fund shall be audited at least once during each fiscal year of the Investment Fund (or before the end of the 3-month period beginning on the last day of such fiscal year) by an independent certified public accounting firm which shall prepare a report on the results of such audit. Such report shall be treated as a public document of the tribe and a copy of the report shall be available for inspection by any enrolled member of the tribe.

TRIBAL CONSTITUTION

[SEC. 4. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the tribe may, without the approval of the Secretary, adopt any amendments to the constitution of the tribe which were approved by the Tribal Council on April 15, 1985, in resolution L and O-03-85.]

SEC. 4. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Tribal Council may call a tribal election and, pursuant to such election, the tribe may adopt (without the approval of the Secretary) any amendments to the constitution of the tribe which were approved by the Tribal Council on April 15, 1985, in resolution L and O-03-85.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to Senate Resolution 205, the budget waiver to accompany S. 974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 205) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 974.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 205) was agreed to as follows:

S. RES. 205

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 974, a bill to provide for protection and advocacy for mentally ill persons. Such waiver is necessary to permit the authorization of funds for allotments for the purpose of establishing systems for the protection and advocacy of the established rights of mentally ill persons.

PROTECTION AND ADVOCACY FOR MENTALLY ILL PERSONS ACT OF 1985

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to Calendar No. 244, S. 974, Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act of 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 974) to provide for protection and advocacy for mentally ill persons.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act of 1985".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) mentally ill persons are vulnerable to abuse and serious injury;

(2) mentally ill persons are subject to neglect, including lack of treatment, adequate nutrition, clothing, health care, and adequate discharge planning; and

(3) State systems for monitoring compliance with respect to the established rights of mentally ill persons vary widely and are frequently inadequate.

(b) The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to ensure that the established rights of mentally ill persons are protected; and

(2) to assist States to establish and operate a protection and advocacy system for mentally ill persons which will—

(A) protect and advocate the established rights of such persons through activities to ensure the enforcement of the Constitution and Federal and State statutes; and

(B) investigate reported incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill persons.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. (a) For purposes of this Act:

(1) The term "abuse" means any act or failure to act by an employee of a residential facility which was performed, or which was failed to be performed, knowingly, recklessly, or intentionally, and which caused, or may have caused, physical injury to a mentally ill person, and includes acts such as—

(A) the rape or sexual assault of a mentally ill person;

(B) the striking of a mentally ill person;

(C) the use of excessive force when placing a mentally ill person in bodily restraints; and

(D) the use of bodily or chemical restraints on a mentally ill person which is not in compliance with Federal and State laws and regulations.

(2) The term "eligible system" means the system established in a State to protect and advocate the rights of persons with developmental disabilities under part C of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act.

(3) The term "mentally ill person" means an individual—

(A) for whom a primary diagnosis of mental illness has been made by a mental health professional qualified under the laws of the State; and

(B) who is an inpatient or resident in, and who resides for 24 hours a day in, a residential facility.

(4) The term "neglect" means a negligent act or omission by any person responsible for providing services in a residential facility which caused or may have caused physical or mental injury to a mentally ill person or which placed a mentally ill person at risk of physical or mental injury, and includes an act or omission such as the failure to establish or carry out an appropriate individual program plan or treatment plan for a mentally ill person, the failure to provide adequate nutrition, clothing, or health care to a mentally ill person, or the failure to provide a safe environment for a mentally ill person.

(5) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(6) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(b) The Secretary may not promulgate regulations which define the terms "mentally ill person" and "residential facility" for purposes of this Act.

BILL OF RIGHTS

SEC. 4. It is the sense of the Congress that, as previously stated in title V of the Mental Health Systems Act, each State should review and revise, if necessary, its laws to ensure that mental health patients receive the protection and services they require, and that in making such review and revision, States should take into account the recommendations of the President's Commission on Mental Health and the following:

(1) A person admitted to a program or facility for the purpose of receiving mental health services should be accorded the following:

(A) The right to appropriate treatment and related services in a setting and under conditions that—

(i) are the most supportive of such person's personal liberty; and

(ii) restrict such liberty only to the extent necessary consistent with such person's treatment needs, applicable requirements of law, and applicable judicial orders.

(B) The right to an individualized, written, treatment or service plan (such plan to be developed promptly after admission of such person), the right to treatment based on such plan, the right to periodic review and reassessment of treatment and related service needs, and the right to appropriate revision of such plan, including any revision necessary to provide a description of mental health services that may be needed after such person is discharged from such program or facility.

(C) The right to ongoing participation, in a manner appropriate to such person's capabilities, in the planning of mental health services to be provided such person (including the right to participate in the development and periodic revision of the plan described in subparagraph (B)), and, in connection with such participation, the right to be provided with a reasonable explanation, in terms and language appropriate to such person's condition and ability to understand, of—

(i) such person's general mental condition and, if such program or facility has provided a physical examination, such person's general physical condition;

(ii) the objectives of treatment;

(iii) the nature and significant possible adverse effects of recommended treatments;

(iv) the reasons why a particular treatment is considered appropriate;

(v) the reasons why access to certain visitors may not be appropriate; and

(vi) any appropriate and available alternative treatments, services, and types of providers of mental health services.

(D) The right not to receive a mode or course of treatment, established pursuant to the treatment plan, in the absence of such person's informed, voluntary, written consent to such mode or course of treatment, except treatment—

(i) during an emergency situation if such treatment is pursuant to or documented contemporaneously by the written order of a responsible mental health professional; or

(ii) as permitted under applicable law in the case of a person committed by a court to a treatment program or facility.

(E) The right not to participate in experimentation in the absence of such person's informed, voluntary, written consent, the right to appropriate protections in connection with such participation, including the right to a reasonable explanation of the procedure to be followed, the benefits to be expected, the relative advantages of alternative treatments, and the potential discomforts and risks, and the right and opportunity to revoke such consent.

(F) The right to freedom from restraint or seclusion, other than as a mode or course of treatment or restraint or seclusion during an emergency situation if such restraint or seclusion is pursuant to or documented contemporaneously by the written order of a responsible mental health professional.

(G) The right to a humane treatment environment that affords reasonable protection from harm and appropriate privacy to such person with regard to personal needs.

(H) The right to confidentiality of such person's records.

(I) The right to access, upon request, to such person's mental health care records, except such person may be refused access to—

(i) information in such records provided by a third party under assurance that such information remain confidential; and

(ii) specific material in such records if the health professional responsible for the mental health services concerned has made a determination in writing that such access would be detrimental to such person's health, except that such material may be made available to a similarly licensed health professional selected by such person and such health professional may, in the exercise of professional judgment, provide such person with access to any or all parts of such material or otherwise disclose the information contained in such material to such person.

(J) The right, in the case of a person admitted on a residential or inpatient care basis, to converse with others privately, to have convenient and reasonable access to the telephone and mails, and to see visitors during regularly scheduled hours, except that, if a mental health professional treating such person determines that denial of access to a particular visitor is necessary for treatment purposes, such mental health professional may, for a specific, limited, and reasonable period of time, deny such access if such mental health professional has ordered such denial in writing and such order has been incorporated in the treatment plan for such person. An order denying such access should include the reasons for such denial.

(K) The right to be informed promptly at the time of admission and periodically thereafter, in language and terms appropriate to such person's condition and ability to understand, of the rights described in this section.

(L) The right to assert grievances with respect to infringement of the rights described in this section, including the right to have such grievances considered in a fair, timely, and impartial grievance procedure provided for or by the program or facility.

(M) Notwithstanding subparagraph (J), the right of access to (including the opportunities and facilities for private communication with) any available—

(i) rights protection service within the program or facility;

(ii) rights protection service within the State mental health system designed to be available to such person;

(iii) system to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill person established under section 5; and

(iv) qualified advocate;

for the purpose of receiving assistance to understand, exercise, and protect the rights described in this section and in other provisions of law.

(N) The right to exercise the rights described in this section without reprisal, including reprisal in the form of denial of any appropriate, available treatment.

(O) The right to referral as appropriate to other providers of mental health services upon discharge.

(2)(A) The rights described in this section should be in addition to and not in derogation of any other statutory or constitutional rights.

(B) The rights to confidentiality of and access to records as provided in subparagraphs (H) and (I) of paragraph (1) should remain applicable to records pertaining to a person after such person's discharge from a program or facility.

(3)(A) No otherwise eligible person should be denied admission to a program or facility for mental health services as a reprisal for the exercise of the rights described in this section.

(b) Nothing in this section should—

(i) obligate an individual mental health or health professional to administer treatment contrary to such professional's clinical judgment;

(ii) prevent any program or facility from discharging any person for whom the provision of appropriate treatment, consistent with the clinical judgment of the mental health professional primarily responsible for such person's treatment, is or has become impossible as a result of such person's refusal to consent to such treatment;

(iii) require a program or facility to admit any person who, while admitted on prior occasions to such program or facility, has repeatedly frustrated the purposes of such admissions by withholding consent to proposed treatment; or

(iv) obligate a program or facility to provide treatment services to any person who is admitted to such program or facility solely for diagnostic or evaluative purposes.

(C) In order to assist a person admitted to a program or facility in the exercise or protection of such person's rights, such person's attorney or legal representatives should have reasonable access to—

(i) such person;

(ii) the areas of the program or facility where such person has received treatment, resided, or had access; and

(iii) pursuant to the written authorization of such person, the records and information pertaining to such person's diagnosis, treatment, and related services described in paragraph (1)(I).

(D) Each program and facility should post a notice listing and describing, in language and terms appropriate to the ability of the persons to whom such notice is addressed to understand, the rights described in this section of all persons admitted to such program or facility. Each such notice should conform to the format and content for such notices, and should be posted in all appropriate locations.

(4)(A) In the case of a person adjudicated by a court of competent jurisdiction as being incompetent to exercise the right to consent to treatment or experimentation described in subparagraph (D) of (E) or paragraph (1), or the right to confidentiality of or access to records described in subparagraph (H) or (I) of such paragraph, or to provide authorization as described in paragraph (3)(C)(iii), such right may be exercised or such authorization may be provided by the individual appointed by such court as such person's guardian or representative for the purpose of exercising such right or such authorization.

(B) In the case of a person who lacks capacity to exercise the right to consent to treatment or experimentation under subparagraph (D) or (E) of paragraph (1), or the right to confidentiality of or access to records described in subparagraph (H) or (I) of such paragraph, or to provide authorization as described in paragraph (3)(C)(iii), because such person has not attained an age considered sufficiently advanced under State law to permit the exercise of such right or such authorization to be legally binding, such right may be exercised or such authorization may be provided on behalf of such person by a parent or legal guardian of such person.

(C) Notwithstanding subparagraphs (A) and (B), in the case of a person admitted to a program or facility for the purpose of receiving mental health services, no individual employed by or receiving any remuneration from such program or facility should act as such person's guardian or representative.

PROTECTION AND ADVOCACY SYSTEM

SEC. 5. (a)(1) The eligible system of a State may apply for an allotment for each fiscal year under this section.

(2) Payments from such allotment shall be used by such eligible system to establish in the State a system which complies with subsection (b) to—

(A) protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons; and

(B) investigate reported incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill persons.

(3) All agencies of a State (other than the eligible system) may not use more than a total of 5 percent of any allotment under this section for any fiscal year for the costs of monitoring the administration of the system established under this section.

(4) An eligible system may not use more than 5 percent of any allotment under this section for any fiscal year for the costs of providing technical assistance and training to carry out this section.

(5)(A) In carrying out this section, an eligible system may use its allotment under this section to enter into contracts with State agencies and nonprofit organizations which operate throughout the State. In order to be eligible for a contract under this paragraph—

(i) such an agency shall be independent of any agency which provides treatment or services (other than advocacy services) to mentally ill persons; and

(ii) such an agency or such an organization shall have the capacity to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons.

(B) In carrying out subparagraph (A), an eligible system should consider entering into contracts with organizations which, on the date of enactment of this Act, provide protection or advocacy services to mentally ill persons.

(b)(1) A system established in a State under subsection (a) to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons shall—

(A) have the authority to—

(i) investigate reported incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill persons; and

(ii) pursue administrative, legal, and other appropriate remedies to ensure the protection of mentally ill persons who are receiving treatment in the State;

(B) be independent of any agency which provides treatment or services (other than advocacy services) to mentally ill persons;

(C) have access to residential facilities for mentally ill persons in the State;

(D) in accordance with paragraph (2), have access to all records of—

(i) any person who is a client of the system if such person or the guardian of such person has authorized the system to have such access; and

(ii) any person—

(I) who by reason of the mental or physical condition of such person is unable to authorize the system to have such access;

(II) who does not have a legal guardian or for whom legal guardian is the State; and

(III) with respect to whom a complaint has been received by the system;

(E) be provided with a copy of each annual survey report and plan of corrections for cited deficiencies made pursuant to titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act with respect to any residential facility for mentally ill persons within 30 days after the completion of each such report or plan;

(F) establish a board which complies with paragraph (3) to advise the system on policies and priorities to be carried out in protecting and advocating the established rights of mentally ill persons; and

(G) on January 1, 1987, and January 1 of each succeeding year, prepare and transmit to the Secretary and the head of the State mental health agency a report describing the activities, accomplishments, and expenditures of the system during the most recently completed fiscal year.

(2)(A)(i) A system established in the State under this section which has access to records pursuant to paragraph (1)(D) shall not disclose information to the person who is the subject of the record if the mental health professional responsible for supervising the provision of mental health service to such person has made a written determination that the disclosure of such information to such person would be detrimental to such person's health, except as provided in clause (ii).

(ii) A person to whom disclosure of information has been denied under clause (i), or the guardian of such a person, may select a mental health professional with qualifications similar to the mental health professional who made the determination with respect to such person under such clause. The mental health professional selected under this clause shall review such information and determine, based on the professional judgment of such mental health professional, whether to disclose all or part of such information to such person.

(B) A system established in a State under this section which, pursuant to paragraph (1)(D), has access to records which, under Federal or State law, are required to be maintained in a confidential manner by a provider of mental health services, shall maintain the confidentiality of such records to the same extent as is required of the provider of such services.

(3) Each board established under paragraph (1)(F) shall include attorneys, mental health professionals, individuals from the public who are knowledgeable about mental illness, a provider of mental health services, persons who have received or are receiving mental health service, and family members of such persons.

(4)(A) Prior to instituting any legal action in a Federal or State court on behalf of a mentally ill person, a system established in a State under this section or a State agency or nonprofit organization which entered into a contract under subsection (a)(5) shall exhaust in a timely manner all administrative remedies where appropriate. If the pursuit of administrative remedies has not resolved any matter with respect to such person within a reasonable time, such system, agency, or organization may pursue alternative remedies, including the initiation of a legal action.

(B) The provisions of subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any legal action instituted by a system established in a State under this section or a State agency or nonprofit organization which entered into a contract under subsection (a)(5) in order to prevent or eliminate imminent serious harm to a mentally ill person.

(5) If the prevailing party in any legal action is represented by a system established in a State under this section or a State agency or a nonprofit organization which has entered into a contract under subsection (a)(5), the attorney's fees which may be awarded to such system, agency, or organization shall be computed at an hourly rate which—

(A) does not exceed the prevailing market hourly rate for the services of attorneys in the area in which the legal action is adjudicated; and

(B) is based on the actual costs incurred by such system, agency, or organization in providing such representation, including the percentage of the annual salary of each attorney providing such representation attributable to the number of hours incurred by such attorney in providing such representation and the percentage of the annual overhead expenses of such system, agency, or organization attributable to the provision of such representation.

(c)(1)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretary shall allot the amounts available for allotment under this section for a fiscal year to eligible systems on the basis of a formula prescribed by the Secretary which is based equally—

(i) on the population of each State in which an eligible system has been established, and

(ii) on the population of each such State weighted by its relative per capita income.

(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), the term "relative per capita income" means the quotient of the per capita income of the United States and the per capita income of the State, except that if the State is Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands, the quotient shall be considered to be one.

(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1)—

(A) the allotment of the eligible system of each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall not be less than $125,000; and

(B) the allotment of the eligible system of each of Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands shall not be less than $67,000.

(3) The amount of an allotment to an eligible system for a fiscal year which the Secretary determines will not be required by the eligible system during the period for which it is available for the purpose for which allotted shall be available for reallotment by the Secretary from time to time, on such date or dates as the Secretary may fix (but not earlier than thirty days after the Secretary has published notice of the intention of the Secretary to make such reallotment in the Federal Register), to other eligible systems with respect to which such a determination has not been made, in proportion to the original allotments of such eligible systems for such fiscal year, but with such proportionate amount for any of such other eligible systems being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates such eligible system needs and will be able to use during such period; and the total of such reductions shall be similarly reallotted among the eligible systems whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amount so reallotted to an eligible system for a fiscal year shall be deemed to be a part of its allotment under paragraphs (1) and (2) for such fiscal year.

(d) No allotment may be made to an eligible system unless an application therefor is submitted to the Secretary. Each such application shall contain—

(1) assurances that amounts paid to such system from an allotment under this section will be used to supplement and not to supplant the level of non-Federal funds available in the State in which such eligible system is established to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons; and

(2) such other information as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

(e) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make payments to each eligible system from its allotment under subsection (c). Any amount paid to an eligible system for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available to such system for the purposes for which it was made for the next fiscal year.

(f)(1) The Secretary shall include in each report required under section 107(c) of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act a separate statement describing—

(A) the activities, accomplishments, and expenditures of systems to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons supported with payments from allotments under this section, including—

(i) a specification of the total number of mentally ill persons served by such systems;

(ii) a description of the types of activities undertaken by such systems;

(iii) a description of the types of residential facilities for mentally ill persons with respect to which such activities are undertaken;

(iv) a description of the manner in which such activities are initiated; and

(v) a description of the accomplishments resulting from such activities;

(B) a description of the relationships between—

(i) systems to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons supported with payments from allotments under this section; and

(ii)(I) activities conducted by States to protect and advocate such rights; and

(II) mechanisms established by residential facilities for mentally ill persons to protect and advocate such rights; and

(C) recommendations for activities and services to improve the protection and advocacy of the established rights of mentally ill persons and a description of needs for such activities and services which have not been met by systems established under this Act.

(2) In preparing the statement required by paragraph (1), the Secretary shall use and include information submitted to the Secretary in the reports required under subsection (b)(1)(G).

(g) The Secretary may provide technical assistance to eligible systems with respect to activities carried out under this section.

(h) The Secretary shall carry out this section through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration.

(i) For allotments under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, $10,500,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $11,025,000 for fiscal year 1988.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 6. Title V of the Mental Health Systems Act is repealed.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 7. This Act and the repeal made by this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support S. 974, the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act of 1985. On April 23, I introduced this bill as a specific response to the findings of a Subcommittee on the Handicapped investigation into conditions in institutions for mentally disabled persons. This investigation and 3 days of hearings documented the tragic fact that the institutionalized mentally disabled citizens of our Nation are often the victims of serious abuse and neglect. The legislation before us today will go a long way toward alleviating the intolerable situations in which too many of our mentally disabled citizens find themselves.

The bill provides for the establishment of a protection and advocacy system for the mentally ill in each State, similar to the protection and advocacy system already established for our developmentally disabled citizens. It will thus afford mentally ill persons access to a system which will assist them in securing their rights which are guaranteed under Federal and State statutes and the U.S. Constitution. The bill also enumerates a bill of rights for the mentally ill—rights which currently exist as title V of the Mental Health Systems Act.

This bill before us today is a bill which was developed after hours of negotiating between Senators and their staffs of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources. I would particularly like to thank Senator ORRIN HATCH, chairman of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, for his assistance and support in developing the compromise bill, which is so critical for our Nation's mentally ill citizens. I urge my colleagues to support this bill, and thus send a message to the Nation that Congress will not tolerate the abuse and neglect of the most vulnerable citizens of our country.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act which we are considering today is critically important to the thousands of individuals who are mentally ill and living in 24-hour facilities across our country. By adopting S. 974 we will provide the resources and the mechanisms to protect these vulnerable individuals from abuse and neglect and to advocate for their rights.

I am sure that most of my colleagues are aware that Senator WEICKER recently held a series of hearings on the prevalence of abuse and neglect in institutions for the mentally ill. The extent of this neglect and the brutality of the abuse that exists in these settings is inexcusable and unconscionable. S. 974 provides $10 million for the first year for the establishment of a protection and advocacy system for mentally ill people who reside in 24-hour facilities. These systems will be administered by the existing Developmental Disabilities Protection and Advocacy Programs in each State. The D.D. Protection and Advocacy Program has been highly successful in providing a wide range of protection and advocacy services to individuals who are developmentally disabled and I believe that this advocacy expertise will be a valuable asset in serving people who are mentally ill. At the same time, I strongly urge each D.D. Program to employ individuals who have a strong background and expertise in working with individuals who are mentally ill. Along with providing protection against abuse and neglect for mentally ill individuals in 24-hour facilities this bill also protects their rights by providing them access to the full range of remedies to protect those rights.

The Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act provides critical protection to people who reside in 24-hour facilities and represents an important step in providing the best services to these individuals. I believe that it is also of primary importance to ensure that mentally ill persons in the community are provided with the best and most appropriate services within their community. I intend to work toward improving these community services and resources so that mentally ill people can realize their fullest potential as contributing members of their communities and individuals who are now residing in institutions will be afforded the full range of necessary services in a community setting.

Although I strongly support this bill, I am deeply concerned about one provision which provides for lower attorney's fees for publicly funded attorneys who represent prevailing individuals or their legal guardians in cases which protect the rights of mentally ill people in 24-hour facilities. Should this provision remain, individuals who are mentally ill and who are poor will see their access to court remedies to protect their rights seriously limited. Should this provision remain, we will set up an unfair two-tiered system of protection for mentally ill people—the rich will be assured access to protective remedies but the poor will be limited and often times denied this access.

I believe that every American citizen should be provided with equitable access to the protection of their rights without regard to their economic status, their individual differences or their individual life challenges. I intend to pursue this matter vigorously in conference and I ask my colleagues to carefully consider the ramifications of this provision.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate has acted so quickly and brought to the floor S. 974 the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act. I am an original cosponsor of this legislation and feel that it is vital to ensure the protective rights of all mentally ill persons residing in institutions throughout this country. This legislation is the result of diligent efforts and I want to commend my fellow colleagues on the Labor and Human Resources Committee for their fine work. There is one issue however, which I must concede limits my wholehearted endorsement of this critical legislation. The bill includes one provision which I believe must be deleted. Language exists in the bill which limits attorneys' fees available to nonprofit, publicly funded organizations which provide legal assistance, yet will not limit fees to privately funded attorneys. I fear that this double standard sets a dangerous precedent in all future cases litigated in this area, and will consequently have a particularly negative impact on low income individuals most dependent on legal representation by publicly funded attorneys.

Last April, the Subcommittee on the Handicapped held 3 days of hearings on the care and treatment of mentally ill persons residing in State operated facilities. Furthermore, Senator WEICKER released a report which documented a 9-month staff investigation into the conditions of 31 State-run facilities. A major finding of the report was that a lack of sufficient funding sources seriously hurts the ability of public advocacy groups to adequately investigate all complaints and to adequately advocate for the rights of all mentally ill persons residing in these facilities. I would like to point out Mr. President, that money awarded to publicly funded attorneys is recycled back into the organization for which the attorney works and is then used to expand services to low-income individuals. As a lawyer who has worked in a public defenders office let me assure you that I have witnessed firsthand that under our present system, offices which provide legal assistance to the poor, encounter an overwhelming demand for their services and unfortunately have limited resources to meet this demand. Let me emphatically stress the seriousness of this problem. And let me point out that any additional funds for advocacy, such as attorneys' fees, made available to expand legal services to our Nation's poor-disabled, is money that is very well spent.

I would also like to mention last year's U.S. Supreme Court decision Blum versus Stenson, where the Court ruled unanimously that under the Civil Rights Attorneys Act of 1976 all attorney's fees—including publicly funded attorney's fees—must be calculated according to prevailing market rates. I strongly urge that the Congress take a closer look at this issue before it mandates that fees to public attorneys be computed at a rate below the prevailing market rate.

Last, I would like to note, that a cap placed on publicly funded attorney's fees is likely to deter institutions from settling their cases expeditiously. Institutions which are not faced with having to pay more substantial attorneys' fees at the fair market rate will have an increased incentive to draw judicial proceedings out in an attempt to force plaintiffs to abandon their case. Mr. President, I offered an amendment at the Labor and Human Resources Committee markup that would have deleted the cap on publicly funded attorneys. The amendment was narrowly defeated—7 to 9. The closeness of this vote makes evident the fact that on the one hand we have a plethora of unanswered questions regarding an attorneys' fees cap and on the other hand we have the opportunity to pass a critical piece of legislation designed to protect the rights of mentally ill persons residing in insitutions—including their right to access the courts. I fear that by limiting the attorneys' fee for those who represent the poor, we are ultimately limiting the rights of poor people who are mentally ill and abused. This blatant double standard weakens S. 974.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this vital bill, the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act, and I also strongly urge my House counterparts to uphold the rights of all handicapped individuals, rich and poor, and draft their legislation without a cap on publicly funded attorneys' fees.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support S. 974 as reported from the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources. S. 974, the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act of 1985, provides members of our society who are mentally ill a stronger voice in ensuring their protection against possible abuse.

S. 974, the Protection and Advocacy of Mentally Ill Persons Act, provides for the expansion of the existing Developmentally Disabled Protection and Advocacy Councils within each State to provide assistance to mentally ill persons. It has authorization of $10 million for fiscal year 1986, $10.5 million for fiscal year 1987 and $11.75 million for fiscal year 1988.

All in all, this legislation will go a long way in protecting those citizens of our country who, like each of us, is entitled to freedom from abuse and neglect.

This legislation, unanimously approved by the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources on July 10, 1985, was spearheaded by Senator LOWELL WEICKER. As chairman of the Subcommittee on the Handicapped, Senator WEICKER has highlighted through this legislation the need for further protections against abuse and neglect for the mentally ill who reside in residential facilities.

The version of S. 974 approved by the committee and before the Senate today represents a compromise which retains the strong protections for the mentally ill patients who are victims of abuse while it ensures that appropriate steps will be taken to resolve expeditiously possible problems of abuse. I appreciate Senator WEICKER'S willingness to work with me and other colleagues on the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee in addressing concerns about the language of the original bill.

Without reservation, I urge my colleagues to approve S. 974 and the accompaning budget waiver as reported from the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources. This legislation is a credit to Senator WEICKER who has a track record of initiating legislative protections for the handicapped citizens of our country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 974), as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 974

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act of 1985".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) mentally ill persons are vulnerable to abuse and serious injury;

(2) mentally ill persons are subject to neglect, including lack of treatment, adequate nutrition, clothing, health care, and adequate discharge planning; and

(3) State systems for monitoring compliance with respect to the established rights of mentally ill persons vary widely and are frequently inadequate.

(b) The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to ensure that the established rights of mentally ill persons are protected; and

(2) to assist States to establish and operate a protection and advocacy system for mentally ill persons which will—

(A) protect and advocate the established rights of such persons through activities to ensure the enforcement of the Constitution and Federal and State statutes; and

(B) investigate reported incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill persons.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. (a) For purposes of this Act:

(1) The term "abuse" means any act or failure to act by an employee of a residential facility which was performed, or which was failed to be performed, knowingly, recklessly, or intentionally, and which caused, or may have caused, physical injury to a mentally ill person, and includes acts such as—

(A) the rape or sexual assault of a mentally ill person;

(B) the striking of a mentally ill person;

(C) the use of excessive force when placing a mentally ill person in bodily restraints; and

(D) the use of bodily or chemical restraints on a mentally ill person which is not in compliance with Federal and State laws and regulations.

(2) The term "eligible system" means the system established in a State to protect and advocate the rights of persons with developmental disabilities under part C of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act.

(3) The term "mentally ill person" means an individual—

(A) for whom a primary diagnosis of mental illness has been made by a mental health professional qualified under the laws of the State; and

(B) who is an inpatient or resident in, and who resides for 24 hours a day in, a residential facility.

(4) The term "neglect" means a negligent act or omission by any person responsible for providing services in a residential facility which caused or may have caused physical or mental injury to a mentally ill person or which placed a mentally ill person at risk of physical or mental injury, and includes an act or omission such as the failure to establish or carry out an appropriate individual program plan or treatment plan for a mentally ill person, the failure to provide adequate nutrition, clothing, or health care to a mentally ill person, or the failure to provide a safe environment for a mentally ill person.

(5) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(6) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(b) The Secretary may not promulgate regulations which define the terms "mentally ill person" and "residential facility" for purposes of this Act.

BILL OF RIGHTS

SEC. 4. It is the sense of the Congress that, as previously stated in title V of the Mental Health Systems Act, each State should review and revise, if necessary, its laws to ensure that mental health patients receive the protection and services they require, and that in making such review and revision, States should take into account the recommendations of the President's Commission on Mental Health and the following:

(1) A person admitted to a program or facility for the purpose of receiving mental health services should be accorded the following:

(A) The right to appropriate treatment and related services in a setting and under conditions that—

(i) are the most supportive of such person's personal liberty; and

(ii) restrict such liberty only to the extent necessary consistent with such person's treatment needs, applicable requirements of law, and applicable judicial orders.

(B) The right to an individualized, written, treatment or service plan (such plan to be developed promptly after admission of such person), the right to treatment based on such plan, the right to periodic review and reassessment of treatment and related service needs, and the right to appropriate revision of such plan, including any revision necessary to provide a description of mental health services that may be needed after such person is discharged from such program or facility.

(C) The right to ongoing participation, in a manner appropriate to such person's capabilities, in the planning of mental health services to be provided such person (including the right to participate in the development and periodic revision of the plan described in subparagraph (B)), and, in connection with such participation, the right to be provided with a reasonable explanation, in terms and language appropriate to such person's condition and ability to understand, of—

(i) such person's general mental condition and, if such program or facility has provided a physical examination, such person's general physical condition;

(ii) the objectives of treatment;

(iii) the nature and significant possible adverse effects of recommended treatments;

(iv) the reasons why a particular treatment is considered appropriate;

(v) the reasons why access to certain visitors may not be appropriate; and

(vi) any appropriate and available alternative treatments, services, and types of providers of mental health services.

(D) The right not to receive a mode or course of treatment, established pursuant to the treatment plan, in the absence of such person's informed, voluntary, written consent to such mode or course of treatment, except treatment—

(i) during an emergency situation if such treatment is pursuant to or documented contemporaneously by the written order of a responsible mental health professional; or

(ii) as permitted under applicable law in the case of a person committed by a court to a treatment program or facility.

(E) The right not to participate in experimentation in the absence of such person's informed, voluntary, written consent, the right to appropriate protections in connection with such participation, including the right to a reasonable explanation of the procedure to be followed, the benefits to be expected, the relative advantages of alternative treatments, and the potential discomforts and risks, and the right and opportunity to revoke such consent.

(F) The right to freedom from restraint or seclusion, other than as a mode or course of treatment or restraint or seclusion during an emergency situation if such restraint or seclusion is pursuant to or documented contemporaneously by the written order of a responsible mental health professional.

(G) The right to a humane treatment environment that affords reasonable protection from harm and appropriate privacy to such person with regard to personal needs.

(H) The right to confidentiality of such person's records.

(I) The right to access, upon request, to such person's mental health care records, except such person may be refused access to—

(i) information in such records provided by a third party under assurance that such information shall remain confidential; and

(ii) specific material in such records if the health professional responsible for the mental health services concerned has made a determination in writing that such access would be detrimental to such person's health, except that such material may be made available to a similarly licensed health professional selected by such person and such health professional may, in the exercise of professional judgment, provide such person with access to any or all parts of such material or otherwise disclose the information contained in such material to such person.

(J) The right, in the case of a person admitted on a residential or inpatient care basis, to converse with others privately, to have convenient and reasonable access to the telephone and mails, and to see visitors during regularly scheduled hours, except that, if a mental health professional treating such person determines that denial of access to a particular visitor is necessary for treatment purposes, such mental health professional may, for a specific, limited, and reasonable period of time, deny such access if such mental health professional has ordered such denial in writing and such order has been incorporated in the treatment plan for such person. An order denying such access should include the reasons for such denial.

(K) The right to be informed promptly at the time of admission and periodically thereafter, in language and terms appropriate to such person's condition and ability to understand, of the rights described in this section.

(L) The right to assert grievances with respect to infringement of the rights described in this section, including the right to have such grievances considered in a fair, timely, and impartial grievance procedure provided for or by the program or facility.

(M) Notwithstanding subparagraph (J), the right of access to (including the opportunities and facilities for private communication with) any available—

(i) rights protection service within the program or facility;

(ii) rights protection service within the State mental health system designed to be available to such person;

(iii) system to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill persons established under section 5; and

(iv) qualified advocate;

for the purpose of receiving assistance to understand, exercise, and protect the rights described in this section and in other provisions of law.

(N) The right to exercise the rights described in this section without reprisal, including reprisal in the form of denial of any appropriate, available treatment.

(O) The right to referral as appropriate to other providers of mental health services upon discharge.

(2)(A) The rights described in this section should be in addition to and not in derogation of any other statutory or constitutional rights.

(B) The rights to confidentiality of and access to records as provided in subparagraphs (H) and (I) of paragraph (1) should remain applicable to records pertaining to a person after such person's discharge from a program or facility.

(3)(A) No otherwise eligible person should be denied admission to a program or facility for mental health services as a reprisal for the exercise of the rights described in this section.

(B) Nothing in this section should—

(i) obligate an individual mental health or health professional to administer treatment contrary to such professional's clinical judgment;

(ii) prevent any program or facility from discharging any person for whom the provision of appropriate treatment, consistent with the clinical judgment of the mental health professional primarily responsible for such person's treatment, is or has become impossible as a result of such person's refusal to consent to such treatment;

(iii) require a program or facility to admit any person who, while admitted on prior occasions to such program or facility, has repeatedly frustrated the purposes of such admissions by withholding consent to proposed treatment; or

(iv) obligate a program or facility to provide treatment services to any person who is admitted to such program or facility solely for diagnostic or evaluative purposes.

(C) In order to assist a person admitted to a program or facility in the exercise or protection of such person's rights, such person's attorney or legal representatives should have reasonable access to—

(i) such person;

(ii) the areas of the program or facility where such person has received treatment, resided, or had access; and

(iii) pursuant to the written authorization of such person, the records and information pertaining to such person's diagnosis, treatment, and related services described in paragraph (1)(I).

(D) Each program and facility should post a notice listing and describing, in language and terms appropriate to the ability of the persons to whom such notice is addressed to understand, the rights described in this section of all persons admitted to such program or facility. Each such notice should conform to the format and content for such notices, and should be posted in all appropriate locations.

(4)(A) In the case of a person adjudicated by a court of competent jurisdiction as being incompetent to exercise the right to consent to treatment or experimentation described in subparagraph (D) or (E) of paragraph (1), or the right to confidentiality of or access to records described in subparagraph (H) or (I) of such paragraph, or to provide authorization as described in paragraph (3)(C)(iii), such right may be exercised or such authorization may be provided by the individual appointed by such court as such person's guardian or representative for the purpose of exercising such right or such authorization.

(B) In the case of a person who lacks capacity to exercise the right to consent to treatment or experimentation under subparagraph (D) or (E) of paragraph (1), or the right to confidentiality of or access to records described in subparagraph (H) or (I) of such paragraph, or to provide authorization as described in paragraph (3)(C)(iii), because such person has not attained an age considered sufficiently advanced under State law to permit the exercise of such right or such authorization to be legally binding, such right may be exercised or such authorization may be provided on behalf of such person by a parent or legal guardian of such person.

(C) Notwithstanding subparagraphs (A) and (B), in the case of a person admitted to a program or facility for the purpose of receiving mental health services, no individual employed by or receiving any remuneration from such program or facility should act as such person's guardian or representative.

PROTECTION AND ADVOCACY SYSTEM

SEC. 5. (a)(1) The eligible system of a State may apply for an allotment for each fiscal year under this section.

(2) Payments from such allotment shall be used by such eligible system to establish in the State a system which complies with subsection (b) to—

(A) protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons; and

(B) investigate reported incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill persons.

(3) All agencies of a State (other than the eligible system) may not use more than a total of 5 percent of any allotment under this section for any fiscal year for the costs of monitoring the administration of the system established under this section.

(4) An eligible system may not use more than 5 percent of any allotment under this section for any fiscal year for the costs of providing technical assistance and training to carry out this section.

(5)(A) In carrying out this section, an eligible system may use its allotment under this section to enter into contracts with State agencies and nonprofit organizations which operate throughout the State. In order to be eligible for a contract under this paragraph—

(i) such an agency shall be independent of any agency which provides treatment or services (other than advocacy services) to mentally ill persons; and

(ii) such an agency or such an organization shall have the capacity to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons.

(B) In carrying out subparagraph (A), an eligible system should consider entering into contracts with organizations which, on the date of enactment of this Act, provide protection or advocacy services to mentally ill persons.

(b)(1) A system established in a State under subsection (a) to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons shall—

(A) have the authority to—

(i) investigate reported incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill persons; and

(ii) pursue administrative, legal, and other appropriate remedies to ensure the protection of mentally ill persons who are receiving treatment in the State;

(B) be independent of any agency which provides treatment or services (other than advocacy services) to mentally ill persons;

(C) have access to residential facilities for mentally ill persons in the State;

(D) in accordance with paragraph (2), have access to all records of—

(i) any person who is a client of the system if such person or the guardian of such person has authorized the system to have such access; and

(ii) any person—

(I) who by reason of the mental or physical condition of such person is unable to authorize the system to have such access;

(II) who does not have a legal guardian or for whom legal guardian is the State; and

(III) with respect to whom a complaint has been received by the system;

(E) be provided with a copy of each annual survey report and plan of corrections for cited deficiencies made pursuant to titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act with respect to any residential facility for mentally ill persons within 30 days after the completion of each such report or plan;

(F) establish a board which complies with paragraph (3) to advise the system on policies and priorities to be carried out in protecting and advocating the established rights of mentally ill persons; and

(G) on January 1, 1987, and January 1 of each succeeding year, prepare and transmit to the Secretary and the head of the State mental health agency a report describing the activities, accomplishments, and expenditures of the system during the most recently completed fiscal year.

(2)(A)(i) A system established in a State under this section which has access to records pursuant to paragraph (1)(D) shall not disclose information to the person who is the subject of the record if the mental health professional responsible for supervising the provision of mental health services to such person has made a written determination that the disclosure of such information to such person would be detrimental to such person's health, except as provided in clause (ii).

(ii) A person to whom disclosure of information has been denied under clause (i), or the guardian of such a person, may select a mental health professional with qualifications similar to the mental health professional who made the determination with respect to such person under such clause. The mental health professional selected under this clause shall review such information and determine, based on the professional judgment of such mental health professional, whether to disclose all or part of such information to such person.

(B) A system established in a State under this section which, pursuant to paragraph (1)(D), has access to records which, under Federal or State law, are required to be maintained in a confidential manner by a provider of mental health services, shall maintain the confidentiality of such records to the same extent as is required of the provider of such services.

(3) Each board established under paragraph (1)(F) shall include attorneys, mental health professionals, individuals from the public who are knowledgeable about mental illness, a provider of mental health services, persons who have received or are receiving mental health services, and family members of such persons.

(4)(A) Prior to instituting any legal action in a Federal or State court on behalf of a mentally ill person, a system established in a State under this section or a State agency or nonprofit organization which entered into a contract under subsection (a)(5) shall exhaust in a timely manner all administrative remedies where appropriate. If the pursuit of administrative remedies has not resolved any matter with respect to such person within a reasonable time, such system, agency, or organization may pursue alternative remedies, including the initiation of a legal action.

(B) The provisions of subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any legal action instituted by a system established in a State under this section or a State agency or nonprofit organization which entered into a contract under subsection (a)(5) in order to prevent or eliminate imminent serious harm to a mentally ill person.

(5) If the prevailing party in any legal action is represented by a system established in a State under this section or a State agency or a nonprofit organization which has entered into a contract under subsection (a)(5), the attorney's fees which may be awarded to such system, agency, or organization shall be computed at an hourly rate which—

(A) does not exceed the prevailing market hourly rate for the services of attorneys in the area in which the legal action is adjudicated; and

(B) is based on the actual costs incurred by such system, agency, or organization in providing such representation, including the percentage of the annual salary of each attorney providing such representation attributable to the number of hours incurred by such attorney in providing such representation and the percentage of the annual overhead expenses of such system, agency, or organization attributable to the provision of such representation.

(c)(1)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretary shall allot the amounts available for allotment under this section for a fiscal year to eligible systems on the basis of a formula prescribed by the Secretary which is based equally—

(i) on the population of each State in which an eligible system has been established, and

(ii) on the population of each such State weighted by its relative per capita income.

(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), the term "relative per capita income" means the quotient of the per capita income of the United States and the per capita income of the State, except that if the State is Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands, the quotient shall be considered to be one.

(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1)—

(A) the allotment of the eligible system of each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall not be less than $125,000; and

(B) the allotment of the eligible system of each of Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands shall not be less than $67,000.

(3) The amount of an allotment to an eligible system for a fiscal year which the Secretary determines will not be required by the eligible system during the period for which it is available for the purpose for which allotted shall be available for reallotment by the Secretary from time to time, on such date or dates as the Secretary may fix (but not earlier than thirty days after the Secretary has published notice of the intention of the Secretary to make such reallotment in the Federal Register), to other eligible systems with respect to which such a determination has not been made, in proportion to the original allotments of such eligible systems for such fiscal year, but with such proportionate amount for any of such other eligible systems being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates such eligible system needs and will be able to use during such period; and the total of such reductions shall be similarly reallotted among the eligible systems whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amount so reallotted to an eligible system for a fiscal year shall be deemed to be a part of its allotment under paragraphs (1) and (2) for such fiscal year.

(d) No allotment may be made to an eligible system unless an application therefor is submitted to the Secretary. Each such application shall contain—

(1) assurances that amounts paid to such system from an allotment under this section will be used to supplement and not to supplant the level of non-Federal funds available in the State in which such eligible system is established to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons; and

(2) such other information as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

(e) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make payments to each eligible system from its allotment under subsection (c). Any amount paid to an eligible system for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available to such system for the purposes for which it was made for the next fiscal year.

(f)(1) The Secretary shall include in each report required under section 107(c) of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act a separate statement describing—

(A) the activities, accomplishments, and expenditures of systems to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons supported with payments from allotments under this section, including—

(i) a specification of the total number of mentally ill persons served by such systems;

(ii) a description of the types of activities undertaken by such systems;

(iii) a description of the types of residential facilities for mentally ill persons with respect to which such activities are undertaken;

(iv) a description of the manner in which such activities are initiated; and

(v) a description of the accomplishments resulting from such activities;

(B) a description of the relationships between—

(i) systems to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill persons supported with payments from allotments under this section; and

(ii)(I) activities conducted by States to protect and advocate such rights; and

(II) mechanisms established by residential facilities for mentally ill persons to protect and advocate such rights; and

(C) recommendations for activities and services to improve the protection and advocacy of the established rights of mentally ill persons and a description of needs for such activities and services which have not been met by systems established under this Act.

(2) In preparing the statement required by paragraph (1), the Secretary shall use and include information submitted to the Secretary in the reports required under subsection (b)(1)(G).

(g) The Secretary may provide technical assistance to eligible systems with respect to activities carried out under this section.

(h) The Secretary shall carry out this section through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration.

(i) For allotments under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, $10,500,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $11,025,000 for fiscal year 1988.

WILLIAM P. HORN TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR FOR FISH AND WILDLIFE AND PARKS

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I am pleased to bring before the Senate the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources that the Senate consent to the nomination of William P. Horn to be Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fish and Wildlife and Parks.

On July 24, 1985, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources held a hearing to consider the nominee, and on July 30, 1985, the committee ordered the nomination favorably reported by a vote of 16 yeas, 0 nays.

Mr. President, Mr. Horn brings practical experience to this position as he currently serves the Interior Department as Deputy Under Secretary. His present responsibility includes coordinating and directing the Department's Alaska-related programs. He is serving as Chief Coordinator of Negotiations for the Indian Water Claims Task Force and a Chairman of the Great Lakes Fisheries Commission.

Mr. President, Mr. Horn's current position follows a lengthy career in public service within the executive branch and as a House of Representatives staff member. His extensive experience in natural resource management and his commitment to preserving our national park, wilderness, and wildlife resources certainly qualifies him to fulfill the role of Assistant Secretary.

Mr. President, this nominee has fully complied with the committee's rules requiring submittal of a financial disclosure report and a detailed information statement. On behalf of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, I am pleased to recommend Senate approval of this Presidential nomination.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM P. HORN, TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF INTERIOR FOR FISH AND WILDLIFE AND PARKS

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I have the honor today of supporting the President's nominee to the position of Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fish and Wildlife and Parks, Mr. William P. Horn, of McLean, VA.

Bill has more than 15 years of experience working with natural resource issues in the Department of the Interior, the Department of Commerce and the House Interior Committee. For the past 4½ years at the Department of the Interior he has been charged with primary responsbility for implementing the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act and for coordinating the Department's programs in Alaska.

As the chief spokesman in Interior on Alaskan issues, Bill achieved a reputation for fairness, integrity, and professionalism. He continually demonstrated his understanding of the complexity of those issues and the need to achieve a balance between the demands made by competing interests.

As Assistant Secretary, Bill will be in charge of our National Parks Programs and Fish and Wildlife Programs. This is a particularly important position for Alaska because we have 57 million acres of national parks and 75 million acres of wildlife refuges. Two-thirds of our Nation's national park acreage and nearly three-quarters of our wildlife refuge land is in Alaska.

I think it is interesting to reflect on the fact that 15 percent of the land in Alaska is in the National Park System and more than 20 percent is in the National Wildlife Refuge System. As such, Bill Horn will have jurisdiction over 35 percent of the land in my State. His decisions will have an immense impact on Alaskans. Because of his past experience with Alaskan issues, I am confident that those decisions will rest upon a sound understanding of Alaska's unique nature.

In addition to his responsibilities for Alaska programs, Bill has served on the International Great Lakes Fishery Commission and has been the Department's chief negotiator on several disputes involving Indian fishing, and land and water claims. His dedication to the goal of achieving a fair resolution and his personal attention to the issues resulted in settlement of a number of protracted controversies. Among these was the United States/Canada Salmon Treaty which had been negotiated on and off for the past 20 years until Bill got involved and brought about a favorable resolution.

His record of success in resolving these very controversial disputes is indicative of the skills which he brings to his work.

Bill's professional experiences will be a significant asset to the Department of the Interior and to this Nation in the coming years. Our national parks are faced with ever-increasing use by the public at the same time that general revenue funding for the maintenance of those parks is shrinking. Balancing the demands of the public with the need to reduce the Federal deficit and protect the natural resources enshrined in the national parks and wildlife refuges will require considerable skill and ability. Bill Horn has demonstrated that he possesses these qualities in abundance.

Mr. President, I can think of few other nominees that are as qualified to hold the position to which they have been nominated as Bill Horn is to be Assistant Secretary of Interior for Fish and Wildlife and Parks. I encourage my colleagues to join with me in supporting his nomination.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I am pleased to bring before the Senate the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources that the Senate consent to the nomination of Russell F. Miller to be Deputy Inspector General of the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation for a term of 7 years.

On July 24, 1985, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources held a hearing to consider the nominee, and on July 30, 1985, the committee ordered the nomination favorably reported by a vote of 16 yeas, 0 nays.

Mr. Miller brings direct experience to this position in his present role as the SFC's Director of Investigations. He has served in that capacity since August 1982. Prior to joining the SFC, Mr. Miller served with the CIA for 29 years in various management positions, where he was involved with information analysis and investigative activities.

Mr. President, the SFC is moving into the contract monitoring phase of its activities which will involve increased responsibilities in the audit and oversight functions of the Office of the Inspector General. Effective implementation of the SFC's contracts for financial assistance is essential to the successful development of a national Synthetic Fuels Program. Mr. Miller's experience will be helpful to the Office of the Inspector General In carrying out its audit and inspection activities, and certainly qualifies him to be Deputy Inspector General.

Mr. President, this nominee has fully complied with the Committee's rules requiring submittal of a financial disclosure report and a detailed information statement. On behalf of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, I am pleased to recommend Senate approval of this Presidential nomination.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nominations were confirmed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given its consent to these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

U.S. WHEAT TO THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I note in the RECORD of Tuesday under a bullet, meaning the statement was submitted for printing by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, my good friend from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], he makes a statement regarding the question of what has been the administration's policy as exercised by the Department of State in relation to the Philippines regarding wheat and rice sales this year.

Let me make that clear, Mr. President. These are sales to the Philippines of the huge quantities of wheat that we have available and of some quantities of rice—not as huge—that we have available. Let me just state some of my observations as compared to the statement of my distinguished friend from Indiana.

I stated the facts on July 15 regarding the situation with the Government in the Philippines. It was this: the Philippines have bought wheat from us consistently each year for the past 7 years or longer, but never have they bought during that period of time from any other countries. In other words, our special relationship that has existed with the Philippines included their willingness, not under any duress from us, to buy whatever wheat was used in their country from the United States. I find that to be rather remarkable. It was not a signed agreement, is not a signed agreement, it is just a reflection of the Philippines' willingness to purchase wheat from the United States and only from the United States.

In application for a purchase this year, they were stalled. The Department of State said that they wanted some conditions assigned to that sale. Those conditions had to do with how the Philippines handle the wheat after it reaches the Philippines in terms of who could mill it and whether that milling itself would be under Government control and then whether the distribution of the product, the flour, would be under Government control.

The Government of the Philippines in April, under a statement made by their President Marcos, said that those conditions were agreeable with the Government of the Philippines.

A third request, a third point of the Department of State was that no Government agency of the Philippines would be involved in the purchase of the wheat. That, indeed, did run into a snag. There are internal reasons for that, Mr. President, and there are reasons that are internal to the Government of the Philippines.

It is not unusual, since all except one of the 60-odd countries that purchase wheat from the United States purchase through a government agency, their own government agency. That is the way to do it—whether it is Russia or the countries of the Common Market, the European Community—or whether it is Pakistan or South Korea, Taiwan, China, or other countries. All except one country out of the 60-odd that purchase American wheat purchase it through a government agency.

The one exception that does not use a government agency that purchases wheat from the United States is Guatemala, which for their own reasons, purchases it only through the private enterprise system.

It was not, in the case of the Government of the Philippines, unusual; in fact, they were doing the usual thing of countries that purchase American wheat. So, Mr. President, despite what my learned and distinguished friend from Indiana, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. LUGAR], states, the delay on the part of the Department of State in blocking the sale of wheat to the Philippines was a delay that was unnecessary and extremely impractical. In addition to that, Mr. President, it was highly detrimental to the wheat producers in this country. It was highly detrimental to the U.S. Government in two ways. First of all, it delayed the sale of part of the U.S. surplus commodities on which we have to pay storage. The fact that we do not have a consistent trade policy is extremely, extremely harmful to our Government, to our farmers, and I might say, Mr. President, it is extremely harmful to the entire economy of the United States.

The trade imbalance that we are experiencing in this country is made up of many significant factors and this is one of them. If you delay the legitimate sale of surplus commodities in this country, it is extremely harmful to the economy of the United States. With every dollar in red ink that is added to our current trade imbalance, this economy is set back another notch.

Now, there was a further harm done. Flour was not available in some areas of the Philippines. I would suppose that it was many areas, but I do not know that for a fact. I only know for certain that flour had become unavailable in some areas of the Philippines, and so added to that was the harm it did to consumers in the Philippines.

Now, secondly, Mr. President, as if it was not enough to delay the sale of wheat, the State Department also imposed conditions on the sale of rice to the Philippines. There was an agreement for $40 million in U.S. rice. Some rice producers in California were advised by the Department of Agriculture that this sale was in the offing, so they made arrangements that it would be available for sale. This one happened to be an agreement under Public Law 480, title I.

The conditions which the State Department imposed on and which held up this particular sale involved the use of fertilizer on the rice crop in the Philippines.

Now, I question, in practical terms, whether the State Department is in a position to advise the Philippine Government or the Philippine farmers how they handle or obtain the fertilizer that they apply to their own rice crop. So on the surface it would appear to be, to put it kindly, rather nebulous advice but, nevertheless, it was a condition of the sale, which the agriculture people and farmers in the Philippines said was totally unworkable—and it is certainly meddling in the internal workings of the farmers there and the government in the Philippines—as a result of the conditions that exist in the Philippines. So it was modified eventually.

The remarks made by the Senator from Indiana would indicate that the sale was quickly wrapped up because it only took 90 days. That is not quickly wrapping up a sale because it only took 90 days, and the delay was to the detriment of the rice producers of this country.

Now, again, Mr. President, obviously, if there is antagonism and impracticality imposed by the conditions that the State Department wants before a sale can be completed, it is unduly harmful to the producers in this country and to the Government of this country and to the general wellbeing of the American economy.

Mr. President, people might wonder why a huge rice producing country like the Philippines would be in need of rice. Let me point out that they have had some real problems with typhoons and with their economy in the Philippines where fertilizer unless heavily subsidized is not available in sufficient quantities for their own rice producers, so they have had some short crops over there. They raise three crops of rice on each of the ricelands of the Philippines, so hopefully it is only a temprorary shortage, and I say that hopefully from their standpoint. But nevetheless, when they needed the rice, they again turned to the United States and were thwarted in an expeditious purchase of that rice as a result of the conditions imposed by the State Department. While those conditions were different than those imposed by the State Department in terms of wheat, they nevertheless add up to the same thing, the State Department meddling unduly.

So from the standpoint of what is correct and what is logical and practical for this country, the State Department has done us an injustice.

It is stated by the distinguished chairman that nothing was damaged, that nobody was hurt. Well, yes, we are hurt. Not only do we have the problem with our own economy and our own producers, we also have the added problem of accomplishments we would like to see the Government of the Philippines achieve in the next few months going to the election in 1987 when the term of President Marcos expires. Because we have the two significant bases, Subic Bay for the Navy and Clark Air Force Base, in the Philippines under lease agreements with the Government of the Philippines, the whole strategic setup for defending our interests in Southeast Asia depends upon the bases themselves and the cooperation of the Philippine Government.

We would like to make certain that the democratic processes within the Philippines in the coming elections—and I use the plural now, Mr. President, because in 1986 there will be local important elections involving the governors in provinces and the mayors in towns and cities, and that occurs just next year; whereas, the election for president falls in 1987. We want to be sure that the democratic processes in those elections are handled in a way that permits the Filipino people to have the opportunity to cast their vote for candidates they prefer. Their last election caused resounding encouragement, because more than 80 percent of the people of the Philippines voted for their representation in their legislative body, which they call Batasan.

So that is of paramount interest to us, in our strong and historic alliance we have had with the Filipinos, and it is of great interest to all the Filipinos in America.

Almost a million Filipino people reside and work in the United States, and their interest, as well as that of the 52 million people who live in the Philippines, is that democracy continue, that the stress within the Philippines which they have had since the Aquino assassination, be lessened, and that the economic setbacks they have had over the past couple of years can be healed over, and that the Filipinos can march forward with a government in which they have lasting confidence.

Second, there is a question of the insurgency in the Philippines. While it is relatively small at this time, it is of grave concern, and it is in our best interests as well as the interests of the people of the Philippines that that insurgency not result in any bloodshed or choas, but that the democratic processes be allowed to go forward, to have the type of government and the type of people in office with which they will feel confident.

So, in holding down the insurgency and not letting it become a chaotic situation in the Philippines, it is in our best interests that the stability, in terms of who is handling the armed forces and who is handling the constabulary throughout the country, be in the hands of a trusted person—currently in the hands of General Ramos, who not only has the confidence of the people in the Philippines but also has our confidence as being a man of integrity, a man of great ability, and a person who can be completely trusted.

These two significant points are of great concern to us; and to the extent that we may antagonize the people of the Philippines with our State Department interfering with food sales, it is a jeopardy that cannot be set aside lightly.

Getting back to those sales, let me point out that no wheat is produced in the Philippines; that as long as we are the suppliers and the sole suppliers of the 52 million people who reside in the Philippines, we have a steady customer who is really worthwhile holding on to and satisfying.

The amount of wheat that Philippines generally purchase from the United States would ordinarily go up each year. Products made from wheat are foods that the Filipino people need and appreciate. It adds to their nutritional levels and its use is on the increase, if we do not interfere and if they are capable of making purchases from the United States for the wheat.

The conclusion that my learned friend from Indiana, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, leads to in his statement is that these are only mild adjustments made by our State Department on behalf of our Government that will be beneficial to the Filipinos. Let me state that what we really fear is that what the State Department calls mild adjustments is infuriating meddling in the operation of another country.

I am not stating that because I like to state it. I am stating it because it is so.

What we have lost in the Philippines by this blockage of wheat sales is another sale coming on within 6 or 7 months after that. We have just lost about 6 months of consumption of American wheat in the Philippines. But there is a much greater fear. There is a fear that the meddling of the State Department on sales of American agricultural products will become even much larger.

There have been reasons why sales of American agricultural products have been on a decline in the last couple of years, and those reasons are varied. But one of those reasons has been the lack of attention paid to possible sales when a country applies. This is one example, but I fear that there may be many others.

I wish to read a statement from U.S. Wheat Associates. U.S. Wheat Associates represent the United States in many different countries to expedite sales of American wheat in those particular countries. I am not sure in how many countries U.S. Wheat has established offices, but I would expect it to exceed a score of countries. One of them is the Philippines. Let me read what the president, Winston Wilson, wrote to me on July 25 of this year:

> We are very much concerned that this may be a trend on the part of the State Department which could lead to problems in markets other than the Philippines. There seems to be a perception in the U.S. State Department that food agencies in other countries are inherently bad and serve as obstacles to economic development.

Mr. President, the U.S. Wheat Associates share with me and with others in the United States the fear that what we have witnessed in this delay in the wheat sale to the Philippines is becoming a policy of the U.S. Government in actions by the State Department in representing us.

Now, the facts that I have recited here, including the statement from the U.S. Wheat Associates, are the clear situation that is involved in this wheat sale. The facts that I have stated regarding the rice sale are not facts that I am singularly or the only one privy to. Nor is my concern the only concern.

I have spoken to representatives of the rice industry who until recently were top level officials in the Department of Agriculture and who in private life now represent rice interests in the United States.

They found it very peculiar and very objectionable to have the State Department interfere with this Philippine rice sale. They were not in a position to expedite it in any way, or were unsuccessful in attempting to expedite it.

But I think the discussion that we have had on the Senate floor concerning this should be fair warning to the State Department that American producers of these commodities that we have in surplus in the United States do not want the State Department to treat lightly these applications by foreign countries to purchase American commodities.

Whatever the goals of the State Department in these instances if there were any merit to it at all, it was clumsily handled and delayed the sales. That cannot be tolerated, and the circumstances that have led to this should not be repeated. It is my intention that we get all of the facts surrounding these two sales.

It has been almost 3 weeks since I wrote the Secretary of State asking for all of the memoranda and correspondence by the State Department with our Ambassador in Manila and with the Government of the Philippines, either from our State Department here in Washington, from officials here, or from our Ambassador in Manila to the Government of the Philippines. So far I have not received it.

I would expect that the delay in the response from the Secretary of State is probably because he is gathering up the information. But when that information is available, I would like to bring it to the attention of both the Agriculture Committee and the Foreign Relations Committee for their review, because if we can review a case history on these particular types of delays and blockages of sales of U.S. commodities to a foreign country, maybe we can make a series of recommendations that are straightforward and positive to the State Department on how they should be reviewing these matters and what their action should be in the future.

Mr. President, we must overcome this trade imbalance that we are suffering under now. Part of overcoming that trade imbalance will be an increase in sales of American agriculture commodities abroad. Part of it will come from the use of Public Law 480 and section 416 and food donations of surplus commodities to other countries. We need to expedite those in both instances whether they are sales or donations and the State Department handling of them is very much key to the successful expediting and the increase in disposal of U.S. surplus commodities.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE FARM BILL

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, the majority leader is on the floor and in an aside to me suggested that we bring up the agriculture bill. There is one agriculture bill on the calendar, S. 1040. While nothing in the bill as it is on the calendar seems to be very earthshaking, I suspect that if the bill is called up, perhaps an amendment would be offered to it that dealt with the farm program for this coming year and the years thereafter.

Mr. President, if that is done, it would be my hope and my strong desire that the commodities section in the amendment would include holding firm, holding steady, holding on an even keel for 4 years or whatever the life of the bill is, which, I assume will be 4 years, on the target prices for farm producers of this country; not washing them out, not diluting them, just holding them steady at the current levels.

Mr. President, that is a very significant point in our new farm bill. The situation in the committee is this: Last Thursday, on a 9 to 8 vote, we established that freeze on target prices in the package. As soon as that was established, we seemed to have run into an immovable object about going further with the commodities title of the bill. But, nevertheless, it was the correct procedure.

This morning, in an effort to get back into the commodities section, I offered an amendment that held firm the target price arrangement with a modification, a concession to some of the concerns expressed both by the Department of Agriculture and by the majority side of the committee. That concern was the budget impact and what could be done to hold that down. So the modification that I offered had to do with allowing the last 2 years, that would be for crop years 1988 and 1989, that the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, could pay 5 percent of the deficiency payments in commodities.

Now the Department of Agriculture, to be honest about their reaction, was not impressed. They still are very much holding for the position of only a 1-year target price at the same level and after that drop it down in steps each year. The strong objection to that procedure by farm producers would be an obvious objection. But there is another objection coming from those who finance agriculture, whether they are banks or production credit associations, or those who deal with selling the inputs to farmers to produce their crops. And their objection is this: With the situation as it is, in terms of farm credit now, that the cash flow of farmers throughout the foreseeable future—not meaning the next decade and the next decade after that, but meaning the near term future of the next 4 years—is extremely important. And their strong recommendation to all of us is this: That cash flow can only be maintained by either improving prices or at least holding the support mechanism, the so-called safety net, at the same level or maybe even have slight improvements.

For smaller producers we have made some light improvements but that is offset by reducing the Government payments to the larger producers so we come out even on that. But we do help smaller producers by what looks like an increase of their gross income by 6 or 7 percent, and that would be of some help to those farmers who have a credit crisis. All farmers it seems like are approaching a credit crisis if they are not in it already. So what we are doing we regard as extremely important.

This morning, after offering that amendment in committee which I have just described regarding holding the target prices at the same level but allowing the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture during the last 2 years of a 4-year bill to pay 5 percent of the deficiency payment in commodities, there was a substitute offered by the distinguished majority leader.

That substitute was to hold target prices only for 2 years and forget about the other 2 years—let those target prices go down during the last 2 years of the 4-year bill. That carried by 9 to 8. What is pending again before the committee before we adjourned at noon or 12:35 or thereabouts was my same motion, to add to the last 2 years the same type of protection but to permit the Secretary of Agriculture at his discretion 5 percent in commodities and deficiency payment. We expected to go back into a meeting this afternoon at 3 o'clock. That has been canceled now I understand by the chairman. So where we stand now is the way I described it.

All of us in the committee on the Democratic side, plus one of my Republican colleagues on the committee, are ready to vote on that particular proposal. I am told that the vote will be in the majority, and we are very close to wrapping up this particular title of the bill—the commodity title.

We are willing to have it called up on the floor in that form. It could be in the form of an amendment. If so, the other concerns that we have if it is called up by the majority leader, is that the other titles to the bill which are conservation, food stamps, agricultural research title, the agricultural export title, and the farm credit title will be completed, and that the finalization of the commodity title will not take place until those other titles are available, are on the floor, and are joined up with the commodity title so that we have a complete farm bill.

That is a rather unusual circumstance. But there has been some concern from some Senators and from some House Members as well as farmers themselves who produce winter wheat—that they know the parameters at least of the program or what at least is the best judgment of the committees of the House and the Senate. So when it comes time to seeding next year's winter wheat crop, either the last few days of August or some time during the month of September, they have some idea what might be the final version of the farm bill regarding wheat. That concern is understandable.

I share that concern but I must say this, also: That my constituents who produce wheat as well as other constituents who are involved or have some interest in the farm bill tell me that we must by all means get a sound, strong farm bill out on the floor and pass it.

We cannot do that before the end of this week. So it likely will hang over until September. But that is the major concern as far as I can determine—get a strong, sound bill.

We are really talking about whether or not it is the type of bill that will enable them to continue to farm. I think the proposal we have regarding the target prices for 4 years or the life of the bill is an extremely vital part of any bill that is finally passed by the Senate and finally signed by the President. To do less would mean hampering many operations.

There is a group that should not be forgotten. That is the livestock producers of this country. The bill is not complete until we take up some of the slack in the law that we have regarding the impact upon their markets of imported meat or imported livestock into this country. It is to the best interests not of just the U.S. producers but of our friends to the north, Canada, that we stabilize the livestock markets.

Beef and pork in particular have been under severe stress. Beef that is being sold now for U.S. consumers is at such low levels that it reflects prices that were available to producers in the late sixties. It is a terrible disaster that is being experienced by those that have to sell cattle now. I understand the same is true of pork producers and correction of that must be part of the bill also.

We must have some restraints on the amount of beef and pork being brought into the United States at this time. That goes for live animals as well. Much of the live animals come from Canada, but it is in the best interests of both countries, the United States and Canada, that we stabilize this market now, and some steps must be taken to do that.

So we have our work cut out for us in this Congress to take action on a good, strong bill. At some point the majority leader may add his vast amount of wisdom on these matters for enlightenment so that we know what we can expect from the Senate, and what producers can expect.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Montana. I will attempt to respond, if I can, to the Senator's very fine statement. I urge Members. We still have a number of bills we would like to dispose of before we leave here on Friday: Mentally Ill Persons Act of 1985; Mississippi Sioux Indian bill; energy and water appropriations; legislative appropriations; supplemental appropriations conference report; we hope to do that later today; budget resolution conference report, if available; South Africa conference report, if available; Genocide Treaty; and the farm bill. It may be that we will not be able to finish all of these by the close of business Friday—any Friday. [Laughter.] But in any event, we would like to dispose of as many of these as possible.

FARM LEGISLATION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, with reference to the farm legislation, I am at liberty to say that I have just had a meeting with the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator HELMS. We are not going to meet, as I understand the chairman, this afternoon. We now have approved in the Senate Agriculture Committee by a 9 to 8 vote a 2-year freeze on target prices and a 4-, 5,- or 6-year bill. I guess we have not decided yet whether it is 4, 5, or 6 years.

As I listened to the distinguished Senator from Montana, if it were a 4-year freeze it would be a good bill. If it were a 2-year freeze it would not be a good bill. For a 1-year freeze it would be less bad to the farmer, and anything less than that would be even less acceptable.

It would seem to me that if we were agreed that we have a pretty good bill, regardless of whether it is a 2-year freeze or a 4-year freeze, there ought to be a willingness to take it up. The farmer needs to know about the first year. He does not much care about the fourth year. Right now he is worrying about the first year.

Right now if all we are worrying about is whether there will be a 5-percent freeze in the first year and less in the third and fourth year, that would be something to debate on the floor. It would mean a great deal to the American wheat producer if he were in a position to know that we had a pretty good agreement, whether or not it was a 1-year freeze or a 4-year freeze.

I believe we are kidding ourselves if we think we can avoid the budget and the cost of the farm program. I believe everyone in our committee understands that there is a huge farm problem, more specifically located in the Middle West, even more specifically in the Corn Belt, but in all States, including the State of Kansas, particularly the State of Nebraska, the State of Iowa, the Dakotas, parts of Texas, Minnesota, Illinois. So we have special responsibilities.

One of those responsibilities is not to break the budget in the process. We can all make good arguments on why we ought to make an exception in agriculture, and an exception in other cases. I would indicate again to my colleagues that during the 4 years of the Carter administration, I think price supports cost about $20 billion and during the first 4 years of the Reagan administration they jumped to $63 billion. It would seem to me that in the next 4 years it is probably going to be that much or more.

I do not believe there is any escaping the fact that whatever we do in agriculture is going to be expensive, so whatever we do must be reasonable so far as the budget is concerned.

Farm income needs to be improved. But it needs to be improved in the marketplace, not just from the Federal Treasury.

I would hope that when we do vote on the farm bill we will agree that whatever happens, whatever finally happens in the budget process, whether it happens today or next week or does not happen at all, that we are going to have some restraint on where we draw the line as far as spending in agriculture is concerned.

The question is whether we should go back to the committee and try to hammer out a farm bill or whether the chairman should indicate that maybe we ought to call up S. 1040, offer amendments, and proceed from there. If we can bring up just the commodities, I would think we could probably complete action on that section of the bill in the next 2 or 3 days.

That would be contingent upon an agreement that we could proceed to S. 1040. I do not know that the distinguished Senator from Montana or others on either side—I am not trying to point the finger of blame—will let us proceed on S. 1040. If not, we have a cloture petition prepared if necessary for today or whenever we might move, and then we could have a cloture vote on Friday. It may not be necessary. Maybe there is no unwillingness to proceed. Maybe the difference is not on proceeding to the farm bill but on how it finally looks.

I doubt that we are going to be able to please everyone. I have been on the Agriculture Committee for some time. I remember 1 year we reported out three farm bills because we could not satisfy a majority of the committee on the House side. That was under the chairmanship of our good friend and outstanding committee chairman, Herman Talmadge. We had to report out three bills.

I think there was a Dole bill, a McGovern bill and a committee bill. The committee bill passed.

In any event, I hope we do not have a replay of what we had earlier this year on the farm credit debate.

Mr. MELCHER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I want to finish my thought and then I will be happy to yield.

I happen to believe that there are Democrats who represent producers of rice and cotton, and Republicans who represent wheat and corn producers. There is sort of a mix on both sides of the aisle. I guess that is why farm bills have generally been bipartisan.

I am willing to predict that if there is a straight party line there will not be any bill that passes that will be signed by the President.

I recommended to the Secretary of Agriculture as recently as yesterday that I believed there should be a thorough study of the costs of these programs, not just somebody guessing in committee rooms. I do not fault the USDA people, but we are going to have to take some time and lay it out.

It is my view that the Secretary of Agriculture has that responsibility to cost out all these programs, whether it is a 4-year freeze, 3-year freeze, 2-year freeze, or 1-year freeze, and all these different things we are putting into the farm bill, and then go to the President and indicate to the President if the budget is x dollars, the bill costs x dollars over x dollars under. I would hope before we come back in September the President could make a judgment on whether or not he could support such legislation. Otherwise, it does not do us much good to go through the exercise and pass the farm bill.

Last time it passed the House by two votes. But if we pass the farm bill in the Senate, we could then have it vetoed and would have to start all over again.

It would be my guess and hope that there would be a lot of work done in the next few weeks by the administration so that they can advise Democrats and Republicans where they are on farm legislation.

I understand there is a Cabinet meeting tomorrow on the farm bill.

In any event, I think we would not like to get partisan in the next couple of days, but at least try to talk about a farm bill, try to debate it on a high level. If we did not have a budget problem, I would not have any problem with what the distinguished Senator from Montana wishes to do. He wants to use commodities, as I understand it, in the last 2 years. That is not a cost because it is an asset we have already paid for. Somebody paid for it. But it would not have any budgetary impact.

But the question is, How do we take care of the other budgetary impact? Maybe we will have to use those commodities the first 2 years instead of the third and fourth years in an effort to make the farm bill budget neutral.

I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. I thank the distinguished majority leader for yielding.

We have pending in the committee a vote on what we are doing in regard to the last 2 years. I wonder if my distinguished friend, despite his having already voted on the other side—there are indications that he voted on the other side—would use his influence on the distinguished chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee to get back into session and let that vote take place. After all, we Democrats are in the minority. We cannot pass out a bill on a straight party-line vote. We would have to have one or more of our friends on the other side, the Republican side, to assist us. But if we had that vote, I think we would be ready.

We attempted to get to that this morning through the noon hour and we did not quite make it. I understand we were to go back into session at 3 o'clock.

There is a lot of work to be done on this bill, of course, to make it a good bill. The farm credit section will be extremely important and the export title will be extremely important. If there is any promise of some brighter day for American agricultural producers, for most of them it is going to be when we correct this disastrous trade imbalance and start selling more agriculture products abroad.

I thank my friend for yielding. I just make that request, that he use his influence on the chairman of the committee that we do meet and have a vote on it and see if the rest of the members would agree not to offer too many more amendments. After all, I offered the amendment at 10:30 and it did sit there until 12:30. It could probably come to a culmination very quickly when we meet.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, would the distinguished majority leader yield to me for a question?

Mr. DOLE. I shall be happy to yield, but I want to respond quickly to the Senator from Montana.

I think the overriding question is whether we will agree to stay within the budget limitations, whatever they might be. I offered a motion this morning to that effect. After some discussion it appeared to me that that was a dead-end proposal, because everybody is willing to talk about the budget, but nobody will vote to stay within it. So I withdrew the motion. If we could agree on that, we could bring out any bill.

Sooner or later, we are going to have to do some fine tuning. Some areas are going to need major tuning. We have estimates that the committee bill is going to be some $20 billion over the budget, some say $12 billion, some are $5 billion. It depends on whether you use January 5 as the date or some other date, or whether you use the CBO estimate or the Budget Committee's or some other estimate. It seems to me that is why the Senator from Montana is frustrated; he cannot find the figures.

Mr. President, I say in all seriousness and sincerity, we have two ways we can go. We can have a replay of farm credit debate earlier this year, which was partisan, or we can try to work it out on a bipartisan basis and try to get a pretty good margin of victory for a farm bill, whosever name is on it. Maybe we do not need any name on it—we could just make it the farmers' farm bill. I hope that is the way we are headed.

Just vying to see who can stay one vote ahead in the committee is not going to accomplish that result. I am not certain just how we get there. This is pretty tough to do.

I am happy to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I wonder if my distinguished friend could enlighten those of us on this side as to why the committee meeting this afternoon was canceled. I thought we were moving along pretty expeditiously—not without disagreements, obviously, but that is part of the legislative process. Obviously, all of this has to be revisited on the floor, but I think most of us were prepared to go back there again this afternoon.

I have, I believe, attended almost every meeting of the committee since the beginning of our discussions on the 1985 farm bill. I say to the majority leader that I have been in his office many time—at his call—on separate meetings that were not committee meetings. I wonder why we abandoned the effort this afternoon when we were proceeding so expeditiously.

Mr. DOLE. I had not noticed that last part, expeditiously, in the Agriculture Committee.

It is my understanding that the chairman has a conflict. I met with the chairman. Also, some people felt maybe we just ought to come out here and see how far we could get on the Senate floor. I am not certain that is going to happen. But if we do get consent to proceed to S. 1040, that may be helpful.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, may I ask the majority leader, what is S. 1040?

Mr. DOLE. It is an agriculture bill.

Mr. DIXON. Who wrote it?

Mr. DOLE. Senator COCHRAN.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi is a fine member and has contributed greatly to the work of the committee, but there are 17 of us there; maybe the other 16 could contribute as well.

Mr. DOLE. It is also Senator PRYOR. It is bipartisan, Mr. President, COCHRAN and PRYOR.

Mr. DIXON. They are both fine people, but I wonder why, to the detriment of the 15 other members of the committee, we are going to look to a two-man bill on the floor. As the distinguished majority leader well knows, we have almost completed the farm bill. We have had some major rollcalls on commodities. He has won a few; we have won a few. We are almost completed as far as the commodities are concerned. We have the finest conservation section ever written in the history of this bill. We have a small problem on food stamps. We have had some votes on block grants in which we prevailed 11 to 6. There is almost nothing left to do. I do not understand why we are going to bring up a new bill, why we come up with a separate bill when we have almost finished our work on this one.

I recognize changes are going to be made on the floor. If my dear friend and colleague remembers, I was on the committee in 1981 when we wrote the floor bill. I was involved in debate on the floor, and was defeated in my position on a number of things.

We passed it by almost 50 votes. As the majority leader indicated, it passed by only 2 votes on the House floor, so it was not a tremendously popular bill in Congress.

If it escaped the attention of the majority of people in the country, it does not escape the attention of the farmer, that all some of us are talking about is a freeze—giving them no more—a freeze. We argue about a freeze when, obviously, the policy of the Budget Conference Committee itself has been to permit defense spending to rise by the rate of inflation and to permit the COLA's to rise by the rate of inflation. We are turning the attention of the country to the American farmer. In everything we have dealt with so far this session, at least the rate of inflation has been taken into consideration. We are simply asking to preserve the farmer at the same level for the next 4 years that he is this year and everybody wants to cut the farmer.

I only want to say to the majority leader that some of us were ready to be back there this afternoon to continue the work.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we had some objections to meeting; I guessed we did not want to act.

One member came through and said we could not meet and everybody was a little confused.

I am not certain what the chairman has in mind. I am just responding because the distinguished Senator from Montana indicated that since I was on the floor, he wanted to say a few words about agriculture. That started about 3 o'clock. I did not intend to debate the farm bill.

Mr. DIXON. Why does my friend want to go to a new bill that has not been through the committee process?

Mr. DOLE. My own view would be that the final product would be a bill that has been through the committee process. Every bill has been through that committee process. Bills we have not even thought of yet have been through that process.

It is not that we have not had sufficient time. It seemed to some of us that we need to agree on a result to let farmers know what policy is going to be. I have a letter here signed by five of my colleagues who happen to be from wheat-producing areas making this point—Senators NICKLES, KASSEBAUM, ABDNOR, GORTON, PRESSLER. I know there are an equal number on the other side of the aisle who agree with this point. We represent wheat States.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, may I say to the majority leader that I am willing to vote on the bill today. Let us take it out of committee. Let us vote on it this afternoon. Tomorrow is a nice day. Why not vote on it tomorrow? This bill is 95 percent ready for a vote tomorrow, and the majority leader knows that. We have a few things to do around the edges on the food stamps. Everybody knows that.

Mr. DOLE. What about the cost? Is the Senator worried about the cost of anything around here?

Mr. DIXON. I am worried about the cost, Mr. President. I say we should treat the farmer in a fair and equitable fashion as we treat every other sector of our society.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think farmers have been suffering primarily from this overspending in the Federal Government, which has driven up interest rates and everything else. I just cannot believe that the sole hope of the farmer is how high the subsidies can go. We have high real interest rates, we have a strong dollar, and our commodities are not competitive because loan rates are too high. Finally, almost every farm organization realizes that loan rates are too high, we cannot sell anything on the international market. The Government ends up with the crop. Farmers are in difficult straits. But just to pass a bill without even any reflection on the cost does not make sense. I do not want to debate the farm bill on that basis. I was just passing through the chamber. I shall try to pass on through here.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a comment?

Mr. DOLE. I will yield the floor.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I congratulate the majority leader for his willingness to try to bring up the 1985 farm bill. My very good friend from Illinois is talking about the farm bill being 95 percent of the way through the Agriculture Committee. I am glad to hear that because I, as many other people, have been very frustrated with the fact that the Agriculture Committee has not reported out a bill. We heard the deadline was going to be 2 weeks ago. It is still not out on the floor.

I have farmers, the Senator from Illinois has farmers, and the Senator from Montana has farmers who need to know before we adjourn what is in the farm bill. They are going to try to make decisions and will say, "Let's see, are we supposed to plant 100 percent, 70 percent, 80 percent? Is there going to be a mandatory set-aside?" They do not know. We would like to be able to give them some kind of direction. The House bill as last reported had a 30 percent set-aside for wheat. The farm bill as it is moving through the Senate has 20 percent. Some of us have different ideas because we are not really sold on the fact that 20 or 30 percent is the best way to go, and so we have a little different idea that we would like to have discussed. I understand that a proposal I have made was discussed in the Agriculture Committee today. I understand it lost by a narrow vote. I would like to talk to some of my colleagues and try to influence them that I have a good idea, that we pay full benefits when farmers produce on 50 percent of their base and then above that, they have the option to do whatever they want. But we need to know. They need to know.

Mr. President, I am pleased to hear what I am hearing from the Agriculture Committee. If they are this close, I implore the majority leader to move forward with the legislation. We have heard good things before, but we really need to act this week.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NICKLES. I am happy to yield.

Mr. DIXON. I have the pleasure and distinction of serving next to his colleague from Oklahoma on that committee, who I know—just as is this great Senator from Oklahoma—is very interested in the problem of wheat in his State and agriculture generally. He has been at every committee meeting, and I have attended every one with him.

I report this to the Senator from Oklahoma, with other colleagues from the committee who are on the floor: That bill is 95 percent completed. We have the strongest conservation section in that bill that has been in a farm bill in the history of American politics. We had votes on the commodity sections this morning, on every section—on wheat, feed grain, including corn, upland cotton, and rice. We revisited beans for a while. We have done everything.

We have done most of the food stamp questions, sticky questions such as the block grants which were opposed by the administration. Perhaps the Senator from Oklahoma would disagree with that. We have visited all these issues and have almost completed the bill.

The majority leader prevailed on the last motion before lunch at about 12:30. We were prepared to go back at 3 o'clock to return to a motion by the distinguished Senator from Montana that would have fixed the rate for wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice for the next 4 years at the existing rate, granting the Secretary of Agriculture the right in the third year to raise it by 5 percent on commodities and in the last year, 7.5 percent.

That might not be exactly what the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma would want. But I represent to him that there are Senators on this floor who have attended every committee meeting since it began and have gone to dozens of other meetings in the majority leader's office and elsewhere, met with all the Secretaries of Agriculture who are still alive, and contributed hundreds of hours of their time to this issue.

We almost have a bill. In the short time I have been here, I have never seen us abandon the committee process when it was almost completed, to come to a shell of a bill on the floor and work our will while we had the completion of the situation by the committee.

With all due respect to the majority leader, who I think is as interested in a good bill as anybody else, I say that I do not understand what is going on here.

I say to the Senator from Oklahoma that it is not because we have not attended to detail in the committee. It is not because we have not almost completed the bill. I suggest that there is some other reason which the Senator from Illinois does not understand.

Mr. NICKLES. I will tell the Senator one reason, because I and other Senators are pressing the majority leader to move forward. We have waited, and I am pleased to hear that the committee is this close, and maybe they can finish it this afternoon.

Mr. DIXON. We would have had it finished by now if we had met.

Mr. NICKLES. The Senator is well aware that the committee, for many weeks, was meeting for only about 2 hours at a time and not completing their work. Regardless, time marches on.

Farmers are going to the field. Right now they are preparing their fields. They want to know how much they should be planting, and they do not know.

If the committee can finish it up today and we can bring it to the floor tomorrow, that would be great. However, I think today is too late to get started. I think we should have started some time ago.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NICKLES. I yield.

Mr. MELCHER. I advise the Senator that we were due to meet at 3 o'clock, and that meeting had to be canceled by the chairman, for what reason I do not know.

Nevertheless, it should be noted with respect to objections to the meetings that had to be canceled—meeting more than 2 hours—while no one Senator is privy to who objects, the objections being made by one side or the other, it is fair to say that that is every Senator's privilege. But I think it is also fair to note that probably more than half of those objections, causing no afternoon meetings, were made by Members on that side of the aisle, not on this side.

Mr. NICKLES. That is not my understanding.

Mr. MELCHER. Nevertheless, let me point out that on the budget constraints, the committee is allowing what the Department of Agriculture, the administration, has granted, and that is a reduction of the loan rates to allow the results in greater exposure to the Treasury.

There is no secret that if this bill is too high with respect to the budget and that offends the administration, they can make those adjustments. They can put the loan rates in. We have gone along with that because they have asked for it.

Mr. NICKLES. I understand what the Senator is saying, but let me finish my thoughts and I will yield the floor, and he can make whatever statement he wishes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter signed by me, Senator KASSEBAUM, Senator GORTON, Senator ABDNOR, and Senator PRESSLER.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, July 26, 1985.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB: If Congress does not outline next year's wheat program prior to the August recess, farmers in our states will be forced to make production decisions without knowledge of the programs under which they will be operating.

With harvest of the 1985 crop largely complete, winter wheat farmers are preparing the fields for early fall planting. By the time Congress returns in September, some 1986 crop wheat will be in the ground. With this in mind, it is our desire to bring up the wheat title of the 1985 farm bill for floor consideration if the Senate Agriculture Committee has not completed work on this needed legislation prior to Tuesday, July 30.

As you know, these are trying times for the agricultural industry. Farmers are being pressured by low commodity prices, falling land values and interest rates which remain high for them while declining for the rest of the economy. In order to cut production costs, farmers reduce tillage and fertilizer on program conservation acreage. Unless we act immediately on legislation to reauthorize farm programs, it will be impossible for winter wheat farmers to achieve the cost savings they desire.

In order to make crucial management decisions, winter wheat farmers need details of the 1986 program as soon as possible. Your assistance in this matter is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

NANCY LANDON KASSEBAM,
U.S. Senator.
DON NICKLES,
U.S. Senator.
SLADE GORTON,
U.S. Senator.
JAMES ABDNOR,
U.S. Senator.
LARRY PRESSLER,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, to complete my remarks:

As to this idea of who has been holding up the committee, I have heard that the Senator from Montana has been one who has delayed the committee at times.

Regardless of that, our farmers do not care if it is Democrats or Republicans who held up the farm bill. They want to know what is going to be in the bill for this year. I think they would like to see a 4-year bill, but right now they are concerned about September of 1985, because they are worried about survival. A lot of them will not survive. So the fourth year does not mean much. What means something is right now.

They want a bill; they do not want politics. They do not care who objected to meeting with respect to 2 hours. They want the farm bill resolved. That is why I put the letter to the majority leader together.

Some of us said that if we cannot get the bill out of the Agriculture Committee, let us put it up some other way.

To the farmer it makes a lot of difference whether you are buying fertilizer for 70 percent of your land or 100 percent. It makes a lot of difference whether you are going to participate in the program or not. They cannot make those decisions unless they know what is in the bill.

I favor a different approach from that which I think is moving through the committee. I hope our colleagues will talk about it. This is a bipartisan idea.

The Senator from Illinois might remember that I spoke about it before the Agriculture Committee several months ago. I said that I hope we will move toward less Government restriction and not have the mandatory setasides. We will tell the farmer: "We will maximize your subsidies or payments by producing on, 50 percent of your acreage. Above that you are on your own. Your can do whatever you want to with the other 50 percent."

I heard that it was discussed in committee today and was defeated by one vote.

I think the Government can save a lot of money in that regard, and farmers can save some money. We will not be trying to micromanage each farmer.

Under the present wheat program, as the Senator from Illinois knows, a farmer, in order to get maximum benefits, has to produce all he can on 70 percent, and he does not produce on 30 percent. So he is maximizing production on part of it and none on the other. The taxpayer ends up paying a lot. You do not control total production. You just continue to see the demise of the American farmer.

We have a couple of other ideas that will not cost so much and will help the farmers. Under my proposal, if the farmer wants to put his land in alfalfa, hay, or whatever, he could do so without losing his base.

I hope we will consider some of these ideas, but we have not made enough progress. So far as the farmers in Oklahoma, Nebraska, and Illinois are concerned, they do not know what is going on behind closed doors in the Agriculture Committee.

He is just wanting to know, "When Congress recesses for August, are we going to have 30 percent set-aside or not? Are we going to be able to keep our base without producing?" They are going to be wanting to know some answers to these questions.

My proposal is they can keep their acreage base, produce on 50 percent, and maximize program benefits at the same time.

Right now unless this committee really moves quickly, unless the majority leader moves forward on the Senate floor, and we work some long hours the next 2 or 3 days, we are not going to be able to have good answers for those constituents.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. NICKLES. I am happy to yield.

Mr. PRYOR. I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Oklahoma. As a member of the Agriculture Committee, this Senator from Arkansas understands that we have had over 24 markup sessions. As I told the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee, almost in jest, the agriculture bill is at least as complicated as this year's defense bill. This is truly a complicated piece of legislation.

Mr. NICKLES. I do not doubt that.

Mr. PRYOR. I do believe the Senator from Oklahoma recognizes this.

The Senator from Oklahoma made the statement, and I will paraphrase, that the farmers of Oklahoma and across the land want to know what is in the bill. However, I would almost tend to disagree with my friend from Oklahoma on this statement. I do not really think that the farmers of America want to know what is in the legislation that the Committee on Agriculture has been considering.

But let me tell the Senator the group that does know what is in this bill. I can tell him exactly who is tracking this bill. I can tell him exactly who knows everything that is going to happen to grain prices in this country if we pass the bill that is now in the committee and let it become the farm bill of 1985. Pure and simple, it is the grain "daddies" of this country and of this world, the longer we talk in the Agriculture Committee about what we are getting ready to do and what trick we are getting ready to play on the American farmer, we are going to see grain prices continue to plummet. We read this morning in the Wall Street Journal that those grain prices are going to continue going down very simply because those interests that really control the grain markets of this country and this world recognize that this country is going to continue on a policy of cheap food. They do not want food prices to rise. They do not want grain prices to increase.

They also know that we are going to attempt through possible indirection to hold in economic bondage thousands and thousands of farmers who are going to continue to work, continue to toil, continue to go in debt and continue to produce cheap food and cheap grain.

So the grain markets are reacting, and I have not seen how the markets closed but I hope they have closed. I hope they are closed because as long as we talk about something that we know is not going to really sincerely help the farmers of this country, those grain prices are going to tumble and we are going to see the American farmer once again, for a 4-year period, be subjected to 4 years of captivity to a policy and to a philosophy——

Mr. NICKLES. I think I have the floor.

Mr. PRYOR. Please.

Mr. NICKLES. Let me finish my comments.

Mr. PRYOR. That will be fine.

Mr. NICKLES. Then I will yield the floor to my good friend from Arkansas.

I share, what I believe is, his disgust for past agricultural policies which have not helped farmers enough and yet cost taxpayers billions of dollars.

I, for one, think we need to change the farm policy. I heard people say let's have continuations of present programs and so on. I think the past farm policies as I outlined before have been a disaster. They have cost too much for the taxpayers. They have not helped farmers obtain real income.

We have really seen some real distortions, pulling farmers in two different directions, "You produce as much as you can on 70 percent; do not produce anything on this 30 percent." It has not worked. They have to produce to keep their base. Even if a guy did not want to stay in wheat, and the Senator from Montana knows this, he has to stay in wheat to keep his base. If he does not continue wheat production each year to keep that base, he loses the base. He cannot afford to do that.

So I am very much in favor of making substantial improvements in the farm bill. If a better program is not what is in the proposal coming out of the Agriculture Committee, and if it is not, and in my opinion it probably is not, I will be one, and I will probably be joined by the Senators from Montana, Arkansas, and others, to change it.

But I do know that those farmers do want to know what is going to be in the bill, whether it be bad or good, so they can decide if they want to participate in the program or not. If they are not going to participate, the farmers, many of them, are going to plant fence row to fence row—100 percent. If they are going to participate and we have a 30-percent set-aside, then there is 30 percent of their land for which they do not need to buy fertilizer. They do not need to be turning the land—preparing the land to plant.

They are going to be planting in the middle of September and earlier in my State. Oklahoma is a winter wheat State, as the Senator knows, and I know he has some winter wheat as well, so the timing right now is critical.

Even if we pass a bad bill, my farmers want to know so they can plan accordingly. Whether the news is good or bad news, they at least want to know so they can make their decision.

I hope that the committee, if they meet this afternoon, can finish their business. Maybe we can bring out the committee bill and work together to improve it on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of my friend from Oklahoma. But before the Senator from Oklahoma leaves, please allow the Senator from Arkansas to state one or two things.

First, all of us, I assume, on the Agriculture Committee, like myself, have wiped our schedules clean. We do not even have appointments scheduled any more. We are not making speeches and all the other responsibilities that we have to do around here.

All we do is sit in the Agriculture Committee, and I was prepared, along with my colleagues, especially on our side of the aisle, to sit in that committee this afternoon from 3 o'clock to whatever time.

This morning at 10:30 the Senator from Montana, Senator MELCHER, moved that the section of the bill relating to commodities be sent to the floor.

Now, there was never a vote; never was a courtesy extended to the Senator from Montana to have a vote on that particular motion.

I will be honest with you, I have reservations about sending that particular section to the floor. But everyone seemed to think that we had to get something on the floor for debate. Therefore, I was ready to vote, with the Senator from Montana, and move that bill, to the floor of the Senate, to begin debate and, if needed, stay here tonight, stay here tomorrow, tomorrow night, Saturday, or whenever.

Now, what we have here, and the reason I wanted to address this Senate is S. 1040, known as the Cochran-Pryor bill that the distinguished Senator from Mississippi and myself brought before the committee and passed to the floor of the Senate. I think it has been on the calendar since May 22. Since that time, S. 1040, has been on the calendar of the Senate, ready to debate at any moment, ready to amend at any time, for anyone who had an amendment.

This bill is 15 pages long; 8½ pages have been stricken from this bill. Even though my name is on this bill with Senator COCHRAN. I do not know if I can still support this bill with all of these deletions. So we are going to, at least, I hope, try to consider this bill. Hopefully, the chairman will reconvene the Agriculture Committee this afternoon so we can have the opportunity to vote on the motion now pending.

I am hopeful that the people and the farmers of our country, for whatever reason, will not blame any delay on a farming bill on this side of the aisle. There is already enough blame to go around. It is absolutely one of the most complex pieces of legislation that most of us have ever seen. As an example, you do something for one group and it hurts the other. It is truly a complex piece of legislation.

These are the comments I wanted to make, and I appreciate the Senator from Oklahoma for yielding. I again say that probably in the long run it would be best to just go home and listen to our people, listen to our farmers and when we come back, I think we will have had a good dose of old-time religion. I also think we will come back and bipartisanship will prevail. We will say, "Look, we have a farm crisis out there and we have got to draft a farm bill that is going to see these people through the next 4 years." My fear is that what we have pending is not going to have adequate cash flow where individual farmers, can go to the bank, go to the PCA, or wherever they secure credit and get credit for the next year's crop.

Mr. President, I shall ask unanimous consent that I might add at this point in the RECORD a Wall Street Journal article dated July 31, Wednesday, relative to "Soybean and Corn Futures Tumble To Contract Lows." I ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOYBEAN AND CORN FUTURES TUMBLE TO CONTRACT LOWS

(By Wendy L. Wall)

Most soybean and corn futures prices tumbled to life-of-contract lows amid growing concern that Congress will lower some price supports for major crops by as much as 25%.

Weather speeded the declines as rains drenched the Midwest and Southeast, dispelling any speculation about major drought damage to the maturing corn and soybean crops. Wheat, soybean oil and soybean meal futures also fell.

"The bear market rolls on," said Susan Hackmann, an analyst at Agric Analysis in Chicago.

Soybean futures for August delivery fell 7.75 cents, to $5.23 a bushel, leading other non-financial commodity futures moderately lower. Commodity futures generally continue to hover at a seven-year low, according to an index compiled by the Commodity Research Bureau. Corn futures for September delivery fell 5.75 cents, to $2.35 a bushel. Both the corn and soybean prices were at life-of-contract lows. Soybean futures have fallen 14% from a year ago, while corn futures are down 18%.

Although congressional debate on new farm legislation continues, many traders are assuming that the House and Senate agriculture committees will probably recommend lower wheat and corn "loan rates," said Robert Lekberg, an analyst for Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. in Chicago. The loan rate is the amount per bushel that farmers can borrow for putting their crops in government price-support storage programs. The loan rate generally acts as a floor under commodity prices, and a reduction likely would further depress crop prices in the U.S. and overseas.

However, the Senate Agriculture Committee remains deadlocked in an effort to set "target prices," Ms. Hackmann of Agri Analysis said. Target prices determine the level of income supplements farmers receive; the supplements are based on the difference between a crop's market price and the target price. Some conservatives favor freezing target prices at current levels for one year before dropping them; other senators would like to freeze them for a longer period.

Heavy rains in the Plains states, the Southeast and sections of the Corn Belt also eased dryness in some regions, leading to further selling in futures. The storms are expected to move eastward across the Midwest today. Mild temperatures are predicted for most of the Corn Belt and the Mississippi Delta early next week.

In other commodity markets yesterday.

COPPER

Copper futures prices tumbled more than one cent a pound in what analysts said was a delayed reaction to a sharp rise last week in refined copper stockpiles on the London Metal Exchange. Supplies on the exchange rose 14,975 tons in the past week to 143,500 tons, up 65% from recent lows in early April. Also, consumption of copper in the U.S. is in a seasonal slump. Technical factors played a role; futures prices recently failed to penetrate a significant resistance point, said Robert Green, president of Canadian American Metal Co., New York. Prices for spot copper deliveries on the London Metal Exchange were trading higher than futures prices in New York, analysts said. The disparity partly reflects the fact that "the U.S. market is soft, it has no lift," said Frederick Demler, senior metals analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., New York.

FOREIGN CURRENCIES

Most foreign-currency futures prices rose. Futures analysts cited a government report showing a wider-than-expected $13.42 billion U.S. merchandise trade deficit for June. Another factor was a report of a 0.1% decline in U.S. single-family home sales for June. Foreign-currency futures tend to rise on signs of a weakening U.S. economy. Contracts tied to the British pound fell, partly in response to a decline in short-term British interest rates, which usually makes pound-denominated investments less attractive.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS

Most cattle, hog and pork-belly futures prices rose. In cattle, animals delivered against the maturing August contract were purchased by a firm that is expected to keep them, rather than redelivering them quickly. Also, wholesale beef prices fell to levels some traders think will stimulate consumer demand and clean up current burdensome supplies, said Jerry Abbenhaus, analyst for A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc., St. Louis. Hog futures also responded to expectations among professonal floor traders of stepped-up demand. Wholesale buyers raised their bids for some fresh pork cuts on cash markets, analysts noted. Although most pork-belly futures rose in response to the same factors, prices in the maturing August-delivery contract fell sharply as traders sold contracts to avoid taking delivery of bellies.

Mr. PRYOR. I yield the floor.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, for the information of Senators who have been debating the farm bill, I have been listening with keen interest. I follow the markets quite closely and when the question came to what the market is doing today I took a trek outside the door and they are coming off the United Press wires which I ask unanimous consent be printed immediately following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[See exhibit 1.]

Mr. EXON. If I could have the attention of my friends who wanted this vital information. This is from the United Press, No. 043:

Grain futures made contract lows across the board Wednesday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

I think that sums it up pretty well. I was on the floor a few days ago when the distinguished majority leader was complaining about the fact that it was those on this side of the aisle that were holding up consideration of the farm bill. Now I am told today, I have been listening to the debate, it seems that there are people on that side of the aisle that are holding up debate on Wednesday when we are supposed to leave here 2 days from now. Whoever, is holding up consideration of a legitimate and proper farm bill should stand the test before the voters of this Nation.

I am fearful that there may be some political play going on here, to where maybe tomorrow night or maybe Friday morning, there will be something brought our here that is called a farm bill and then anybody that objects to it as not a good farm bill may be falsely accused of being the guilty party for holding up consideration of a farm bill, a portion of which is critically important to the wheat growers as they plan their crop planting right now.

Mr. President, while we go ahead with all this rhetoric, while we worry about whose name is going on the farm bill or whose name is not, while we worry about whether we are going to offend the chairman of an important committee or whether that chairman is not going to be offended, I simply tell you once again, as I have stood on this floor repeatedly time and time again to tell you, that there is a crisis situation in agriculture today that cannot afford to wait while we play the silly games we continually play in the U.S. Senate.

Earlier this afternoon, I attended a meeting held by a group of farm organizations with the Wharton revised estimate on what is happening in agriculture today. It proved exactly what a group of leading economists, agriculture leaders and bankers, testified to yesterday in front of a meeting that I arranged with the Secretary of Treasury, James Baker, a key policymaker. We were talking to him particularly about the relation of the agriculture bank. Once again, time and time again, we see that unless we make some changes in the farm program, regardless of its budget implications, unless we make some changes, it is going to cost this Nation billions and billions of dollars and it could break not only the farmers but it could break the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the $12 billion to $18 billion that they have currently in reserves. Yet I hear time and time again that we have got to cut back $10 billion to $15 billion on the cost of agriculture while at a minimum we are talking about giving our defense budget an inflationary increase this year and then increases the year after for 3 to 5 percent while we are saying cut, cut, in agriculture.

(Mr. McCONNELL assumed the Chair.)

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator yield for one point in that regard?

Mr. EXON. Yes.

Mr. LEAHY. It was brought out in the Agriculture Committee this morning that the appropriations continues for the so-called Divad gun, which according to the paper, costs $6 billion. This is a weapon that is supposed to shoot down helicopters and low-flying airplanes. After absorbing $6 billion, all it has been able to do is hit a stationary outhouse, somehow focusing in on the exhaust fan or something of that nature.

It is nice to know that we are protected from an invasion of stationary outhouses. Yet, were it not for the dark humor in the matter, we must realize that $6 billion is almost half a farm program which enables the United States to be the only major military power in the world able to feed itself. From the time we began as a country, no enemy has been able to starve out the United States. We have not only been able to feed ourselves and a number of our allies, but been able to show our humanitarian nature in other parts of the world.

The Soviet Union, our major adversary in the world, would give anything to begin to have the agriculture productivity we have in this country.

We talk about the security of the Nation. This is part of our security. Just think for a moment, Mr. President: The only major military power in the world able to feed itself, have a surplus, and not be subject to a disruption of that ability because of the disruption of just one area of the country. It is diversified and dispersed. We have the most agriculture productivity in history. I hate to see that jeopardized and I hate to see the farms and the families—the human aspect—being jeopardized.

I see a couple of the other members of the Senate Agriculture Committee here, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, Mr. PRYOR, the distinguished Senator from Montana, Mr. MELCHER. Others have been here. I might say to my good friend from Nebraska, Senator EXON, that we were unanimous in talking among ourselves down at the side of the table that we are ready to vote on a farm bill. We are ready to vote and we are perfectly willing to see the recess canceled in part or in total if we can get a farm bill up here. If we have a bill on the floor of the Senate and start voting on it, we could, within a few days know the will of the Senate. Would that not be so much better than to have the whole farm situation held in some kind of a limbo?

We have worked hard, all of us have. We have brought our knowledge and the knowledge of our constituents to this legislation. I think it is time to go for it.

Mr. EXON. I thank my distinguished friend, Senator LEAHY, for his excellent remarks. And he makes a good point. If we cancel the Divad gun, we would have enough money and we would not have to worry about busting the budget for agriculture. That is just one item, small item—"small," in quotes, I should say—in the defense budget.

I believe the people of Nebraska, the farmers of Nebraska, and the small business people that are being devastated right along with our farmers and ranchers, when you look at the futures market out there today, you see cattle down in the $50 category, going lower than that. We see corn futures down to $2.28 and going lower. There is no way that you can produce food for those kinds of prices. We are going to be driving a higher and higher percentage of our family-size farmers and ranchers out of business at a faster rate in the next few months than we have in the last 24.

Mr. President, this is a serious situation. I certainly agree with the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont. Let us stay here. Let us cancel whatever plans any of us had with regard to the recess. Let us stay here and work. Let us stay here and do our job. Let us stay here, if you will, Mr. President, and get over and work through the silliness that continues to go on by delaying legitimate consideration of a farm bill.

Let the record show, Mr. President, that at least at 4:15 on this Wednesday before the scheduled recess, it cannot be said, as it was claimed earlier by those on that side of the aisle, that it was any single one on this side of the aisle that was delaying consideration of a legitimate farm bill.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

CHICAGO.—Grain futures made contract lows across the board late Wednesday on the Chicago Board of Trade. The first three soybean contracts also established new lows at about the same time.

Corn was pressured by aggressive professional and commission house selling, although commercials were small buyers. Traders said lower basis levels at the gulf and forecasts for more rain prompted much of the selling.

Wheat was higher early in the day on commercial buying, but prices retreated by midmorning and edged lower the rest of the day. Spillover weakness from the corn pit also affected the wheat market.

Soybeans closed higher, but were pressured by commercial and professional selling and a substantial decline in gulf basis levels. The bean market was supported by short-covering on ideas that recent losses may have been overdone.

Deliveries against the August soybean and soybean oil contracts were light which also was supportive.

The Census Bureau pegged June soybean oil stocks at 731 million pounds which was in line with trade estimates and had little effect on prices.

At the close, soybeans were up ¼ to 8 cents, wheat off ¼ to up 1, corn off 4 to up ¾ and oats off ½ to ¾ cent.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, it is very true that we were very close to the completion of the commodity title of the bill. If the meeting had been held this afternoon or quite possibly at the next meeting whenever it is held, the vote that occurs on what happens to the 2 last years of the 4-year farm bill—if that is what it is, or the life of the bill if it happens to be longer than 4 or shorter than 4, are the target prices going to be held at the same level; that is, not lowered—when we have that vote, I think the commodity title of the bill should be ready to report out; at least that was our intention this morning, that that be allowed to happen.

Now, perhaps there is some interest in what has happened over the last 6 days since last Thursday when we adopted that amendment protecting a target price for the life of the bill at the current level. We got a proposal the very next day from the Republican side. I just happen to have this and another proposal in my suit pocket. This first proposal was never voted on on Friday.

Then on July 29, another proposal, which is entitled, "Proposal To Resolve Committee Consideration," advanced by, I believe, the chairman, I am not entirely sure of that, but it came from the Republican side, that listed a series of conditions and that also was never voted on this week.

So we tried to force the issue this morning on the commodity title of the bill and got to the point of where we pretty much took care of 2 years, if it is a 2-year bill, the first 2 years, and we simply got to the point of moving on the other 2 years.

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MELCHER. Yes, I yield.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator for yielding. I got on the floor a little late to engage in this discussion because this Senator had shown up at the appointed time of 3 p.m. at the Senate Agriculture Committee room, and found that the Senate Agriculture Committee hearing scheduled this afternoon was canceled. Since that time I have been talking to some farm bureau members, some from the State of Iowa, about the situation in agriculture. We waited outside the Agriculture Committee room. I thought some of the other Senators would show up over there. Then I found out that it really was canceled.

As the Senator from Montana said, we met this morning. The Senator from Montana offered a motion. We debated it. We had a series of votes this morning. I thought we were drawing very close to having a definitive vote on the commodities sections which we would have had this afternoon. As far as this Senator is concerned we could have had a farm bill on the floor of the Senate certainly by late today—or by tomorrow—had we met.

I just wonder if the Senator from Montana has any information. Maybe he has already stated it. If he has, I apologize for not being here. But as I said, I was meeting with some farmers from my State. But does the Senator from Montana have any knowledge as to why we are not meeting this afternoon?

Mr. MELCHER. No. I say to my friend from Iowa, I really do not know except a message was left that the chairman had a conflict and the meeting was canceled. But I understand the chairman's dilemma in all fairness to the chairman, and to the majority leader, and their dilemma on the budget constraints that might be tied to a bill once it is on the floor. I recognize that. I must point out to the Senate and to the public at large that those budget constraints can be met. What the committee has done is to accept the request of the administration in setting the loan rates at a level that they desire to set them. We have always had loan rates for this generation and longer. We have had loan rates. But never have they been reduced as much as the administration suggested that these be reduced. When they are reduced, the exposure on the deficiency payment, of course, is increased.

The best judgment of the Department of Agriculture currently is that on wheat they would like to reduce the bottom line rate, the clearance rate, down about to $2.52; I believe on corn about to $1.84 for the 1986 crop. In most cases, that creates an extensive exposure whether the target price is left at the same or is even reduced 5 percent. That is a very extensive exposure for the Treasury. It does add up to many billions of dollars. The majority leader earlier this afternoon stated that during the Carter administration the cost of the farm bill for commodities was roughly $20 billion for all 4 years, and at the end of the 4 years of President Reagan the cost of the commodity programs has been $63 billion. So there is grave concern about the budget. But let me point out that there are some of us, including myself, that vigorously disagree with the administration, specifically the Department of Agriculture, that it will be necessary to see wheat price drop to $2.52, or corn prices drop to $1.84 on those clearance loan levels for the 1986 crop, and for the subsequent crop years they have it slightly lower than that—for 1987 crop production—and even lower than $2.52 for wheat and $1.84 for corn for crop production of 1987. I do not believe they are accurate. I believe that they will see the market clearing out at a higher prices than $2.52 for wheat, or $1.84 for corn. But nevertheless, it is their computers, and it is their figures that the committee is acting upon.

Mr. HARKIN. Excuse me. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MELCHER. Yes. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Is this the same computer from the Department of Agriculture that 3 years ago told us the PIK Program would cost nothing?

Mr. MELCHER. Judging from the results of the PIK Program, they did not know what a computer was at that time. So I cannot answer that question, I tell my distinguished friend from Iowa.

But the point he is making is that while the Department thought that the PIK Program might cost $2 to $3 billion, it ended up costing they say about $10 billion. I think it is fair to say maybe it was slightly higher than that. But nevertheless, I disagree. I think a lot of people disagree in believing the market clearing prices will be that low. They should not be that low at all because we should see a stronger effort made on exports. We should see in the coming years the return to the idea that you make concessionary sales or actual donations of food to developing countries in larger amounts than have been made in the past several years excluding Africa, that you do that for the very purpose of clearing out the surpluses and making the beginning inroads into developing markets in those countries. We are not plowing new ground in those instances. We are just returning to common sense.

One of the reasons that the Reagan administration has found itself tripling or more than tripling the cost of the commodity programs during its first 4 years than occurred during the Carter years, and I might say during any other President's years, is because they have not had a consistent trade policy on agricultural matters. Some people feel they do not have a consistent trade policy on any matter. But on agricultural commodities, I am here to say, Mr. President, they do not have a consistent policy and what consistency there is in it is bad.

I trust that they can improve on that. Certainly it is the desire of the committee, I think all 17 of us, that the strong feature of the export section of the new farm bill will force some changes within the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State that will greatly improve the use of the abundant supply of food we have in this country. In other words, develop an agricultural trade policy and a food policy that we use this abundance to the credit of the United States.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MELCHER. Yes, I am delighted to yield.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I apologize. I have been in another meeting and have not heard some of the earlier remarks. But it is my understanding that the Agriculture Committee was to have met at 3 o'clock. I was preparing to leave for that meeting when I received a call that it was canceled. I wonder if we have had any further word as to why the committee did not meet? I certainly am ready, and the Senator from Montana had a motion pending when we adjourned earlier. We were ready to go back into session to meet at this time. Have we been called back into session or have we been notified so that we can pass the bill out this afternoon and bring it to the floor?

Mr. MELCHER. I have to advise my friend from Oklahoma that as far as I know we are not so advised and why it was canceled I am not sure. All I have heard is—and I heard this from the distinguished majority leader—that the chairman of the committee found that he had a conflict and therefore canceled the meeting.

Mr. BOREN. Is the Senator from Montana willing to proceed to report out a bill if we are called back into meeting?

Mr. MELCHER. Yes. I am. I would like to have a vote on my motion. When that is completed, it would be my desire that—at least it would be my vote and my hope—that the committee would report out the commodity title of the bill. I have had the feeling it is the wrong way to operate. But part of my motion would be that the other titles of the bill must catch up with the commodity title before final completion of action on the commodity title.

Mr. BOREN. I thank the Senator from Montana. I am pleased to hear his comments because while I too would like to see us bring all of the sections of the bill together before we complete action on that bill, I have high hopes that before the day is out—certainly before the week is out—that we can bring the commodity section out. My colleague from Oklahoma has expressed himself on this subject. Our farmers are getting ready to plant. They need to know what the program is.

Of course, as important, even more important than knowing what it is, it needs to be a good program. Several of us had an opportunity to hear some of the officials from the farm credit system yesterday in an informal meeting. I would say to my colleague from Montana that meeting had a great impact on me.

It reaffirmed, I am sorry to say, some of the fears that I have had. We see rapidly deescalating land values, 19 percent since the first of January in my home State. We see escalating interest rates within the farm credit system. There are more and more parts of that system getting into trouble. They are having to raise the interest rates on the farmer members who are left in order to keep the associations going.

Clearly, if this downward spiral is allowed to continue, I believe that it forecasts danger not only for the economy of rural areas, but it poses a great threat to the financial safety of the entire country.

I think the Senate should wake up to the fact of what we are facing here if we allow deep sections of our economy to get into trouble. It does not take an across-the-board recession to break down an entire economy. We do not have to look at the economic indicators to determine what will happen. We have to carefully watch the critical sections because if they collapse so deeply that it impacts upon the banking system, we can create such a crisis in this country that can bring down the whole economy even if not at first spearheaded by a general recession.

I think we have to look at the conditions in agriculture and other critical sections with this in mind. That is another reason why I hope we will be able to pass a bill that does improve the cash-flow on the family farm.

Seventy percent of my farmers are experiencing negative cash-flow now. We have to put the floor under skidding land values that threaten to topple the entire system.

We must be able to pass out a bill expeditiously that will provide enough income on the family size farm so that we can solve the problems.

I am glad to hear the Senator's answer. I strongly agree that we should try to get a bill out as soon as possible and, if necessary, we should go ahead and bring the commodity section out and then later join in with the other sections of the bill, the food stamp section, the credit section, conservation and other sections.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. MELCHER. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for his remarks.

I might point out that a few moments ago the distinguished majority leader stated there would be a Cabinet meeting tomorrow, and that the farm situation would be part of that discussion. I think that is entirely appropriate and very timely. Members of the Cabinet have been listening to the problems that rural America has been experiencing with the farm credit crisis that started last year and which is now getting worse because of lower commodity prices.

The Cabinet would be wise to heed those danger signals and be prepared to act in a manner to salvage this most basic of all of our industries here in the United States.

The Senator from Oklahoma mentioned land values have declined in his State. Let me say that the Department of Agriculture in their assessment of land values from April 1984 to 1985 found that agriculture land values had dropped an average throughout the country of 12 percent.

In the Corn Belt States, the five States of Minnesota, the Dakotas, Iowa, and Illinois, the land values dropped during that 1 year, after a tremendous drop prior to the year recorded. From April 1984 to 1985, the land values in those States dropped 25 percent.

This is a startling and significant change in the credit worth of individual farm operators.

This situation cannot be ignored. While I recognize the difficulties of those who have been working with the budget, and all of us who are on the fringes of that recognize that there are some budget constraints, we feel we cannot abandon the entire agricultural economy and thereby threaten the entire U.S. economy.

While we have been on the commodity section of the farm bill, we have been debating whether or not we should hold the line for the 4 years, or whatever the life of the bill is, at the current target price level as a safety net mechanism for agricultural producers. That is the entire critical area of what will happen to credit for farm producers in the next 2 years.

We are being advised by bankers and farm credit officials that farm income must improve. The Department says, "We will improve gradually with the increase in exports." But we must determine in our own judgment whether that increase in exports will come quickly enough. What about the safety net features in the interim, in the next 4 years?

The answer to that must be if the exports are going to improve over the next 4 years to bring the price of commodities up, well and good. We hope they will. We believe they will improve within that timeframe if the export of U.S. commodities can be increased. We believe the export title does mandate an improvement in our ability to export more of these commodities.

If that is the case, fine. The Treasury exposure then to the target prices will be greatly lessened.

But the question before us is, Are we to jerk out that safety net in the farm credit situation for these producers through the coming year and the one following? What you do for the 2 years is key to what you do for the outyears, 1988 and 1989. What you do then will determine whether their situation will be in worse shape.

The bankers and production credit administration people are looking at cash-flow. If it is declining in the last 2 years of this farm bill, then the judgment that these lenders have to make is, "When do we shut them off?"

Believe me, the situation is so desperate right now. Many loans have been categorized in the doubtful classification. That means if the future in the coming 4 years looks bleak, then their demise is rapidly assured for lack of credit.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, there has been a discussion here about the critical situation in agriculture today. During that discussion, I see the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee, my friend from North Carolina, has come to the floor.

We have been commenting on the fact that we cannot get the Agriculture Committee together. In fact, during the discussion for the last hour and a half we have had a quorum of the Agriculture Committee right here on the floor. I do not mean to go through the names, but we have seen the Senators who have spoken and others who have walked in and walked off the floor. Everyone seems to be suggesting that we move ahead rapidly and get a bill which is about finished reported to the floor so we can work on it and stay here if necessary, giving up whatever time of the recess is necessary, the whole month, if required, to get a bill worked out.

I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, my friend who could call a meeting, if it is possible for him to accommodate what I think are his wishes and what I sense are the wishes of the majority of the committee, having a meeting in the next 5 minutes, and move ahead with getting the bill reported to the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator would accommodate the Senator from North Carolina by temporarily yielding the floor and letting me have it in my own right for no more than, say, 5 or 6 minutes, with the understanding that he be recognized in his own right again.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I have no claim to the floor. I have asked a question; I shall be glad to yield the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Fine, Mr. President, I appreciate it.

Senator LUGAR, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which I am ranking member, insisted that I be part of the conference between the House and the Senate on the matter of South Africa. That request came subsequent to our meeting this morning. That is the reason I had a problem with the Agriculture Committee meeting at 3 o'clock this afternoon. It is my intention to return to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Let me say with respect to my very dear friend from Montana, and, for that matter, my good friend from Nebraska that they are signing from my hymn book. I have not counted, Mr. President, but staff has advised me that today's meeting of the Agriculture Committee this morning, beginning at 10 o'clock, was the 34th meeting of the committee to mark up the farm bill. I think that all Senators who have attended those meetings—I must say that the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] have been among the faithful—I think they will agree that I have done everything I can to expedite consideration of the farm bill through the markup process.

At the same time, I have been around the track a few times in the Senate. I respect its traditions and I certainly respect the civility that is expected of us, and I have never cut off any Senator. I have never failed to allow a Senator to have his full say.

I do not think it can be fairly charged that the Committee on Agriculture all of a sudden is holding up action, because I guess a thousand times I have said, for example, "Let's vote." I wake up in the middle of the night sometimes and I can hear the distinguished Senator from Montana saying "Now, just a minute, Mr. Chairman." Then he makes an enormously effective speech about whatever it is that he is interested in at that moment. So I would say it is not the leadership of the committee that has stretched this process into 34 meetings.

As for the farm crisis, if you will go back and read my opening statement on the first day of the markup, Mr. President, I pointed at that time to the necessity of the committee acting quickly so as to get a farm bill on this floor so it could be considered. That did not happen for the reason that I have mentioned earlier.

I insist, Mr. President, that I am criticizing nobody, nor am I trying to assign any blame. I am simply trying to set the record straight.

Also, Mr. President, it is important that all Senators and certainly the American people bear in mind precisely what it is the farmers in this country understand best of all: It has been the irresponsibility of the Congress of the United States over a period of decades that has caused the farm crisis by spending more every year than the Federal Government could hope to take in.

I remember the day that Ronald Reagan held up his hand on January 20, 1981, to take the oath the first time as President of the United States. I remember sitting out there thinking, Boy, this guy has really inherited some problems. For example, a trillion-dollar national debt on which the interest alone costs more than it cost to operate the entire Federal Government about 2 decades ago.

And of course, this interest cost has created deficits and high interest rates. Now, I hear comments constantly on this floor, on television, in the newspapers that these are Reagan deficits. It is not so. If we are going to be honest about anything at all, let us at least be honest that the Congress of the United States, by its profligacy, is guilty.

And I say another thing, Mr. President. The best farm bill we could write in the Congress of the United States need not mention any commodity, any loan rate, need not even have the words "farm" or "farmer" or "agriculture," just move us toward a balanced budget. Then the interest rates will come down. Then the cost of production for the American farmer will come down, and we will have served the farmers and everybody else.

But as long as we kick around a farm bill that envisions a process by which the farmers produce for the Government, building up enormous surpluses, then we are deceiving ourselves and we are deceiving the farmers.

I do not know exactly what a referendum would show among the farmers, but I would be willing to wager that if a referendum could be conducted, the farmers would say get that fiscal situation in Washington, DC, straightened out.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HELMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. EXON. I wonder if the Senator might be good enough to respond to my question? I see now since I asked this question, not only is the chairman of the committee here but the ranking member of the committee is on the floor and other members of the committee have come in. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ] just arrived. We want to have a meeting of the committee and we are standing on the floor of the Senate talking about it.

May I ask once again, is it possible for the chairman to call a meeting of the committee now or sometime this evening?

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the committee will meet at the pleasure of the committee. We have a meeting scheduled at 10 o'clock tomorrow. I hope, I say to my dear friend, that the chairman would not have to sit there for 40 minutes before he gets a quorum. The Senator might talk to people on both sides; the guilt is bipartisan in that respect. I have spent half of my life, along with Senator ZORINSKY, waiting for Senators to get there.

I know this public display will be interesting news back home, but this committee has met regularly, it will, and we are scheduled to meet tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, and I shall be there rapping the gavel tomorrow at 10 o'clock, Lord willing.

That is my answer to the Senator. I hope it is satisfactory.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for one more statement.

Mr. HELMS. Certainly, Mr. President.

Mr. EXON. With all due respect to the Senator, Mr. President, that answer is not satisfactory. He asked me if it is satisfactory. It is not satisfactory to this Senator because I think we have urgency here. Maybe he was not here when I suggested we not go into our recess period. We generally work at night around here, at least until 8 or 9 o'clock. I guess I am somewhat disappointed that the urgency is not felt to the extent that we could have a meeting of the Agriculture Committee tonight.

Maybe the chairman does not agree with the remarks made by other members of the committee on the floor.

Mr. HELMS. I can imagine what they were.

Mr. EXON. It seems to me if we are that close, a 3- or 4-hour meeting of the committee this evening might get the bill to the floor.

I thank my friend for answering the question. It was not the answer I wanted, but he did answer it.

Mr. HELMS. I predict we would have the same marching up the hill and down the hill tonight but that is all right.

I say to the Senator I would be glad to have the staff check and see what the social engagements of the Senators are. It would help if we get about the business in the morning at 10 o'clock.

The Senator raised the question of staying here in August.

May I have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. EXON. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. HELMS. Let me point out, Mr. President, that on Monday of this week, I offered an amendment—true enough, it was a sense-of-the-Senate amendment, but that is all I could handle at that time on the bill—urging the Senate to stay in session until two things had been done. First, a budget resolution was agreed to, and, second, a farm bill considered by the Senate. And do you know who objected to that, Mr. President? One of the Senators on this floor who had been inferentially critical of the chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee. Now, I will anticipate the question.

No; I will not yield for a moment. Then I will yield the floor. But I will say this to the Senator or any other Senator. The Senator from North Carolina is perfectly willing, even eager, to have this Senate stay in session in August. But I want to point out that I offered that amendment, and it was a distinguished Senator on the other side of the aisle, for whom I have the greatest affection, who objected to it, and he was prepared to make a point of order.

Mr. President, I say again, if the count that has been given to me is accurate, the Senate Agriculture Committee has met 34 times since we began the markup. Second, for far more than three-fourths of the afternoon sessions, we have been forbidden to meet because there were objections to the Senate Agriculture Committee meeting 2 hours beyond the time of the convening of the Senate. And as Senators know, the only way a committee can meet beyond 2 hours after the Senate convenes—and in no case past 2 o'clock—is by unanimous consent. Time and time again, there were objections and, yes, for a while—let me say it before somebody else says it—one of the Senators on this side of the aisle interposed an objection, but that lasted about 4 or 5 days and we worked it out. So I have to say, Mr. President—and I want to say this with as much gentility as I possess—that the delay of the farm bill cannot be laid at the doorstep of the Senator from North Carolina, the chairman. I will be there at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, and I do hope that as I walk in I will see the smiling faces of 16 other Senators who will be willing to move along the farm bill. I yield the floor.

Mr. MELCHER and Mr. DIXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, may I say this—and I appreciate very much the comments by the distinguished chairman of the committee—as a member of that committee who has been in regular attendance, the chairman has been diligent in seeing to it that the committee has met on a regular and ongoing basis. And may I say to the distinguished occupant of the chair, who is a member of that committee, I would assert, once again, in this public place that we have, generally speaking, completed our work on that bill. There are some things that still need to be done, but the major questions have been addressed by the committee, may I say to the Chair.

Now, the last thing that happened before lunch was that the majority leader prevailed on a 9-to-8 vote to freeze commodity prices for the next 2 years and authorize the Secretary of Agriculture thereafter in the third and fourth years to have the discretionary authority to reduce prices on the commodities by 5 percent in each of the last 2 outyears, the third and the fourth. The final motion before us, as the President knows, just before we adjourned for lunch, was a motion by my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Montana, to provide instead that we have a 4-year freeze, but in the third and fourth years, the Secretary of Agriculture could pay up to 5 percent of the deficiency payment in commodities and, in the fourth year, up to 7½ percent in commodities.

Now, that is the difference between the majority and the minority on this question, and the amount of money, may I say to the President, is not very great.

Now, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, may I say, has never been able to give us any accurate figures, so there is no reason to believe that they can give us this one. And I say that with the experience of having served on that committee through two markups of farm bills. During that time, I have never had a correct figure given to me by any member of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. So I do not expect that it will take place tomorrow or at any time in the near future. But I do want to say this to the President: Others on the floor a short while ago, while I was off the floor, mentioned the Divad gun, which the President will recall I mentioned in committee today. I have the honor of also serving on the Armed Services Committee, and I happen to know a little bit about the Divad gun because very early this year, in late January and early February, it became an issue in the committee. And I said at that time, "Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Divad gun can shoot straight." And the chairman said, "Well, if the Senator believes that, why doesn't he go try the gun?" So I want to say to the chair that I went down to Fort Bliss in early February to fire the Divad gun. I spent the whole day there. I know a little bit about this $6 billion gun that does not shoot straight. It is mounted on a great big tank with two 40mm cannons and the radar set from an F-16 airplane. It is going to cost the people of this country, if more are built, $6 billion.

Now, the Washington Post said this morning that the Army is ready to report to the Secretary of Defense that the gun, in fact, now works and that the Secretary of Defense will make his determination on August 30.

I was in a tank with that gun. I fired that gun 88 times at close range against stationary and moving targets and never hit a thing. I can say that nobody else ever hit a thing. And the report this morning is that nobody has yet hit a thing. The Army says, "Well, if you get close it will fall down." I have never seen anything knocked down by the Divad gun. I just want to say in this public place, Mr. President, that all of the debate going on, all of the work we have done this year in the Agriculture Committee, all of the time we have spent, everything we are saying here on the floor cost appreciably less, appreciably less, Mr. President, for the farmers of rural America who are going broke by the numbers, than that gun, and that gun will not hit a thing.

I say that the people of America would be better served if we go back to committee and resolve the differences between the two sides, which are now miniscule, and bring forth a farm bill for the American farmer.

While we are on vacation this year, when we are back to our work schedules in our respective States, when we are not here on August 30, the Secretary of Defense I would say now—I predict, I warn—will certify that the Divad gun is a good buy—a $6 billion waste of the taxpayers' money for a gun that will not hit a blessed thing while we are here spending hours talking about the farmers of America who need a little bit more to be able to function for the next 4 years under the 1985 farm bill. The point I make in conclusion is this. The differences are very small. The differences can be resolved in one more meeting of the committee. I assert, once again, we have written more than 95 percent of the 1985 farm bill, and if we can go back into committee for 1 more day, we can report to this Senate a very good farm bill for the farmers of America.

Mr. MELCHER and Mr. HARKIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, made a statement about a proposal being made in the form of a sense-of-the-Senate resolution.

He pointed out that some Senator on this side of the aisle had objected to it. Mr. President, that is not the case, in my recollection, nor is it the case in the recollection of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which shows that Mr. DANFORTH objected to it. I want to repeat what I said at that time.

If the Senator chooses—

Meaning the chairman of the committee—to stay here during August, I think it would be a wise step and I will not oppose this proposal nor make a point of order at this time on his proposal. I think it would be wise to stay here. We could take up what the committee has acted upon and go to the following week or weeks, whatever is necessary.

So while I know that there are other Senators who have made plans and would have to change them, I think this is a very crucial matter. But in the proposal of the distinguished chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, he had my support, not only in my heart but also in vocalizing all my support for that proposal.

I think it is still possible that we could review the critical nature of the situation of the agricultural economy of this country and might want to consider that matter yet, by staying longer and having some definitive action on the bill. I believe it would be very wise that we do so.

Mr. HARKIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRESSLER). The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I want to respond and perhaps elaborate a little on what the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee said earlier. I am sorry he had to leave the Chamber.

I did want to bear witness to the truth of what he was saying—that in fact he has been most obliging in terms of recognizing members of the committee and in giving members of the Agriculture Committee their fair chance to be heard and to offer amendments.

There have been a couple of times when there was a fast gavel or two; but, what the heck, that is all in the prerogative of the chair. But I can say that, by and large, the chairman has been most accommodating and most fair in allowing members of the Agriculture Committee to have their say and to be able to offer their amendments. I do not have any argument with him on that point.

However, the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee mentioned that it was the irresponsibility of Congress that has caused the problem in agriculture by voting for huge budget deficits over the years.

I think it is true that it has been the irresponsibility of Congress that has caused our present problems in agriculture, when you consider the enormous amount of the Federal debt. But I think it was the irresponsibility of Congress on three occasions that really caused the problems in the financial structure of this country which, of course, has placed a great burden on agriculture.

The first irresponsible act by Congress was in passing the Gramm-Lott budget in 1981, which skewed everything out of order.

The second irresponsible act of Congress was when Congress enacted the tax cuts which President Reagan wanted enacted in 1981, which cut the taxes for the wealthy of this country by huge amounts.

The third irresponsible act of Congress that is now weighing heavily upon the farmers was when Congress went along with President Reagan in deciding to tremendously increase defense spending in this country.

Those three actions—the Gramm-Lott budget, the tax cuts for the wealthy, and the tremendous increase in defense spending—caused our problems.

The distinguished chairman said that when we came in, we had a heck of a mess. We had about a trillion dollar national debt. That was true. He failed to point out that since this administration has been in office, the national debt has doubled. When President Reagan took office, our national debt stood at $932.3 billion. Today it is $1.8 trillion—double what it was when this President took over.

I might remind my fellow Senators that the amount of debt added during this administration equals all the national debt piled up by every administration from George Washington through Jimmy Carter, all put together.

So I do not think we need to be talked to about national debts and who is responsible, when in about 4 years this administration has doubled the national debt, that took nearly 200 years to accomplish under all the previous Presidents. So it is true that these deficits belong to this administration, and this administration cannot shrug them off.

Unless and until Congress acts responsible to close the tax loopholes, to get our budget priorities back in order, and to significantly reduce the wasteful military spending, we will continue to have these budget deficits. They are going to keep interest rates high, keep the value of the dollar high, cause a decrease in our agricultural exports, and continue to cause the problems they are causing in our agricultural community.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. HARKIN. I yield.

Mr. MELCHER. I wonder if the Senator from Iowa agrees with me that with the deteriorating farm credit situation, some ranchers and farmers have to be liquidated, and that forces the rate of interest higher for those other farm borrowers who are borrowing from a PCA or bank.

Mr. HARKIN. That is absolutely true.

Mr. MELCHER. It is a true dilemma. You cannot shrug off the farm situation with which we are faced, with the further dilemma of higher rates of interest for those who are not now in a bad farm situation, but their turn may come the following year.

Mr. HARKIN. Absolutely. I have discussed this with the distinguished Senator from Montana, that we are in a situation where the increased interest rates are now causing the better customers of the Federal Land Bank and PCA's to take their loans elsewhere, leaving the farm credit system holding those loans that cannot perform.

When that happens the farm credit system has to increase its interest rates to cover those losses, more people leave the system, and we get a steadily escalating situation of higher interest rates and fewer people participating in the farm credit system. If we do not do something about it, it will cause a total collapse of the system.

I am glad that my colleague from Montana raised this issue, because it is the second point I wanted to bring up.

I referred to the huge deficits of the Reagan administration, caused by increased defense spending, tax cuts for the wealthy, and a skewed budget. As an aside, I point out that the budget adopted by the Senate—and I might add that I did not vote for the budget; it passed the Senate by one vote—but that budget cut agriculture significantly.

At the time of the passage of the budget, I spoke on the floor and pointed out that agriculture makes up only 2 percent of the budget but it accounts for about 6 percent of the cuts in the budget.

Again I think that our farmers, our agricultural community, can take its fair share of cuts. I do not think it needs to take three times the amount that it proportionately contributes to the national budget.

So, when we are told that we cannot pass a meaningful farm bill because it goes over the budget, the problem is that the budget itself is wrong because it weighs too heavily upon agriculture and perhaps lets some of the other sectors off without taking their fair share of the cuts.

Be that as it may, we are faced on the Agriculture Committee with coming up with a farm bill that will stop this erosion of land prices and stop this erosion of the credit system.

My colleague from Montana, led me into this with his question and his pointing out the situation with the farm credit system and how the increased interest rates are going to continue to have a dilatory effect upon the farm credit system.

I think that is something that we have not looked at on the Agriculture Committee. We tend to focus very narrowly upn commodities. We tend to focus very narrowly upon farm programs, and I can understand that.

But one thing I think that we are forgetting is what is going to happen economywide if we do not pass a farm bill that in fact increases farm income, not decreases but increases. If we pass a farm bill that decreases farm income, which is what this administration wanted to do—the initial bill they sent down drastically cut farm income—at least we have been able to move the Agriculture Committee at least to the point of perhaps not cutting farm income, maybe not raising it but at least not cutting it. At least I am hopeful that is where we are at this point.

The macroeconomic defense of not stopping this erosion of farm income has been laid out in a study done by the Food and Agricultural Policy Research Institute, a joint venture of Iowa State University and the University of Missouri, that was just completed. In fact, earlier today there was a press conference held in the Capitol by those who took part in the study outlining the macroeconomic effects of what is going to happen if we do not stop the slide in farm income. I think this is what OMB and the administration really has to start focusing on. No longer is it just the farm couple who are losing their farm, forced to leave the farm and give up everything they have worked for, and as sad as that is and as hard as that is on the individual couple, and as much as it tears our hearts to see that, I would suggest that it is not just that farm family that is being hurt, we are now seeing this thing begin to expand up like a ripple effect throughout the economy. If we do not stop this it is going to have drastic effects on us here in the United States and in fact perhaps even worldwide.

I point out that Wharton Econometrics did a study on this, and their major conclusions were that if we do not increase farm income we are facing loan losses of $20 billion to $25 billion in the near term, which are expected to increase short-term interest rates by 75 to 125 basis points, reduce national employment by 175,000 to 275,000 jobs, reduce total GNP by $30 billion to $50 billion over 8 years and increase the Federal debt by $14 billion to $21 billion by 1993.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to yield the floor to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota and at the end of his comments he yield back the floor to me and I be recognized at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. I thank the distinguished colleague from Iowa for being kind enough to yield to me and so I may talk for just a moment. I have another commitment.

I do not want to really participate in a discussion of whose fault it was for not having a farm bill here before us at this time. As a practical matter, even if the committee had acted, we could not have concluded our work on the floor and a conference with the House of Representatives before the recess. I guess it was destined to be that way. There certainly were many delays—delays that came from many quarters—and it probably does not do the farmers much good to try to assess any blame or to try to figure out why it happened the way it has happened.

So I wish to address the question, what can a farmer expect? I say to my friend from the State of Montana where there are Winter-wheat farmers, who are going to plant before our committees will gather together once again in September, what can they reasonably expect? What should they anticipate as they go through the decisionmaking of planting?

I think that probably there is going to be a 20- to 30-percent set-aside in wheat once again. Unless I miss my guess, it will be on the high side because of carryover stocks, and income protection will continue pretty much on the level that it is now established.

The Secretary undoubtedly will announce a plan. He has announced plans in the past or indications of plans even when there has been a legal situation not unlike the one that we have before us.

So as farmers decide what to do, I think that they will get some guidance from the Department. I think that they should reasonably expect that there will be a set-aside in a 20- to 30-percent range with income protection numbers similar to the ones that they are now experiencing. Hopefully, we will see the implementation of the so-called Findley amendment which will allow the Secretary to reduce the loan rate another 10 percent. The farmers should understand that in the event the Findley amendment is utilized, their income will be protected by an increase in the deficiency payment. Also, the additional deficiency payment that will result through the lowering of the loan rate will not apply against the $50,000 payment limitation.

So even some of the larger farmers in the wheat area, and there are many, will not be penalized due to use of the Findley provision and will be able to make planting decisions on that basis.

I hope, also, looking a little bit into the future, that we will pass legislation that will allow us to be far more aggressive in the world marketplace; 60 percent of the wheat that we produce in this country is shipped abroad. We have far more wheat presently in stock than we use domestically in the course of 1 year, perhaps even upward to 2 years' worth of stocks, so it is important that we regain the international markets. Otherwise, we simply will not have much need for wheat production.

But I think set-asides again will be around the 20- to 30-percent range. I believe that income protection will remain at present levels, and I hope that the Findley amendment will lower the loan rate. "Why lower the loan rate?" many farmers will ask. Of course, the answer has to be that if we are going to be competitive on the international market, our wheat cannot be priced above the international marketplace price. It is now priced above the international marketplace price by about $25 a ton which is about 70 cents a bushel. So indeed, we have to get down there and be competitive. Otherwise, we will see a further erosion of our international marketing of wheat.

We marketed about 30 million tons of wheat 10 years ago on the international market. This year we will market less than that, 29 or 28 million tons of wheat.

On the other hand, the world market in wheat has grown during the same 10-year period. One has to ask: "Well, who has that additional market? Who has the nearly 25 to 30 million tons of new market that has appeared in the last 10 years?" And the answer is, unfortunately: "Everybody except the American farmer." The Europeans, the Argentines, the Australians, the Canadians, the Indians, and others have entered the wheat market. Wheat is not a very tricky thing to grow. It grows just about everywhere. And as a result, because of our high loan rates, we have encouraged production in other parts of the world and we have lost a meaningful share of the wheat market.

The same applies to corn, and the same applies to other products. That is why I have stood throughout the committee deliberations for an aggressive farm policy, while still protecting the income of the farmers. I think we have to do that as a practical matter.

Many colleagues say: "Gee, how can you spend so much money on the corn farmer or the wheat farmer?" The answer is that unless we do indeed protect the farm community and the farmer, the taxpayers of this country will have a far larger obligation in bailing out a series of lending organizations. This expense could come through the FDIC, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or through other Federal agencies that protect deposits.

So protecting farm income is not only the right thing to do, it is the cheapest thing to do for the taxpayer. But it is also the right thing to become aggressive in world markets, to return to world markets with a fervor that will regain a reasonable share of those markets for us. As those markets grow, without a question in my mind, farmers will prosper once again in our country as they have in the past.

They have not always prospered in the past. Farming is a pretty tough business, I might say. It is a very highly leveraged business. It is a business that is hard to get into even in the best of times. It is also hard to make a dollar at the business of farming even in the best of times, particularly if you are highly leveraged.

So we do have an obligation to the agricultural community because they are the very base of our economy. We do have a practical obligation to ourselves to serve the agricultural community, because if we do not, the lending systems of our country will experience serious losses that will be made up by the taxpayer at great cost.

So once again I thank my friend from Iowa, who has afforded me every courtesy during the course of these deliberations of the Agriculture Committee. Most often, I found myself on the opposite side of the issue from him, but never on the opposite side of comity, and courtesy, and understanding. We have had some interesting talks and conversation during the course of this farm bill debate. We have grown to be closer and indeed I treasure that.

I thank once again the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished friend from Minnesota for his observations on this bill. I would just like to say that of all of the individuals on the Agriculture Committee, all of whom I have enjoyed working with during this debate—we have a difference of opinion on how best to proceed, but, of course, that is what governing is all about is trying to work out those differences—I would just say the distinguished Senator from Minnesota has impressed me by having more knowledge of the intricacies of what the tradeoffs are and what the impacts are of various options and various choices that we can make than anybody on the committee, including myself. He has impresed me with his really in-depth understanding of agriculture and, as I said, of these policy options and what these options would mean as tradeoffs.

As he pointed out, we have differed on perhaps what those implications are. But I have enjoyed his thoughtfulness and his delineation in the Agriculture Committee of what these policy options mean as it affects other parts of agriculture and other economic sectors.

I might also point out that on almost every amendment that the Senator from Minnesota offered this morning, I believe I voted with him. I believe that is right. The record will show that.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. If the Senator will yield, on one of the amendments it was just he and I against 14 others.

Mr. HARKIN. I believe that is right, as a matter of fact. So again I would say that probably the Senator from Minnesota and I probably, I would say in the vast majority of the cases, would agree upon the parameters and agree upon the first two or three steps, and maybe that last little 10 percent is where we probably disagree on how we ought to go.

But I do want to return the compliment and say that I have certainly found the Senator from Minnesota most enlightening to this Senator in terms of expanding my knowledge and expanding my understanding of the entire debate on agriculture.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. I thank my colleague.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, just following up on what I was saying, I was talking about the macroeconomic effects. I do not want to belabor that point, but I did want to point out again that in the study by the food and agriculture groups' Policy Research Institute, they quoted the Wharton Econometrics Forecasting Associates Analysis which investigated the macroeconomic consequences of the farm financial situation. I just want to quote from the Wharton study.

It showed that there are "potentially serious consequences of the farm debt crisis on the U.S. economy. And these impacts are higher interest rates, higher unemployment, reduced gross national product, fewer housing starts, lower personal income and a larger Federal deficit."

The Wharton analysis indicates that:

> If pre-emptive actions are not taken, the loan losses could significantly affect U.S. financial markets. Such outcomes would seriously jeopardize the farm sector and impose important costs for those not directly employed or involved in agriculture.

Then the study went on to say:

> Early corrective and preventive measures will be less costly than absorbing the impact of doing nothing or approaching the problem in a reactionary mode. The stakes for agriculture and national economic performance are high.

Again, the Wharton study, I believe, has really shown us that one way or another we are going to have to do something; that we are going to have to either put some money into shoring up farm income in the short-term and also taking care of the farm credit crisis right now, or we are going to have to come in later and do something about the massive writeoff of debts and the increase in the national debt and the increase in unemployment that is going to be caused by a writeoff of this farm debt.

As was put this morning by one of the individuals, I believe it was, the president of the National Corn Growers Association who is from my State of Iowa, he told the assembled people at this press conference at which this study was released that we can either pay now or pay later, is the way he put it. The study showed that by paying now we are going to pay a lot less than if we pay later.

Again I will close out my remarks by again quoting from the Wharton study in which they say:

> Ultimately the financial policy choice facing United States agriculture is this: Is it less costly, both in economic and human terms, to intervene and help the sector adjust to economic conditions, or is it more cost effective to attempt to make this passage between economic states with the tools and institutions that we currently possess? The magnitude of the required change would seem to place existing institutions in jeopardy without intervention.

The studies that are now coming out about the macroeconomic effects of doing nothing or of reducing farm income propels us on the Agriculture Committee to understand that if we do nothing or if we pass legislation that reduces farm income—for example, if we were to pass a 1-year target price freeze which might keep income at the same level next year but really would not give us any increase in income at all because of increased input costs and interest rates and everything else, and then allow the target prices and loan rates to be reduced after that, it would send absolutely the wrong signal to the financial markets because most of this huge debt that is held in agriculture is long-term debt. It is not next year's debt. It is not 6-month debt. It is long-term debt. If they see that the year after next and maybe 2 or 3 years from now the income of the farm sector will be reduced every year, I can tell you that as soon as we take that step the forces will be set in motion which this Senator believes will lead to a total collapse in the financial structure of agriculture, both in the farm credit system and in the private lending institutions that are out there—the banks, and other lending institutions that have loaned heavily in agriculture.

When that happens, of course, the domino effect will take place and the results of this study in which it says unemployment will go up by over 200,000, the national debt will go up, and interest rates will go up.

So our charge is really to begin with the starting point of how do we increase farm income. That is where we start; not how do we increase exports, but how do we increase farm income? That ought to be our starting point. Then we can work it out from there. Yes, it is going to cost something, but it is going to cost something because of what I said in opening my comments. It is going to cost because this Congress was irresponsible in adopting the Gramm-Latta budget, having huge tax cuts for the wealthy, and increasing defense spending by the amount that we have. Those were all, I believe, irresponsible actions in this Congress. For those of us who have the duty—the constitutional duty because we have been elected by our constituents, and because we represent farm States and rural areas—it is our duty now to try to get this back on an even keel to protect this farm income, and to protect this whole collapse from happening.

So our responsibility is to ensure that we do not erode farm income, but that we in fact increase it. If it costs something to do that now—I am willing to admit that it will—the cost will be much less than what it will cost later on if we let farm income go down.

I sense that one of the reasons that we have been tied up so long in the Senate Agriculture Committee, and as the distinguished chairman said, we now have had our 70th meeting—one of the reasons is because Senator recognize I think this dilemma we are in. I think the Senator from Montana brought up earlier the dilemma that confronts the Senators on the Agriculture Committee.

Here is the budget. The budget cut agriculture. It says we cannot do much in it. Yet on the other hand, if we abide by that and we cut net farm income, it is going to have a more drastic impact on our budget deficits than if we go ahead and do something right now to increase that farm income.

So our responsibility again is to act responsibly, not just for the farmers but for our whole economy, and to make sure that the farm bill that we pass increases farm income.

I detect that most Senators sitting around that table over there day after day recognize this. It is one of the reasons that we cannot seem to reach an agreement, because on the one hand Senators want to do something to shore up farm income; on the other hand, they are being told by the administration that we cannot do it. They trot out these numbers day after day to show us how terrible the budget impact is going to be if we pass a farm bill that will increase farm income.

Well, again, as I stated earlier, this is the same Department that told us that the PIK Program would not cost us anything. They were penny-wise and pound-foolish then and I detect that they are being penny-wise and pound-foolish right now by trying to pinch dollars now and it is going to cost us ten times as much in the future and cause perhaps irreparable damage to our small towns and communities, not only in Iowa, but throughout our country.

So, Mr. President, I am really disturbed that we did not meet today at 3 o'clock. I felt that we were approaching the point where we could have had the final vote on the commodity section and report it out to the floor. There has been some implication made by some that it was those of us on this side of the aisle who were holding up the farm bill. I think now we know it is not this side that is holding up the farm bill. We have been there. In fact, I think on this side of the aisle we have provided the majority of the Members who have been there for those debates on the farm bill. I think the record will show that. Had it not been for those of us from this side of the aisle, we would not even have had a working majority on the farm bill for all of those debates.

So this Senator is ready to vote on the farm bill in committee, get it out, and let the Senate work its will. I am confident that with these recent studies, with what we found to be the macroeconomic effects of the course that the administration would like to take us in agriculture, we will report out a bill that will not reduce farm income, but will in fact shore up farm income during the next 4 years.

That is really the way we ought to be proceeding. I hope the Senate Agriculture Committee will meet tomorrow, meet promptly at 10 o'clock, and that we will move forward on these votes. However, the time is drawing close. There is no way now I think we can get a bill up to vote on it before the recess. There has been a lot of smoke and fury from the distinguished majority leader regarding getting the farm bill on the floor. But that is just about all it has been. It has been a lot of smoke and fury, but no real action to get the Agriculture Committee to vote and to move expeditiously.

As I said, we have been there. We have been there to vote. We tried to vote it out last Friday. We had enough members there to report a bill out but were unable to do so.

So, Mr. President, when we come back from our recess confronting a farm bill in September, I am hopeful that the message will have gotten through loud and clear to this administration and to OMB that if we reduce farm income, the effect on the economy is going to cost us more down the road than the extra perhaps $8 billion to $10 billion that we are talking about putting in the farm bill right now to support that farm income over the next 4 years.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act, section 303 of the act be waived with respect to consideration of H.R. 2942, the legislative branch appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATIONS, 1986

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to Calendar Order No. 249, H.R. 2942, legislative appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2942) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments, as follows:

(The parts of the bill intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets, and the parts of the bill intended to be inserted are shown in italics.)

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I—CONGRESSIONAL OPERATIONS

SENATE

MILEAGE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT AND SENATORS AND EXPENSE ALLOWANCES OF THE VICE PRESIDENT, THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE, MAJORITY AND MINORITY LEADERS, MAJORITY AND MINORITY WHIPS, AND CHAIRMEN OF THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY CONFERENCE COMMITTEES

MILEAGE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT AND SENATORS

For mileage of the Vice President and Senators of the United States, $60,000.

EXPENSE ALLOWANCES OF THE VICE PRESIDENT, THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE, MAJORITY AND MINORITY LEADERS, MAJORITY AND MINORITY WHIPS, AND CHAIRMEN OF THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY CONFERENCE COMMITTEES

For expense allowances of the Vice President, $10,000; the President Pro Tempore of the Senate, $10,000; Majority Leader of the Senate, $10,000; Minority Leader of the Senate, $10,000; Majority Whip of the Senate, $5,000; Minority Whip of the Senate, $5,000; and Chairmen of the Majority and Minority Conference Committees, $6,000; in all, $56,000.

REPRESENTATION ALLOWANCES FOR THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY LEADERS

For representation allowances of the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate, $10,000 for each such Leader, in all $20,000.

SALARIES, OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

For compensation of officers, employees, clerks to Senators, and others as authorized by law, including agency contributions, which shall be paid from this appropriation without regard to the below limitations, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT

For the Office of the Vice President, $1,112,000.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

For Office of the President Pro Tempore, $149,000.

OFFICES OF THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY LEADERS

For Offices of the Majority and Minority Leaders, $1,090,000.

OFFICES OF THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY WHIPS

For Offices of the Majority and Minority Whips, $418,000.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEES

For the Conference of the Majority and the Conference of the Minority, at rates of compensation to be fixed by the Chairman of each such committee, $540,500 for each such committee; in all, $1,081,000.

OFFICES OF THE SECRETARIES OF THE CONFERENCE OF THE MAJORITY AND THE CONFERENCE OF THE MINORITY

For Offices of the Secretaries of the Conference of the Majority and the Conference of the Minority, $182,000.

OFFICE OF THE CHAPLAIN

For Office of the Chaplain, $90,000.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

For Office of the Secretary, $6,953,000.

ADMINISTRATIVE, CLERICAL, AND LEGISLATIVE ASSISTANCE TO SENATORS

For administrative, clerical, and legislative assistance to Senators, $102,549,000.

OFFICE OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS AND DOORKEEPER

For Office of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, $36,358,000.

OFFICES OF THE SECRETARIES FOR THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY

For Offices of the Secretary for the Majority and the Secretary for the Minority, $879,000.

AGENCY CONTRIBUTIONS

For agency contributions for employee benefits, as authorized by law, $19,612,000.

OFFICE OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNSEL OF THE SENATE

For salaries and expenses of the Office of the Legislative Counsel of the Senate, $1,437,000.

OFFICE OF SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

For salaries and expenses of the Office of Senate Legal Counsel, $565,000.

EXPENSE ALLOWANCES OF THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE, SERGEANT AT ARMS AND DOORKEEPER OF THE SENATE, AND SECRETARIES FOR THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY OF THE SENATE

For expense allowances of the Secretary of the Senate, $3,000; Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, $3,000; Secretary for the Majority of the Senate, $3,000; Secretary for the Minority of the Senate, $3,000; in all, $12,000.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE

SENATE POLICY COMMITTEES

For salaries and expenses of the Majority Policy Committee and the Minority Policy Committee, $974,000 for each such committee; in all $1,948,000.

INQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, or conducted pursuant to section 134(a) of Public Law 601, Seventy-ninth Congress, as amended, section 112 of Public Law 96-304 and Senate Resolution 281, agreed to March 11, 1980, $51,050,000.

SECRETARY OF THE SENATE

For expenses of the Office of the Secretary of the Senate, $683,800.

SERGEANT AT ARMS AND DOORKEEPER OF THE SENATE

For expenses of the Office of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, $54,153,000.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS

For miscellaneous items, $9,659,000.

STATIONERY (REVOLVING FUND)

For stationery for the President of the Senate, $4,500, for officers of the Senate and the Conference of the Majority and Conference of the Minority of the Senate, $7,500; in all, $12,000.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION

Section 1. The second sentence of section 120 of Public Law 97-51 (2 U.S.C. 61g-6) is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", except that vouchers shall not be required for payment of long-distance telephone calls".

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MILEAGE OF MEMBERS

For mileage of Members, as authorized by law, $150,000.

HOUSE LEADERSHIP OFFICES

For salaries and expenses, as authorized by law, $3,357,000, including: Office of the Speaker, $775,000, including $18,000 for official expenses of the Speaker; Office of the Majority Floor Leader, $688,000, including $10,000 for official expenses of the Majority Leader; Office of the Minority Floor Leader, $767,000, including $10,000 for official expenses of the Minority Leader; Office of the Majority Whip, $603,000, including $1,000 for official expenses of the Majority Whip and not to exceed $145,540 for the Chief Deputy Majority Whip; Office of the Minority Whip, $524,000, including $1,000 for official expenses of the Minority Whip and not to exceed $76,840 for the Chief Deputy Minority Whip.

SALARIES, OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

For compensation and expenses of officers and employees, as authorized by law, $47,914,000, including: Office of the Clerk, $13,656,000; Office of the Sergeant at Arms, including overtime, as authorized by law, $18,269,000; Office of the Doorkeeper, including overtime, as authorized by law, $6,678,000; Office of the Postmaster, $2,075,000, including $46,722 for employment of substitute messengers and extra services of regular employees when required at the salary rate of not to exceed $16,278 per annum each; Office of the Chaplain, $73,000; Office of the Parliamentarian, including the Parliamentarian and $2,000 for preparing the Digest of Rules, $623,000; for salaries and expenses of the Office for the Bicentennial of the House of Representatives, $219,000; for salaries and expenses of the Office of the Law Revision Counsel of the House, $859,000; for salaries and expenses of the Office of the Legislative Counsel of the House, $2,800,000; six minority employees, $434,000; the House Democratic Steering Committee and Caucus, $617,000; the House Republican Conference, $617,000; and Other Authorized Employees, $994,000.

Such amounts as are deemed necessary for the payment of salaries of officers and employees under this head may be transferred between the various offices and activities within this appropriation, "Salaries, officers and employees", upon the approval of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

Final partial judgments and compromise settlements are payable only after certification by the Attorney General to the Comptroller General that it is in the interest of the United States to do so."]

RAILROAD ACCOUNTING PRINCIPLES BOARD

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For salaries and expenses of the Railroad Accounting Principles Board, $750,000, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of H.R. 4439, 98th Congress, as passed by the House of Representatives on February 7, 1984.

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. No part of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be used for the maintenance or care of private vehicles, except for emergency assistance and cleaning as may be provided under regulations relating to parking facilities for the House of Representatives issued by the Committee on House Administration.

SEC. 302. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 303. Whenever any office or position not specifically established by the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 is appropriated for herein or whenever the rate of compensation or designation of any position appropriated for herein is different from that specifically established for such position by such Act, the rate of compensation and the designation of the position, or either, appropriated for or provided herein, shall be the permanent law with respect thereto: Provided, That the provisions herein for the various items of official expenses of Members, officers, and committees of the Senate and House, and clerk hire for Senators and Members shall be the permanent law with respect thereto.

SEC. 304. The expenditure of any appropriation under this Act for any consulting service through procurement contract, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3109, shall be limited to those contracts where such expenditures are a matter of public record and available for public inspection, except where otherwise provided under existing law, or under existing Executive order issued pursuant to existing law.

SEC. 305. (a) Section 311 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by inserting "(a)" before "Purchases" and by adding at the end the following:

"(b) In addition to the authority to negotiate otherwise provided by law, the Public Printer may negotiate purchases and contracts for supplies or services for which the Public Printer determines that it is impracticable to secure competition by advertising. The Public Printer may not award a contract under this subsection unless he justifies the use of negotiation in writing and certifies the accuracy and completeness of the justification. The justification shall set out facts and circumstances that clearly and convincingly establish that advertising would not be practicable for such contract. Such a justification is final and a copy thereof shall be maintained in the Government Printing Office for at least 6 years after the date of the determination. The Public Printer may designate one or more employees of the Government Printing Office to carry out this subsection.".

(b)(1) The heading for section 311 of such title 44 is amended by adding at the end the following: "; contract negotiation authority".

(2) The table of sections of chapter 3 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 311 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"311. Purchases exempt from the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act; contract negotiation authority.".

SEC. 306. (a) Section 309 of title 44, United States Code, is amended:

(1) striking out "except the Office of Superintendent of Documents," contained in the first subparagraph of subsection (a); and

(2) by striking out subsection (b)(3).

(b) Section 1708 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by striking out the last sentence of the first full paragraph.

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) above shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

This Act may be cited as the "Legislative Branch Appropriations Act, 1986".

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1986 reported from the Committee on Appropriations on July 25 recommends a total of $1,599,338,800 for the upcoming fiscal year. That is a reduction of $728,338 from levels provided for fiscal year 1985, and a reduction of $183,916,200, or 10.3 percent from the budget request. With those reductions, I believe we have complied with both the President's desire for a 10-percent reduction in the legislative branch, and the assumption of a 10-percent reduction implied by the first concurrent resolution on the budget as passed by the Senate.

Our committee bill also compares favorably with that passed by the other body. Exclusive of items pertaining strictly to the House and Senate, including funding for office buildings provided through the Architect of the Capitol, the committee recommends a total of $820,494,000, while the House-passed bill would provide $824,920,000. So this bill is $4,426,000 below the House bill in that respect.

To look at it another way, Mr. President, the bill as reported by the committee recommends a total of $309,291,800 for the Senate, including amounts of Senate Office Building, which is a reduction of $23,140,200, or 7 percent from the request. The other body would provide a total of $469,553,000 for items pertaining solely to the House, including House Ofice Buildings, a reduction of $27,201,000, or 5.4 percent, from the request. Without in anyway impugning the work of the other body, Mr. President, I believe the Senate can properly say it has done a little bit better job in taking its share of the reductions necessary to achieve meaningful deficit reduction.

There is no reason to kid anyone, Mr. President. Reductions of this magnitude are going to change some plans for fiscal year 1986 and force some cutbacks. But the committee believes such actions are necessary, and will not cause undue disruption in the services provided to Congress and the rest of the Government by the support agencies, or in our service to the people we represent.

Before turning to a more detailed explanation of the provisions of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that a table summarizing the recommendations of the committee be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF THE BILL

[1] Includes amounts provided in H.R. 2577, the Supplemental Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1985, as passed by the Senate on June 20, 1985.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, the details of the committee's action on H.R. 2942 are provided in Senate Report 99-111, which has been available to Senators since Friday, July 26. Let me highlight the committee's recommendations as described more fully in that report.

With the exception of statutory allowances, such as mileage for the Vice President and Senators, all accounts have been reduced below the request of the President, and all but the account providing expenses for the operations of the Office of the Sergeant at Arms have been held at or below fiscal year 1985 levels. Salaries for the Office of the Vice President, the President pro tempore, the majority and minority Leaders, and the majority and minority whips; the conference committees, the secretaries of the two conference committees, the Chaplain, the Sergeant at Arms, the secretary for the majority and the secretary for the minority, the legislative counsel, the legal counsel, the policy committees, Senators' personal staffs, and the staffs of standing, special, and select committees have all been held to fiscal year 1985 levels. Salaries in the Office of the Secretary, at her request, have been reduced by $300,000 below fiscal year 1985 levels. Agency contributions on behalf of employees paid through these accounts have been reduced accordingly.

Expenses for the Office of the Secretary, again at her request, have been reduced below fiscal year 1985 levels to $683,800, and I want to reiterate the committee's commendation of the Secretary for her concerted effort to reduce the costs of her office. The "Miscellaneous Items" account, which provides for such expenses as the reception of foreign dignitaries, the calendars of the Committee on Rules and Administration, expenses of the conference committees, and Senator's official office expense accounts, has been reduced by $682,000 from the fiscal year 1985 request, for a total fiscal year 1986 recommendation of $9,659,000. Even the relatively small amount for the stationery revolving fund has been reduced by $1,000 and held to the fiscal year 1985 level of $12,000.

In accordance with the usual practice, the committee has recommended no change in the amounts provided by the House-passed bill for items pertaining solely to the House. Those amounts total $469,553,000, a reduction of $27,201,000 from the request.

Under joint items, the committee recommends a reduction in the requests of the Joint Economic Committee, the Joint Committee on Printing, the Joint Committee on Taxation, and the Capitol Guide Service, and provides for no new positions for any of those activities. Expenses of the Attending Physician and the Capitol Police have been reduced. A significant reduction is proposed in official mail costs, for which the committee considered a fiscal year 1986 request of $144,458,000 to cover the cost of mailing an estimated 1 billion pieces of franked mail. The funds requested for official mail have more than tripled since 1977 and the volume has nearly quadrupled. In an effort to bring this exponential increase under control, the committee recommends an appropriation of $100 million, and restates its strong recommendation to the Committee on Rules and Administration that all possible means of reducing the costs of official mail be explored.

In other activities under joint items, the committee recommends a 14-percent reduction in the request for congressional printing and binding by the Government Printing Office and a 10-percent reduction in the request for the Office of Technology Assessment. The committee recommends holding funding for the Congressional Research Service and the Congressional Budget Office at fiscal year 1985 levels. And, for the Architect of the Capitol's activities under title I of the bill, the committee is recommending a total of $84,115,000, a reduction of $28,076,000 from the request and $1,065,850 below amounts provided for fiscal year 1985.

Specifically, in the Office of the Architect, the committee has provided for none of the 13 new positions requested, and has eliminated funding for contingent expenses. For "Capitol Buildings," the committee recommends deferral without prejudice of the $800,000 requested for restoration of the rotunda canopy and frieze, believing that this item cannot be accommodated with the need for fiscal restraint. For "Capitol Grounds," the committee recommends a total of $3,362,000, which includes $725,000 for the installation of hydraulic barriers to replace the garbage trucks, dump trucks, and school buses that are now used to block vehicular access to the Capitol grounds. The installation of these barriers will improve security and esthetics. The committee has not committed to any other aspects of the East Plaza project now under study by the Committee on Rules and Administration.

For "Senate Office Buildings," the committee recommends $19,163,000, a reduction of $4,435,000 from the request. The recommended amount includes $249,000 for replacement of air-conditioning units and $211,000 for other renovations at the Senate Computer Center. And, finally, the committee recommends a reduction of $1,880,000 below the request for the Capitol Power Plant, for a fiscal year 1986 amount of $23,395,000, and as a matter of comity, recommends the same amount for "House Office Buildings" as passed by the other body.

In title II of the bill, the committee recommends a total of $54,406,000, which is $68,942,000 below the President's request, $14,371,000 below the amounts provided for fiscal year 1985, and $1,744,000 below the House-passed level. Highlights of the committee's recommendations for title II include.

Restoration of reductions made by the other body in the salaries and expenses account of the Library of Congress, with particular attention to preservation activities, so that funding for this account will remain at fiscal year 1985 levels;

Concurrence in the action of the other body in providing $33,761,000 for the Books for the Blind and Physically Handicapped Program of the Library;

A provision allowing $3 million from the revolving fund of the Government Printing Office to be applied to salaries and expenses of the Office of the Superintendent of Documents, such sums to be derived from excess receipts from the sale of documents;

Holding vacant those positions at the General Accounting Office that will become vacant through normal attrition during the year, allowing a further reduction of $1,226,000 from the House allowance; and Concurrence with the House in the provision of $750,000 for the Railroad Accounting Principles Board, a reduction which can be absorbed if the Board will take advantage of the resources of the GAO and other agencies, as the authorizing act provides.

Finally, Mr. President, the committee is recommending deletion of a provision in the House-passed bill that would allow for payment from the claims and and judgments fund, administered by the GAO, for final partical judgments and settlements to settle claims resulting from the acquisition of lands for the Redwood National Park. The committee has not received sufficient information on this provision, and recommends its deletion without prejudice at this time.

Mr. President, that concludes my opening remarks. I thank Senator BUMPERS, the ranking minority member of the Legislative Branch Subcommittee, and all other members of the committee for their cooperation and contributions to this bill.

Mr. President, let me say at this point that this job of coming to grips with budget reductions, particularly in the sensitive areas of the legislative branch where there are many considerations, and rightfully so, has been made a much easier task with the able assistance of the ranking minority member of the committee, my good colleague from Arkansas, Senator BUMPERS. His leadership and support in this area has been crucial, and he has made this job a pleasurable one.

Also, we can be proud of the Appropriations Committee staff. They have done an outstanding job in making it possible to bring this bill to this point.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, as the chairman has indicated, this bill is $184 million below the amount in the President's budget for the legislative branch, that is, $184 million below the President's request; and $728,000 below the anticipated level of appropriations for fiscal year 1985.

In effect, the fiscal year 1986 legislative branch appropriation bill freezes the appropriations for the legislative branch at an aggregate level of about $728,000 below the current fiscal year 1985 level.

Mr. President, I want to congratulate the distinguished chairman [Mr. D'AMATO] for his very fine efforts to constrain the total amount in the bill. The reduction from the amounts in the President's budget request for the legislative branch is 10.3 percent. For Senate operations, the bill includes a reduction of almost $23 million below the President's budget.

This is a significant accomplishment. I might add, if all the other appropriations subcommittees did as well, the world would not be quite as upset about not getting a budget.

Again, I congratulate the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. D'AMATO, for his fine work. I also wish to thank the staff, Keith Kennedy on the majority side and Terry Sauvain on the minority staff.

I urge adoption of the bill.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc, to be treated as original text for the purpose of further amendments and that no point of order be waived thereby.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection it is so ordered.

The committee amendments were agreed to en bloc.

AMENDMENT NO. 566

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] proposes an amendment numbered 566.

Insert after line 15 a new paragraph as follows.

"Of the funds appropriated under this head in Public Law 98-367 for demolition and paving of Square 724, $561,000 shall remain available until September 30 1986."

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, this amendment extends the availability of funds appropriated in fiscal year 1985 for the demolition of certain Senate annex buildings and the resurfacing of that site. It is now apparent that the Capitol Police will not be able to move into the Immigration Building until after September 30, and, as a consequence, cannot move out of their Plaza Hotel facility. Accordingly, this amendment extends the availability of $561,000 to complete that work.

The amendment has been cleared by the minority, and I move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 566) was agreed to.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUMPERS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 567

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I have another amendment that I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] proposes an amendment numbered 567.

"Of the funds appropriated under this head in Public Law 98-367, not to exceed $109,000 shall remain available until September 30, 1986."

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I have another amendment to extend the availability of funds for renovation of space in the Capitol for the press. This work will not be completed by September 30, 1985, so the necessary funds appropriated in fiscal year 1985 for this work need to be made available through fiscal year 1986.

The amendment has been cleared by the minority, and I move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 567) was agreed to.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. D'AMATO. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, inasmuch as we have agreed to both amendments, we are awaiting Senator QUAYLE, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 568

(Purpose: To establish a select committee to study and make recommendations with respect to a 2-year budget process)

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE] proposes an amendment numbered 568.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the text of the bill insert the following: There is established for the duration of the 99th Congress a select committee of the Senate to be known as the Select Committee on the Two-Year Budget (hereafter in this resolution refered to as the "select committee"). The select committee shall be composed of twelve members of the Senate, six from the majority party and six from the minority party, to be appointed by the President of the Senate upon the recommendation of the majority leader and the minority leader.

(b) Of the twelve members—

(1) two members shall be from the Committee on the Budget;

(2) two members shall be from the Committee on Rules and Administration;

(3) two members shall be from the Committee on Governmental Affairs;

(4) two members shall be from the Committee on Appropriations; and

(5) four members shall be from the Senate at large.

(c) The select committee shall select a chairman from among its majority members and a cochairman from among its minority members.

SEC. 2. (a) A majority of the members of the select committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, except that the select committee may fix a lesser number as a quorum for the purpose of taking sworn testimony.

(b) Vacancies in the membership of the select committee shall not affect the authority of the remaining members to execute the functions of the committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments are made.

(c) The select committee shall adopt rules of procedure not inconsistent with the rules of the Senate governing standing committees of the Senate.

(d) Service of a Senator as a member or as chairman of the select committee shall not be taken into account for the purposes of paragraph 4 of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

SEC. 3. (a) It shall be the duty of the select committee to—

(1) study and review legislative proposals to improve the operation of the congressional budget process, including proposals for the two-year budget; and

(2) recommend specific legislation to improve the operation and enforcement of the congressional budget process, including such components of two-year budgeting which the select committee finds to be desirable and feasible.

In carrying out clause (1) of this subsection, the select committee shall pay particular attention to the need to free the time of senators from unnecessary repetitive operations, to encourage oversight of enacted legislation by committees, to provide stable funding expectations to State and local governments, and to maintain accurate budgetary estimates and assessments of national needs and priorities.

(b) The select committee shall report and make recommendations to the Senate within 180 days after the adoption of this resolution.

SEC. 4. (a) For the purposes of this resolution, the select committee is authorized (1) to employ personnel, (2) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (3) to hold hearings, and (4) to sit and act at any time or place.

(b) With the consent of the chairman and ranking minority members of any other committee of the Senate, the select committee may utilize the facilities and the services of the staff of such other committee of the Senate, or any subcommittee therof, whenever the chairman and the cochairman of the select committee determines that such action is necessary and appropriate.

SEC. 5. Expenses of the select committee under this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the select committee, except that vouchers shall not be required (1) for the disbursement of salaries of employees of the select committee who are paid at an annual rate, or, (2) for the payment of long-distance telephone calls. Total expenditures for the select committee shall not exceed $300,000.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I offer this amendment to the appropriations bill for the legislative branch because I believe this is the first vehicle that has come along that is appropriate for this amendment which came out of our Select Committee on Committee Reform, which commenced and also disbanded last year. This committee dealt with potential reforms we might make in the Senate.

Just for the record, I might point out that this amendment was offered as a resolution, Senate Resolution 159, and was reported out of the Rules Committee on May 9. It was, in fact, adopted by the entire Senate on May 17. There were some objections after the Senate adopted it. Therefore, it was agreed upon that it should be vitiated on May 20, with the full understanding that we would come back and visit the issue which is incorporated in this amendment.

The issue is whether we ought to develop a mechanism to explore the feasibility and the viability of moving to a 2-year budget process.

Mr. President, I have a great deal of respect and affection for the chairman of the Budget Committee who has done yeoman service in the area of budgets, and I emphasize that in no way does my consternation and chagrin about the process reflect upon his capability nor his leadership.

I do believe, however, that as we look at what we are faced with today—a legislative appropriation that requires budget waiver because we do not have a budget, we must decide that if we are going to expend money on this body to conduct its business, perhaps that money should be expended toward something that might create some improvements on the processes and within the institutional system that we have.

I found great interest in a piece of material that was put out by the Senator from Colorado, the chairman of our Republican Policy Conference, Senator ARMSTRONG, that detailed the chronology of the budget plans this year.

In January, we had the Senate GOP deficit reduction goals. On February 4, we had President Reagan's budget. On March 6, we had Chairman DOMENICI's promised land. On March 20, we had the first resolution reported by the Budget Committee. On April 15, we had the White House-Senate-GOP plan. On May 10, we had the first resolution pass the Senate. On May 20, we had the first resolution pass the House. On June 19, we had the Senate conference offer No. 1. On June 21, we had House offer No. 1. On July 9, we had the White House oak tree framework. On July 16, we had the House offer No. 2. On July 25, we had Senate offer No. 2.

Who knows where are we going to go?

The first budget resolution, Mr. President, according to the rules of procedure we have now, should be passed by May 15. I might point out, that I believe only twice since the creation of the Budget Impoundment Control Act have we been able to meet that date. Last year it was October 1, and 3 years before that it was the end of June.

I might point out, Mr. President, that as I was chairing the select committee to look toward committee reform and toward reform of the whole Senate system, time and time again Senators came to me to talk about the three-layer cake that we have in the Senate. That three-layer cake is the budget process, the authorization process, and the appropriations process. Many felt there was a crowding out due to the fact that there was little time for oversight. They felt that something ought to be done to reform the process.

Our committee was more interested in actual committee reform which went in the direction of reducing the number of committee assignments for Senators and reducing the number of subcommittees, rather than the reforming processes that we have laid out before us. But I do believe that the time has arrived when the budget process itself is being called into question. We have had the process for 10 years. It has been an experiment. Some will argue that it has not done anything to cut the deficit; as a matter of fact, the record will show the deficit has gone up. Others will argue that we are in much better shape today than we would be if we did not have the budget process.

But my position is we ought to take a look at it and see if there should be some changes in the system looking toward a 2-year process. It was originally thought the budget process would help us look at the situation on a macroeconomic basis. Yet, last year, we had some 39 different amendments that were offered. This gets much more into micromanagement of the budget—line-item management of the budget, which I do not think it was intended for. We have had all the gyrations on the budget this year and will have it again next year. To go through this year in and year out, I think, does a great disservice to the operations of many of the other committees.

I serve on the Budget Committee and I think the budget process serves a useful purpose in initiating dialog and debate. But I also think the way it has worked and the practicality of it has come down to where we ought to take a good hard look at what we have done in the last few years and ask the rhetorical question, can we in fact make some improvements in this process. Therefore, Mr. President, I offer this amendment.

It is an amendment that came out of our select committee, chaired by myself. My ranking member was Senator FORD, who has been a strong leader on the 2-year budget process. As a matter of fact, he and I have introduced a 2-year budget measure year after year. I know he has an intense interest in this issue as well.

Other Senators have come up to me from time to time and indicated that perhaps it is time that we move to a 2-year budget, that the annual budget is simply overcrowded. We do not have any oversight, there is no stability on how we are going to fund the various programs. People are asking, "Am I going to get current funding, a 10-percent cut, what is the story?" I think the time has arrived that we should move to look at something on a constructive basis.

That is what we have is budget gout. We have the budget on our mind for 8, to 10 months out of the year, and we have two other processes. We have the authorization process and we have the appropriation process. Quite frankly, what we are doing is going from the budget process each year into the appropriation process, and many of our authorizing committees become squeezed out.

So I am hopeful that we can move ahead with what the Senate did back on May 17, when this resolution was passed. It passed the Rules Committee and passed our temporary select committee to look at the system. I think it is a step in the right direction. We are not binding anybody to the 2-year budget process, but we are certainly encouraging the examination to look at the feasibility and the advisability of moving to a 2-year budget in place of the annual budget that we now have. I am fearful that if we do not study alternatives, and the budget process continue to break down, there will be perhaps an amendment offered, not in this nature, but rather to disband the budget process completely. I am not so sure we are ready to make that precipitate decision, but I can sure say momentum has gained and many questions have been raised. Already the House has gone ahead with their appropriations bills, even though a budget has not been passed.

So, Mr. President, I offer this in the spirit of reform. I offer this in the spirit of helping the process to move forward. I offer this so that we may sit down as reasonable men and women of this Chamber and this institution to look at what we have done for the last 10 years.

Certainly, when we created the Budget Control and Impoundment Act of 1974, we did not know what lay ahead of us. We had an idea. I was not here at that time. I think now is perhaps the time to take corrective measures. In the spirit of developing something more constructive and more accommodating, yet still preserving the debate that is so very necessary in this Chamber. This amendment will establish a committee that will report back within 180 days with recommendations on how we may or may not proceed to the 2-year budget. It certainly would be open to discussion.

It is an open question. I have my own biases; others have their particular opinions. But I think it is time we discussed the issue and not sweep it under the rug and say it does not exist. It is a problem. It is a huge problem, a problem that will not go away. Because of that, I hope we can accommodate the spirit in which this amendment is offered.

Mr. President, my amendment to H.R. 2942, the appropriations bill for the legislative branch for fiscal year 1986, is designed to get us moving on the path toward reforming the budget process. It becomes increasingly apparent that our current budget process has failed once again, in fact, this measure could only reach the floor by again waiving the relevant section of the Budget Act. Should we waive the budget process on the bill that provides our pay and expenses without at least providing a mechanism to improve that process so that we need not follow the continual routine of waivers year after year? In light of the unfortunate course the budget process has taken not only this year, but nearly every year in recent history, I believe it is indeed time to consider reform of the budget process.

Prior to the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 the traditional process of making spending decisions involved two stages, each executed by different committees in both Houses. The initial stage involved authorizing committees to review specific programs and detail their line-item requirements. Following authorizations the appropriating committees are to evaluate the recommendations of the authorizations and then determine the actual spending levels.

The 1974 Budget Act established the House and Senate Budget Committees, not as replacements for their respective authorizing or appropriating committees, but rather as a third stage in the spending process. The Budget Committees were intended to set revenue floors and spending ceilings for the other committees, but not to engage in line-item determinations. The purpose of the act was to develop a better-informed environment in which to make spending decisions. Total revenues and aggregate spending as well as deficits and outyear budget projections were to become part of the congressional budgeting process.

Unfortunately, the budget process has not worked as it was intended. This has been due in part to the erosion of the traditional distinctions between authorizations and appropriations, but more so, I believe, because Congress has been unable to complete its work in a timely way.

Under the act, Congress must pass two budget resolutions each year—a first budget resolution on May 15 to set targets for spending by functional categories, and a second budget resolution by September 15 to set binding provisions for revenues and expenditures. Since the passage of the 1974 Budget Act, the first resolution deadline has been met only twice, the second only once. Past experience, particularly in the last 3 years, clearly illustrates that there is not sufficient time in a single year to implement three separate legislative processes—the budget process as well as the authorization and appropriations processes.

As chairman of the Temporary Select Committee to Study the Senate Committee System last year, I received testimony which was overwhelmingly in favor of a 2-year budget process. While this support is extensive, I realize that there are many difficult questions that must be resolved in order to move toward that goal. Legislation proposing such changes must also, obviously, require action by the House as well as the Senate. However, I am pleased that a house task force has received similar testimony and is well aware that close cooperation will be needed between the House and Senate to enact such legislation.

The report of my temporary select committee included in it a recommendation to establish a select committee to study the budget process with particular emphasis on the feasibility of 2-year budgeting. Although that is the emphasis of the recommendation, it does not necessarily prejudge the outcome. The ultimate goal of this study would be to determine the best, most efficient and feasible method for the budget process. As I have introduced legislation in the past, and cosponsored legislation with senator FORD relating to a 2-year budget, I personally believe the 2-year budget to be the best means toward that end, however the select committee on the budget may report any recommendations that if finds requisite to reforming the budget process.

Among other prevalent leaders in favor of a 2-year budget, I am pleased to note that the distinguished majority leader commented on the need to adopt a 2-year budget recently on network television with commentator David Brinkley. Previously, then Congressional Budget Office Director, Alice Rivlin, had said that Federal appropriations could be placed on a 2-year cycle.

Earlier this year, Senator EVANS introduced a resolution, which is before this Chamber as Senate Resolution 157, which would establish a temporary select committee to review the congressional budget process. I cosponsored this measure along with Senator MATTINGLY, as it was an earlier recommendation of my "committee on committees." Today I offer a similar measure as an amendment to the legislation before this body.

The committee established to study the budget process would consist of 12 members equally divided between majority and minority, including 2 members of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, 2 members of the Rules Committee, 2 members of the Appropriations Committee, 2 members of the Budget Committee, and 4 Members from the Senate at large. The committee would select a chairman from among its members and would be instructed to report to the Senate within 180 days. This committee would be granted sufficient authority to propose legislation, as currently the jurisdiction over amendments to the Budget Act is divided among the Governmental Affairs, Budget, and Rules Committees.

Mr. President, the potential perils of our current budget impasse obviate the need to look toward reform of our budgeting procedure, so that Congress may act to stem the flow of red ink within a system that allows this to be done in a feasible and efficient manner.

I fully recognize that a point of order may be made against this amendment as it would constitute legislation on an appropriations bill as is prohibited under rule XVI clause 4. However, I believe this amendment to be germane, as it says, in essence, that we will vote ourselves money only when we have done our duty to reform the ailing budget process. I would venture to guess that a skilled draftsman could even convert the amendment into a limitation that would survive the scrutiny of the Parliamentarian. However, this is an issue much too serious to rely upon gimmicks or gadgetry—either we want to reform the budget process, or we do not. Whether we vote up or down on the amendment, or on an appeal of the ruling of the Chair, the meaning of our vote will be clear.

Mr. FORD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DENTON). The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my name be added as original cosponsor to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I wish to preface my remarks to be very clear that I did not think anyone who is advocating a 2-year budget cycle is attempting to say that those who are on the Budget Committee or those who are now struggling in the conference as it relates to a budget for this country are not sincere, dedicated hard-workers and, in many respects, I would not have their job. They are in the state, I think of doing everything in their capacity to give this country a good budget.

I started some 8 years ago saying that a 2-year budget would be good for the country and it would be good for the Congress. I think those who are still here who advocated the Budget Committee will say that there need to be changes in the Budget Committee's direction, need to be some changes made in the precedure. And those who are so deeply involved in it now, I think, I see some very clear ways that improvement can be made. I am of the opinion that once a 2-year budget cycle is developed, we can find ourselves in the posture of doing a much better job.

Some who are now wanting to get involved in a 2-year budget proposal have never been interested in it before. I think that supports a statement by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE], who said that we are getting a lot of questions about the 2-year budget. We are getting letters wanting answers and wanting to discuss the procedure under our so-called 2-year budget that the distinguished Senator and I have been working on and heading the select committee that was proposed to study and then make recommendations to the floor. I think it is time, and I think the emotions are right, for us to look at a 2-year budget. How much oversight of the expenditures and needs of various committees do we have?

I will venture to say very, very little. How much scrutiny is given in various committees to the agencies within their jurisdiction in relation to their expenditure of funds and their needs? What the 2-year budget cycle will do, Mr. President, is to give us some time. You can change a 2-year budget the same way you change a 1-year budget. It takes us 10 months to try to get through a 1-year budget now, and we have not finished last year's budget yet. Since the Budget Act was passed, I think we have cleared once all 13 so-called budget resolutions. I very strongly support the Senator from Indiana. We are not trying to take anything away from anybody. We are trying to develop the required direction to develop a budget. I do not know about my other colleagues, but when I go home—and I go home every weekend, 45 weekends a year in the 10 years I have been here—what I hear is, "Why can't you get a budget together? The counties have them. The States have them, but the Federal Government does not have a budget."

It does not have a budget and has not had one for several years. We are operating on a continuing resolution. I think the admission of many folks is that we need to look for improvements in our budget system, and I think what we have, as it relates to the Select Committee, will carry out the recommendations of the Quayle Select Committee to Study the Senate Committee System, on which committee I was privileged to serve as cochairman.

So, Mr. President, I hope our colleagues will give us an opportunity to study the 2-year budget. We will hit it again. It will come before us again. All we want to do is appoint a group from this body, from the various committees, to study the 2-year budget process and improve our ability to make decisions. That is all we are asking. Give us an opportunity to see if we can improve the way we are making the decisions put our abilities to better gain.

Mr. President, I support the amendment as submitted by the distinguished Senator from Indiana and hope my colleagues will approve it.

Mr. MELCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I commend my two distinguished colleagues and the chairman and ranking member on the temporary Select Committee to Study Senate Committees for bringing this proposal before the Senate. I think it is a wise step and one that is needed. The study will determine whether it is acceptable to the Senate or not and can be determined upon presentation of the results of that study.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader.

Mr. BYRD. I am not opposed to the amendment per se and probably would support the effort. I feel, however, that the Committee on Government Operations, the Committee on the Budget, the Committee on Rules, and the Committee on Appropriations should participate in this effort. I hope the Senator does not intend to press his amendment on this bill. Why? Because he is establishing a Senate committee by the amendment. That in my judgment should not go to the House or to the President. This is a Senate matter, and I would not want to subject any proposed change in the Senate rules, or any matter which involves only the Senate to the President on a bill which might entertain a veto. I do not want the President to have a veto over a matter of this kind. I do not want the House to have any veto over it. I hope the Senator will withdraw this amendment and possibly offer it as a separate measure or offer it to a Senate resolution so that the matter will not be subject to action by the House, and not be subject to veto by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise to commend my distinguished friend and colleague, Chairman HATFIELD, and the members of the Senate Approrpiations Committee for bringing the first appropriation bill to the Senate floor. I know the chairman is anxious to proceed with the Appropriation Committee's business as the new fiscal year approaches. No one knows better than I the frustrations felt by the Congress during the difficult and lengthy budget negotiations. I thank my good friend and colleague, Chairman HATFIELD, for the patience he has shown in awaiting an outcome to our budget deliberations.

As my colleagues in the Senate well know, the Congress has not yet enacted a budget resolution, but I can assure them that this Senator is doing whatever he can to get a congressional budget. In view of the ongoing budget negotiations, I will not insert into the RECORD today the usual tables scoring the relationship of the pending appropriation bill to the budget resolution, the President's budget request, and the House-passed bill. I will do so later at an appropriate time. I will simply congratulate Chairman D'AMATO on reporting a legislative branch appropriation bill that is generally consistent with the assumptions of the Senate-passed budget resolution. The energy and water development appropriation bill that may be called up later today is under the assumptions of the Senate-passed budget resolution in budget authority and generally on-track in outlays.

Mr. President, from an overall budget perspective, I have no problem with either the legislative branch or energy and water development appropriation bills for fiscal year 1986.

Mr. President, I also rise with reference to the resolution that has been offered by the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana as an amendment to the legislative branch appropriations bill. I commend the distinguished Senator from Indiana and all of those who have indicated from time to time that they would like to see the Budget Impoundment and Control Act amended to include a 2-year budget process. I have been working under this budget process for 4 years and 8 months as chairman, and for about 6 years before that as a member of the minority, and I am fully aware that it is a very cumbersome and difficult process. All things considered, if just a few of us could sit down and review the entire Budget Act, we might be able to improve it. But it took about 7 years of hard work to get the Budget Act passed, because of the various jurisdictions and established Senate processes and rules that had to be considered.

I remind the Senate that it is a substantive law of the land passed by both Houses. It had as its impetus the impoundment authority used by the President and in addition, a marvelous accommodation with existing processes and Senate rules to put us in a position where we could produce a budget in an orderly process over the year. The Budget Act didn't create only the budget resolution but a process that enables the Congress to comply with the overall guidelines set in the budget resolution.

I will again commend my friend from Indiana and those who have spoken today in favor of a 2-year budget cycle. I will say, however, that there are probably 10, maybe 20 things in addition to the 2-year cycle that ought to be considered with reference to the Budget Impoundment and Control Act.

In fact, it has many problems. I am not sure that when we get around to amending it, we will solve them all. It will always be a process that is difficult in our kind of institution.

There is no doubt in my mind that it needs amending. There is no doubt in my mind that it has needed amending for a long time. There is no doubt in my mind that among those things that should be considered is a process that would last for more than 1 year, and some way of measuring congressional actions against that 2-year resolution on a regular basis.

The 2-year budget process may be the most important aspect of such deliberations, and it may not. There may be other aspects of the Budget Impoundment and Control Act that are just as serious to its failures and its successes that we have to look at.

I can only say to the Senate that, in the last 4 years, I have sat down three times and seriously considered going to the Governmental Affairs Committee to talk to my good friend, Chairman ROTH, who is on the floor, and others on that committee, about starting hearings. As I said before, the budget process can be a very difficult and cumbersome process in need of some improvement. Each time I thought of the budget process in the past, I was not oblivious to its shortcomings, and I was not oblivious to the fact that it takes a lot of the Congress' time. I was not oblivious to the fact that it causes a lot of consternation to some of my colleagues, and I was not oblivious to the fact that a lot of Senators do not like it. I know all that.

In fact, the latter is probably one of the reasons why from year to year I decided that it was not timely to seek hearings with the Govermental Affairs Committee, and to amend the Budget Act.

I will say unequivocally that whatever its shortcomings are, when Congress has $200 billion deficits and even projected deficits of $230 to $240 billion, Congress is not going to invent a process within the framework of this institution and the U.S. Congress that is going to work smoothly and easily. It is just not going to happen. Whatever process you have is going to be difficult, because of the difficult times.

It is almost difficult for us to bring a resolution to this desk, and it is the only one of its kind. It states all the fiscal facts about the year. It is a lot easier for people to look at it a little bit at a time and not have anybody tell them the total picture. You could not even get 51 Senators to vote for the resolution without asking them to change it, because many would say, "If I had to vote just for a statement of what the deficit is, I am fearful somebody will say I voted in favor of it."

Nonetheless, I assure those who have offered the amendment—even without listing my 20 or 30 items that I think should be looked at—that it is my clear intention to have hearings as soon as we are through with this current budget, probably within 2 or 3 weeks, on amendments and modifications to the Budget Impoundment and Control Act—I have confirmed this with Senator CHILES, the ranking minority member of the Budget Committee, and I have conferred with Senator ROTH of the Governmental Affairs Committee about hearings. I believe the hearings can be held jointly with the committees of jurisdiction, and I believe the Senator from Delaware agrees.

We will take into consideration the recommendations of the special committee that the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana chaired at the end of last year, which recommended a 2-year budget cycle. I note that they recommended many other revisions to the rules.

I also want the distinguished Senator, the sponsor of the amendment, to know that we are going to look at a lot of other proposals. I think people sometimes wonder whether I have thought of any ideas. I will mention one.

I thought that perhaps we could have a joint House and Senate Budget committee in the Congress. I have even thought that perhaps that joint committee should meet every 2 years and report a 2-year budget for the Congress. Such a joint committee could produce a budget document for the Congress within 90 or 100 days at the start of each Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold?

It is becoming difficult to hear the speaker, who is speaking about an important subject. Will Senators please hold down their conversations so that the Senator from New Mexico can be heard?

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

Just as I have thought of that proposal I have also thought of all the problems it brings into play. There are many problems that should be looked at.

I assure the sponsor and the cosponsors of the amendment that it is my intention to have the Budget Committee and the Governmental Affairs Committee begin joint hearings at the earliest possible date this year on the entire Budget Impoundment and Control Act and the recommendation for a 2-year budget cycle.

It is also my intention to do whatever I can, as a result of those hearings, to recommend to the U.S. Senate whatever amendments that joint effort yields to improve the budget process for the U.S. Senate. Obviously, whatever we look at has to be enacted by both Houses because, I do not think Congress could have one budget for one House and one for the other, although of late it appears that we are trying to do that—to have one for the House and one for the Senate. At least, the House thinks it might work.

Obviously, if it were that easy, it would never have needed a substantive law, and several years of work that many Senators like the Senator from West Virginia, ROBERT C. BYRD and 10 or 15 others spent on it.

I give my colleagues these assurances, and I commend them for their genuine concern. I understand their frustration, and I submit, in closing, that the frustration is commensurate with the nature of the problem; and the nature of the problem is far more the size of the deficit than it is the budget process in general.

If there were a will, Congress could do almost anything it wanted to do. The problem is that to find a collective will to address these deficits is difficult these days.

It is amazing how many votes we have on issues that are allegedly in the budget which are not in the budget, which are not to be carried out by the budget, and that makes the process very difficult for Members. I do not know if we can resolve such issues, but we should consider it.

I have to return to the conference on the budget, for the seventh different format, and I wonder whether the Senator from Indiana has any further questions of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a question, I really do not have any questions to put to him.

I appreciate the chairman's genuine interest in trying to accommodate the Senator from Indiana and taking a close look at the Budget Impoundment Control Act of 1975. I detect from his statements that he agrees quite earnestly and sincerely that we have to take a hard look at this. He now indicates that he and the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH], are willing to enter into joint hearings, to take a look at the whole budget process.

One of the things I am keenly interested in—and I know that the Senator from Delaware is, as well—is the possibility of moving to a 2-year budget. I congratulate the Senator from New Mexico in always being a step ahead of the game around here. His sense of timing in realizing that we have to get on with a true examination of the budget process is appropriate.

The time is now.

If the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Delaware, who are the chairmen of the two respective committees, want to get in it and have joint hearings, obviously they are going to indicate to me that a separate committee is not necessary. Those kinds of assurances are gratifying.

I have no special interest in trying to create jurisdictional problems or any turf battles. My only interest comes from my concern about the process that is going on around here. I believe we are beginning to make some genuine steps forward. Everything is geared around timing. I think and I sort of sense that the time to move is now.

The Senator from New Mexico says and concedes the point that the Budget Act, in fact, does need amendment. He stated that and talked about some of the possible amendments he might suggest. He probably has more ideas than anyone. He has been more intimately involved in the process than anyone else in the entire Congress.

So we certainly welcome that input and anyone else's input.

The only thing I am saying, and perhaps now is a good time to rest our case, is that we really have to get on with the business of trying to improve the process.

I certainly commend the Senator from New Mexico and I see the Senator from Delaware is on his feet and might wish to add to the hearings he is going to have.

With those assurances, I can assure the Senators from New Mexico and Delaware that I will be glad to work with them in any way that they see fit.

I thank the Senator from New Mexico for pointing out the possibilities that he may want to offer. I know of his genuine interest and concern, and I look forward to working with him and reporting legislative remedies and reporting legislative proposals back to this body, after we have deliberate consideration in the proper committee of jurisdiction.

That does not mean we are going to, but we are certainly going in that direction to have a good examination, a competition of ideas, with the idea that we can, in fact, report back some improvements to the Budget Control and Impoundment Act of 1975.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from New Mexico yield for a question of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH]? They are both here.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield.

Mr. FORD. I ask the two Senators a question. They were helpful in the original working of adding to the Rules Committee.

Senator QUAYLE is a member of the Budget Committee, and I do have a little pride of authorship of the first bill some 6 or 8 years ago.

I wonder if there is any way we might embrace the Rules Committee to give me an opportunity to participate in the joint hearing.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I think under the rules that were set up under the Congressional Budget Control and Impoundment Act of 1974 that jurisdiction on any modification within this area is the responsibility of the Budget Committee and the Governmental Affairs Committee.

As a matter of fact, I think the first chairman of the Budget Committee, Chairman Muskie, was responsible for those decisions. So I would hesitate to modify and add other committees. But certainly it would be the intent of this individual and I am confident of the chairman, the Senator from New Mexico, that we would want to involve other distinguished Members of the Senate, certainly the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, who has, as he has rightly pointed out, been long interested in a 2-year budget.

I would hope that he and the distinguished Senator from Indiana would be among the earliest witnesses before the joint hearings which the distinguished Senator from New Mexico and myself agreed to hold.

But I think under the rules of the legislation those are quite clearly spelled out as to where the responsibility lies. It would not be appropriate at this time to modify them.

But again let me say that I, like the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, have for many years been a strong advocate of a 2-year proposal. I think that this is an idea whose time has come and deserves a most careful consideration by the two committees.

Certainly, speaking only for myself, I would welcome the participation of the Senator from Kentucky in the hearings and in the deliberations as well. But I think that the jurisdiction as set out in the act should be followed, and I would assume that the Senator from New Mexico would agree with that.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Delaware.

I remind both Senators that the Budget Act itself did come out of the Rules Committee, that the so-called Quayle-Ford recommendation for the select committee came out of the Rules Committee.

I think both Senators acquiesced in the suggestion earlier on to allow the Rules Committee to be a part of it. They did that as a favor to me.

I know the Senator can stand with the rules and those sort of things. But we also can agree to certain things.

I hope they find it in the goodness of their hearts to allow me to participate in the joint hearing and be a part of something I feel very strongly about. If we can do that in consultation, maybe we can in good will. Otherwise, I will do the best I can on the outside and testify, and that is about all I can do.

So I do appreciate the reading of the rules to me by the distinguished Senator from Delaware. I understood those very well in the beginning. I am just hopeful that we might be able to stretch it just a little bit to give me an opportunity to participate as a somewhat official member of the joint hearing.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I just wish to thank our two chairmen, the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Delaware, for moving ahead and having these joint hearings. I look forward to working with them. I look forward to testifying. I know of their genuine sincerity in trying to come to grips with this budget problem that we have. I have described it as a budget gout that Congress has. I believe that that is true, and I say it again, and I will probably say it again and again until we try to get a better procedure on how we deal with the budget process here in Congress.

Mr. President, with those assurances from my two eminently distinguished chairmen of the Governmental Affairs Committee and the Budget Committee, I ask unanimous consent at this time to withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to withdraw his amendment.

The amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 569

Purpose: (To appropriate $325,000 to the United States International Narcotics Control Commission)

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be as stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] for Mrs. HAWKINS, proposes an amendment numbered 569.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 6, after line 2, insert the following:

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL COMMISSION

For expenses of the United States International Narcotics Control Commission, as authorized by section 814 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, passed by the Senate on July 31, 1985, $325,000.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared on both sides.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I wish to submit today an amendment calling for appropriation of funds for the creation of an American International Narcotics Control Commission.

No threat strikes America as savagely and as frequently as that of illegal narcotics. Its deadly impact is felt in failed education, lowered productivity, impaired national defense, increased violent crime, addiction, and death.

To combat this threat effectively, we must use a three-pronged approach: We must eradicate, we must educate, and we must cut off drugs at the source. In order to achieve the eradication of drug abuse in our Nation, we must fight the battle against illicit narcotics simultaneously on all three fronts, and in so doing we must use every weapon at our disposal.

A most useful weapon would be an American International Narcotics Control Commission, designed to monitor and promote international compliance with narcotics control treaties, including those involving eradication, money laundering, and terrorism. This Commission would also monitor and encourage U.S. Government and private programs seeking to expand international cooperation against drug abuse and narcotics trafficking.

The Commission would be comprised of Members of the U.S. Senate, and individuals from the private sector. The President of the United States will participate in the activities of the Commission by submitting a semiannual report with regard to the status of international compliance with narcotics control treaties, the initial report to be submitted 6 months after the date of enactment of this proposal. In turn, the Commission is authorized and directed to report to the Congress on a periodic basis, and at the end of each fiscal year the Commission will submit to the Congress a report on its expenditures.

Mr. President, a well-structured and well-supported entity such as the American International Narcotics Control Commission would be of invaluable assistance in the battle against drug abuse. Providing adequate funding for this Commission would ensure the creation of an international forum for consideration of narcotics control efforts worldwide; and would enable my colleagues in the U.S. Congress to express their concern in this most vital of issues.

Mr. President, as we all work together to achieve the eradication of drug abuse in our Nation, I wish to take this opportunity to urge that favorable and expeditious action be taken on the funding request for the creation of an American International Narcotics Control Commission.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I move adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I am not going to object to this amendment. I just wish to make this point.

It is my understanding that the authorization for this appropriation, and I just learned this a minute ago, is on the State Department authorization bill and the appropriation is being made on the legislative affairs appropriations bill.

Now, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BUMPERS. Do the rules of the Senate speak to an authorization being on one bill and the appropriations to fulfill that authorization being on another?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate rules do not preclude that procedure.

Mr. BUMPERS. So this is an appropriation on this bill and the money could legitimately be spent pursuant to that authorization on the State Department budget authorization?

I hope I have made that clear. If there is any question about it, I hope the Parliamentarian will say so. I think it presents an interesting question. I am just curious.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate specifically authorizes such an amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from New York tell us what this amendment is all about that is being approved on both sides? I wish to have an explanation of it.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, this provides for expenditure of some $325,000.

Mr. FORD. I did not quite understand.

Mr. D'AMATO. It is for the American International Narcotics Control Commission. The goal is to monitor and promote compliance with international narcotics control treaties.

The structure of the commission is seven Senators, four from the majority and three from the minority, five private sector experts, with a status report by the President.

I said it has a budget of $325,000. It was agreed to in the Department of State authorization bill which has been passed.

It is an amendment to the legislative appropriations bill to provide that $325,000.

I do not think there is any more important problem that we face than the drug problem, and I support this.

Mr. FORD. I understand the distinguished Senator. But is this $325,000 to appoint four Senators on the majority and three from the minority to oversee the drug problem, when we already have agencies of the Federal Government set up to do that? Could we not add more agents? Could we not add more security? Could we not add more to offshore work as it relates to keeping the drug problem out of this country than to give seven Senators an opportunity to sit down sometime and get a little television? Could we put that money into something that would make a greater impact in the reduction of drug abuse in this country?

Mr. D'AMATO. The goal would be to provide the internationalization of an effort and bring about compliance, particularly with the nations who are signatories to the Helsinki Commission, to promote that compliance through the international areas. And that is why we agree that the State Department should play a leading role in this. I think it certainly is important.

I think that merely putting on additional drug agents, as the Senator well knows, we have undertaken that. We have increased that effort, Senator DECONCINI and others, and I supported that effort. But I do believe that the promotion of international cooperative efforts in this area become most important. And I think that this is a miniscule amount of money. Any way in which we can improve further compliance, we should be supportive of this effort.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Under rule XVI, paragraph 4, "On a point of order made by any Senator, no amendment offered by any other Senator which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant." If I make that point of order, would it stand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The desk does not yet have a copy of the amendment.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I would say this has been a fast one. We are going to spend almost a half-million dollars and all of a sudden we do not even have an amendment at the desk.

Mr. D'AMATO. I would point out for the record that the amendment was sent to the desk and I asked to look at it when the Senator raised, appropriately, a question with respect to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In response to the question from the Senator from Kentucky, the amendment does not propose general legislation. As to the question of whether the amendment is germane or not——

Mr. FORD. Or relevant to the subject matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under rule XVI, questions of germaneness or relevancy shall be decided by the Senate.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, under rule XVI, I would like to ask for a ruling. It says that a point of order can be made to any general appropriations bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriations unless it be made to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation. Am I correct that this particular amendment would fall under that interpretation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Rule 16, paragraph 1 cited by the Senator continues "or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session."

This amendment on its face purports to be an amendment to carry out the provisions of an act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during this session.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for a quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I think I have made my point. I think, at least I hope, that other Members of the Senate will try to restrain themselves from moving so fast—authorized last night, appropriated tonight, one on one bill, one on another. We have almost $400,000 in one bill that has nothing to do with the authorization bill that we passed last night. If you think we have confusion as it relates to authorizing and appropriating money, this is exactly what happens. I have never been pressured so much to let this little amendment go. I think the principle of it is as important as the size of the money. I am not sure, and I have not been able to find out, where this puts us as it relates to the budget process; whether it increases the budget, whether it is the same figure, or whether we have to worry about the budget process or not. But I know I have some awfully good friends on both sides of the aisle that have been sweating for days trying to put a budget together. We are in here, we have one authorized on one bill, another appropriated on another bill, and we are beginning to go down that track. I think it is time we begin to look at how we are spending our money, where we are doing it and trying to be so fast without giving people an opportunity.

Mr. President, I will not object to the consideration of this amendment. I hope my point has been made. I regret I had to do it in this particular case, but I think I was proper in making my point. I think others ought to have the ability to consider the expenditure of funds without saying both sides agreed to it, never know what is in that piece of legislation, never know how much money we spend, and then we have to go back home, explain the deficit that we have, and how that money was appropriated in order to put something together.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I would like to commend the Senator from Kentucky for raising this point. I am not sure that I agree with the conclusions of the Parliamentarian, particularly with respect to the point of order in connection with paragraph 1.

At this moment, I do not know whether or not there is existing law that this appropriations item will be carrying out, and I believe the fact it says in the proposal that it was authorized by section 814 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act passed by the Senate on July 31, 1985 does not make it a law. Under paragraph 1, the effect is to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—we have no evidence to that effect—or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

I do not know if that is the case. The Parliamentarian apparently is not quite certain about that. I am not going to make that point. That is not the reason I am on my feet.

I am on my feet because now within 48 hours we have participated in the creation of two new commissions, if this passes. One is the commission to investigate the whole issue of municipal park accidents, and this is a commission to investigate whether or not to combine the narcotics laws. This may become known as the congressional session that did not do very much, but every time it got into a bind or decided it could not deal with an issue, it created a new commission—a new commission to spend money, to talk, talk, talk.

As I said the other day in speaking of the Danforth proposal on that subject, Lord save us from the creation of another commission.

I am not going to stand in the way of this, but I do believe the Senator from Kentucky was on target when he raised the issue. I think we are making a mistake in creating another commission. I think it is sort of a much ado about nothing in creating such a commission. It will not solve the narcotics problem. There are plenty of laws and agencies to do that.

I cannot look favorably upon this proposal. The Senator from Kentucky has raised the issue and indicated he would not object. I do not intend to object. But I have to say, as one Member of this body, I am sick and tired of creating new commissions. Let us pass legislation. Let us face up to the bar with respect to some of the tough issues that are challenging us. That is what we ought to be spending our time on, not just creating new commissions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Responding to the Senator respecting the definition of law, the Chair finds that the rules state "provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act or resolution previously passed," and that "act," I am informed, includes a bill that has passed at least one House. In this case, there has been such a situation.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, if I might, let me first state that I certainly appreciate the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Kentucky. I also want to thank him for his graciousness in not pursuing the point. I say the same for the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

As has been pointed out, this measure had been passed twice before. I hope that the commission will in time prove to be one that will be meritorious.

Mr. FORD. Will the distinguished Senator yield for one further question?

Mr. D'AMATO. Certainly.

Mr. FORD. How much does this cost? How much does each Senator receive as in relation to expenses?

Mr. D'AMATO. No compensation.

Mr. FORD. But there is $325,000 for seven Senators.

Mr. D'AMATO. Well, the commission would be composed of seven Senators and the private sector. Obviously, the money would be spent based on the Helsinki Commission for staff, reports, and international coordination in the area of narcotics. But certainly no compensation for Senators.

Mr. FORD. But 5 times 7 is 35. That makes $350,000. So you are going to spend roughly $50,000 per Senator for this commission that is going to coordinate drug abuse and narcotics and that sort of thing, when we already have it set up where it is done by the State Department rather than having seven Senators traveling around the world monitoring this.

Mr. D'AMATO. I hope that this would not be used as a vehicle by anyone, whether they be a Senator or from the private sector, to travel around, but, rather, one to coordinate the international effort, so desperately needed.

Mr. President, I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABDNOR). Is there further debate on the amendment. If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 569) was agreed to.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open for further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 2942), as amended, was passed.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I have been authorized by the majority leader to announce there will be no further rollcall votes tonight.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

IMPROVING THE OPERATION OF GOVERNMENT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 71

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

We share a common objective—to make government more responsive and sensitive to the needs of the people. Over the past several years, significant progress has been made toward:

—Controlling the growth of government by selectively limiting funding through the budget process and by controlling personnel levels;

—Identifying and preventing waste and fraud in government spending;

—Improving individual agency management, to further reduce costs and make better use of its resources;

—Developing government-wide management systems that can be adapted to the needs of each agency; and —Improving agency delivery systems to ensure that services are efficiently delivered to the American people.

Throughout this effort, I have sought the advice and counsel of the private sector. The President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control conducted systematic studies of agencies to determine more effective and efficient approaches to delivering services to the public. Thousands of recommendations were made and a large number have been and are being implemented.

The Congress has also supported our efforts by giving the Executive branch important tools to improve efficiency, including milestone legislation such as the Paperwork Reduction Act, the Congressional Reports Elimination Acts, the Prompt Payment Act, the Debt Collection Act, and the Deficit Reduction Act.

Today, I am requesting your further assistance to build on this foundation of progress through your continued support of our efforts to improve government performance. I am also asking you to pass a joint resolution establishing productivity improvement as a national goal and to enact management legislation that is critical to further improving the government's operations and reducing its costs. Together we can enhance our government's ability to use business-like procedures, providing the public with higher quality and more timely services at a lower cost—an objective shared by the Congress and the Executive branch.

The Productivity Improvement Program

The need for and importance of improving the efficiency with which the Federal government delivers goods and services to the American public cannot be overstated. The Federal government now accounts for 24.6% of the GNP. If we pattern our productivity efforts after those which have proven the most productive in the private sector, it is reasonable to expect that we could match or exceed the private sector's gains, which have recently climbed to about 3% per year.

Therefore, I will shortly establish a government-wide program to improve productivity 20% by 1992. Each agency will be called upon to establish specific priorities for improvement of their services, to examine each of their functions, and to achieve agency-wide productivity goals. They will be asked to focus on results, rather than on process. Agencies will be asked to draw upon the creativity and ingenuity of all employees, to properly reward any achievements in productivity improvement, and to minimize any negative impact productivity increases might have on their employees. This management approach is standard in the private sector and we plan to make it standard in the Federal government.

The President's Management Improvement Program: Reform '88 has provided a solid foundation upon which to base this productivity improvement program, as great strides have been made in establishing effective cash and credit management programs, improving agency management systems, lowering administrative costs, and reducing waste and fraud. Some of our Federal agencies have already demonstrated that they can make real improvements in productivity when they commit their time and talent.

The success of this effort will be reinforced by an early expression of congressional resolve to make productivity improvement a national goal. Each department and agency will report to me through the Office of Management and Budget on their productivity goals, and on both the progress and the problems in accomplishing them. On the basis of that report, our annual management report to the Congress, which is part of the budget, will also describe our efforts to achieve productivity improvements.

The Administration's Management Legislation Initiatives

The Congress has been most helpful in passing legislation that has made management reform possible. To further assure successful implementation of our Management Improvement Program: Reform '88, I have directed the Office of Management and Budget and agencies to transmit legislative proposals which would make it possible to improve substantially the effectiveness of the Executive branch. These management legislative initiatives cover the important areas of fraud prevention, payment integrity and simplification, procurement, reorganization authority, and reduction in regulatory and paperwork burdens. Some of these proposals have already been sent to the Congress, and other will be transmitted in the days ahead. I want to stress that each of these proposals plays an important role in improving government's management, reducing fraud and waste, or improving productivity. I hope that the Congress can enact them promptly.

Conclusion

Now is the time for us to redouble our efforts to improve the operations of government. The budget deficit, the need to make programs more responsive to their beneficiaries, the complexity of the problems we face, and the very size of government itself all require us to apply the best methods and procedures available to improve productivity. Enactment of the various legislative proposals outlined here will enable us to continue and strengthen our joint effort to improve government management.

Federal managers want to do a good job. Given the necessary tools and support, they can do so. Passage of these proposals will demonstrate our commitment to increased productivity and improved management practices in the Federal government. The American people want and deserve a Federal government that is fair, efficient, effective, and, above all, productive.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 31, 1985.

S. 1536. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide that per diem subsidies paid by the Veterans' Administration for the care of veterans in State homes shall not be used to offset payments that are made under the Medicaid Program for the purpose of assisting eligible veterans; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

PER DIEM PAYMENTS TO STATE VETERANS HOMES

● Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation with my colleague, Mr. COHEN, to change the present treatment of Veterans' Administration per diem payments to State veterans homes under Medicaid. While only a small number of State homes would be affected by this legislation, correcting the present treatment of the payments under Medicaid is extremely important to the affected homes.

The term, "State home" means a home established by a State for veterans disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, who by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living. The term also includes a home which furnishes nursing home care for veterans. The establishment, control, and administration of a State home is the responsibility of the State which it serves.

The VA promotes the care and treatment of veterans in State veterans homes as one means of developing and maintaining the highest possible quality of care for this Nation's elderly veterans. Congress has established two programs under which the VA provides assistance to State homes.

The first is a grant program authorized by title 38 U.S.C. 5031-5037. Grants under this program, go to construct new homes or to expand, remodel, or alter existing facilities and may not exceed 65 percent of the cost of construction.

The second is a per diem payment program authorized by title 38 U.S.C. 641-643. Under this program, the VA contributes funds directly to recognized State homes to help meet the cost of care for eligible veterans in the homes. Per diem payments under this program are made for domiciliary care, nursing home, and hospital care at set rates, but may not exceed one-half the cost of the veterans' care in the home.

State homes are established through legislation enacted by the State legislature, which also determines how the State will fund its share of the home's operation. Generally, that support is a direct appropriation from the State. Under such an arrangement, the home's revenues consist of State appropriations and the VA per diem payments.

But a small number of States, including my State of Maine, have chosen to fund the home's operation through the Medicaid Program. Under such an arrangement, the home's revenues consist of Medicaid and VA per diem payments.

As my colleagues know, the Federal and participating State governments share the cost of Medicaid by means of a variable matching formula. States with Medicaid veterans homes then do not directly support their homes with State revenue, except for the funds allocated to cover the State's share of the Medicaid payments to the homes.

In determining the extent of medical assistance Medicaid may provide for an individual applicant or recipient, States must consider whether there exists any "third party" liability for the individual's care and services that arises out of injury, disease, or disability.

If a State discovers that a third party is in fact liable for some portion of a Medicaid applicant's or receipient's care, the State must reduce its Medicaid payments to the extent of such third-party liability. The Office of General Counsel in the Department of Health and Human Services has recently ruled that VA per diem payments to State homes must be treated as a third party liability for purposes of Medicaid.

The result of this ruling is that State agencies which are entrusted with the responsibility of administering Medicaid, in the case of my State, the Maine Department of Human Services, are forced to reduce the Medicaid payments to the home by an amount equal to the VA per diem payments made on behalf of the Medicaid-eligible veterans residing in the home.

But the veterans throughout Maine argue that the VA per diem should not be considered a resource of the individual because the VA makes the payment to the home, not the individual veteran. Under Medicaid statutes, 42 U.S.C. 1396a(25) third-party liability is to be considered "as a resource of the individual on whose behalf the care and services are made available."

Veterans in my State have repeatedly and strongly voiced their objection to the present arrangement. They argue that it makes no sense for the Congress to authorize the Veterans' Administration to make payments to State veterans homes on behalf of veterans only to have those funds used by State agencies to replace State and Federal Medicaid dollars, with no benefit to the veteran.

The legislation I am introducing today with Senator COHEN is simple and straight-forward. It says that payments made to State veteran homes under section 641 of title 38 shall not be considered to be a third-party liability under Medicaid.

Mr. President, this question first came to my attention in December 1983. It is a question which has taken a great deal of my time since then as the debate on this question has raged in my State.

During the months of 1984 and 1985, the board of directors of the Maine Veterans Home has worked many, many hours in trying to get the present situation reversed. They have made their case to the Maine Department of Human Services and the Maine Legislature without success. The board has solicited the support of the Veterans' Administration and the Department of Health and Human Services. But all to no avail.

The introduction of this legislation stands as a testimony to the dedication the Maine veterans community, especially the board of directors of the Maine Veterans Home, toward Maine's elderly veterans and their spouses.

The home's board has persevered. For 2 years they have argued their case convincingly to me and the other members of the Maine congressional delegation. The introduction of this legislation is an important first step. I look forward to its enactment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a letter from the Congressional Budget Office regarding the impact the enactment of the bill would have on the Federal Medicaid Program be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 641 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Payments made to States pursuant to this section—

"(1) shall not be considered to be a third-party liability for any purpose under section 1902(a)(26) of title XIX of the Social Security Act; and

"(2) shall, for purposes of determining under title XIX of the Social Security Act the reasonable costs of services provided by a State home, not be deducted directly or indirectly from the operating or other costs of such State home."

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, June 14, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE J. MITCHELL,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: As you requested in your letter of May 6, 1985, we have reviewed your proposed legislation to amend Title 38, United States Code, to provide that per diem subsidies paid by the Veterans Administration for the care of veterans in State homes shall not be used to offset reimbursements to the home under the Medicaid program. Based on our analysis, we estimate that enactment would increase federal Medicaid costs by $2 million a year. State Medicaid costs would increase by a similar amount.

Our estimate is based on current Medicaid enrollment at those homes that would be affected by this proposal. Currently only four Medicaid-certified state nursing homes care for veterans who are Medicaid recipients: Homelake, Colorado has 17 such veterans; Augusta, Maine has 86; Oxford, New York has 109; and King, Wisconsin has 280. If the Veterans Administration subsidies were not considered third-party liabilities, then the Medicaid program would be required to pick up these costs. Depending upon the match rate, the federal government would pay varying shares of the costs in each state. The estimate assumes that no additional state homes would apply for Medicaid certification as a result of this proposal. If additional state homes did apply, the costs could be significantly above those estimated.

We would be pleased to respond to any questions you might have on this estimate. Your staff may contact Anne Manley (226-2820) with detailed questions.

With best wishes,
Sincerely,

ERIC HANUSHEK,
(for Rudolph G. Penner.)●

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, for some 4 years, the Maine Veterans Home has provided essential care to older veterans in Maine. Founded through the cooperative efforts of the Maine veterans community, Maine State officials, the Veterans' Administration, and the Maine congressional delegation, the home has earned much respect for the quality services it provides. The administrators of the home, however, are now concerned that a series of legal rulings may impair the future ability of the home to offer its veteran residents the high quality of care to which the home is committed.

The Maine Veterans Home is an intermediate care facility licensed by the State of Maine and provides services to Medicaid-eligible individuals under the Maine Medical Assistance Program. The home is certified by the Veterans' Administration to provide intermediate care to veterans and, as such, receives a per diem subsidy from the VA for each day of care provided to each veteran patient. The subsidy is authorized by 38 U.S.C., section 641.

The State of Maine Department of Human Services is the sole agency in the State of Maine authorized to administer the Medicaid Program. The Department last year ruled that the portion of the VA subsidy received by the home based on care provided to its Medicaid patients constitutes a third-party liability as defined in 42 USC, section 1396(a)(25) and 42 CFR, sections 433.135 through 433.154. Because the Department views the VA subsidy as a third-part liability, it has offset Medicaid payments otherwise due the home by the amount of the VA subsidy.

The administrators of the Maine Veterans Home questioned this offset practice on two grounds. First, the Maine Department of Human Services' ruling was based on a 1979 Federal decision whose legality the home questioned. That decision was made by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' Audit Office with regards to the Wisconsin Veterans Home. Second, the home argued that the offset practice was not in consonance with the intent of Congress with regards to the VA subsidy program.

To ensure a full hearing on the first of these questions raised by the administrators of the Maine Veterans Home, the Maine congressional delegation asked Secretary Heckler to review whether the VA subsidy should be considered a third party liability which must be offset. Earlier this summer, Secretary Heckler affirmed the consistency of the offset practice with HHS's interpretation of the applicable law and regulations.

This leaves the question of whether this interpretation is consistent with the intent of Congress. After careful consideration, the Maine congressional delegation has decided that the most appropriate means to evaluate this and to obtain timely congressional oversight of the situation as it affects other Medicaid-certified State veterans nursing homes would be through hearings to consider legislation to alter this offset practice.

Accordingly, Senator Mitchell and I are introducing legislation today which would provide that VA per diem subsidies authorized under 38 USC, section 641 not be considered a third-party liability under section 1902(a)(26) of title XIX of the Social Security Act. This legislation further states that such VA subsidies shall not be deducted directly or indirectly from the operating or other costs of a State home when determining, under title XIX of the Social Security Act, the reasonable costs of services provided by a State home. Our colleagues in the House, Representatives MCKERNAN and SNOWE are introducing identical legislation today regarding this matter.

This legislation will serve as a catalyst for a timely congressional evaluation of the implications for Medicaid-certified State veterans homes of this offset practice, as well as for clarification of congressional intent regarding the treatment of the VA per diem subsidy.

In so doing, we will take an important step toward ensuring that these State veterans nursing homes are able to provide the level of care to veterans that the Congress intended when it wrote the relevant laws.●

By Mr. NICKLES (for himself and Mr. PELL):

S. 1537. A bill to amend title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 to provide standards for students for maintaining satisfactory progress as a condition for assistance under that title; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

HIGHER EDUCATION SATISFACTORY PROGRESS ACT

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, today I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague, Senator PELL, in reintroducing a bill which makes some commonsense changes in Federal student aid programs. This legislation establishes a requirement that students receiving Federal student assistance maintain a "C" average as a condition for continued eligibility.

CURRENT LAW

Presently, a student continues to receive student assistance from the Federal Government as long as the educational institution which he or she attends will confirm that the student is in good standing. It is left up to the discretion of each educational institution to define good standing.

Unfortunately, this policy has resulted in serious mismanagement and use of Federal student aid resources. The General Accounting Office released a study in December 1981 which found that 20 percent of the students receiving Pell grants at 19 randomly selected institutions had less than a "C" average, half of which—10 percent— had an "F" average. Clearly, this lax discretion and judgment by some educational institutions is significant enough to merit congressional action.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION

The legislation that Senator PELL and I offer today gives a student receiving Federal financial assistance a 1-year period to establish an academic record. At the conclusion of this first year, the student's grade point is reviewed. If the student has less than a "C" average, then he or she is given a warning measure by being placed on probation for one grading period. If, during that grading period, the student again fails to make a "C" average or better, then he or she is no longer eligible for Federal financial assistance.

The legislation contains an "undue hardship" clause which provides for special difficulties that a student may encounter during the academic year. This clause is intended to allow the institution to give the student another probationary period if it determines that the student has to contend with unusually severe circumstances during the academic grading period in question. Examples of the kinds of extenuating circumstances which might be cited and accepted are the death of a close relative or serious personal injury or illness.

A student who, for academic reasons, has lost eligibility for Federal student assistance may again become eligible if he can demonstrate, in two consecutive grading periods, his academic commitment by maintaining a "C" average or better. Upon establishing such a record, he may again apply for Federal assistance.

Implementation of this legislation will simplify current law by creating a consistent and fair standard for students receiving Federal aid. It adds no new bureaucratic steps, in that an institution must already verify that a student is in good standing. This legislation simply asks for a GPA as part of that verification process.

PUBLIC COMMENT

In the 97th Congress, when we first introduced the Higher Education Satisfactory Progress Act, my office received a number of letters from throughout the country on this legislation. The correspondence represents a broad cross-section of people: teachers, student aid administrators, college presidents, students, parents, and taxpayers. By far, the vast majority of the mail was positive. I would like to share some of the comments and concerns which have been expressed:

A father in North Carolina—"You have an excellent idea and I support it. In fact, when college aid is from family funds rather than federal funds, your idea is often followed." This parent tells of his son's initial experience with college. The young man failed to achieve a 2.0 average and after several discussions with his family, decided to leave college and join the Navy. Three years later the son returned to college and completed his degree. The father closed by saying, "I don't believe that anyone could accuse the family of not being loving and supportive to our son. At the same time, we were not stupid, either. I think the federal government would be free of guilt also if it used the same rationale. . . ."

Bacone College in Oklahoma—The Acting President of Bacone College, a school which has been "serving the American Indian since 1880" writes, "I believe your proposal makes a great deal of sense and will be of benefit to a number of students who need a second chance."

College Educational Plans, Inc., of Dallas, Texas—"I fully support your efforts to require an adequate grade point average for a college student to qualify for any federal government sponsored educational loan or grant. In 1975, our firm designed a loan program to provide college educational loans to dependent children of employees of corporations. . . . The loans did require a grade of B– of better. . . . My point in mentioning this to you is to relate to you the substantial improvement in the grade point average of our students when compared to the simple grant program before 1975. In general, and through 1977, approximately 30% of our students would have qualified as a B– or better student. Following the implementation of the "Loan" program, the percentage now qualifying is closer to 65–70%."

Western Connecticut State College—The President writes, "I would be very comfortable supporting the bill that you described. . ."

University of California, Santa Cruz—The Director of Financial Aid expressed concern on two points: First, how is a non-graded school system to be treated? And second, what about the student who is experiencing severe personal problems? I am happy to say that the legislation addresses both of those questions. The university that does not use the traditional grading criteria is asked only to verify that the student has achieved the equivalent of a passing grade, as determined by the institution. Second, the university is given the latitude to determine whether or not a student's inability to maintain a "C" average is the result of "undue hardship." If such is the case, then the student is given an additional probationary period to establish a passing grade average.

In addition, an article appeared in the Washington Post which quoted the president of Harvard University as suggesting that U.S. education grants be given only to students with reasonably good high school grades and college board scores. Those pupils, he said, are most likely to finish college. The legislation which we are introducing today does allow everyone a fresh start by giving any student 1 year to establish an academic record. However, the concepts which I believe that President Bok was stressing of accountability and responsibility on the part of students and of prudent use of taxpayers dollars have been incorporated into this bill.

FISCAL IMPLICATIONS

Although there is no concrete figure as to the amount of financial assistance which can be redirected to more serious students, evidence indicates that it could be a very sizable amount. In the GAO's sampling alone, they found that 19.9 percent of the Department of Education aid recipients, 23.1 percent of the Social Security aid recipients, and 12.4 percent of the Veterans' Administration aid recipients had cumulative GPA's less than 2 or a "C" average. Even if this figure is not truly representative of all 7,726 schools that have students receiving Federal assistance, it indicates that a significant portion of the $8 billion spent on student aid could be used more effectively.

In closing, I think it is essential that Congress do all that is in its power to once again earn the respect and confidence of the American people for the manner in which we spend their tax dollars. Elimination of wasteful or inappropriate programs is only a part of the answer. The rest is in analyzing and reforming, where needed, existing programs so that they are more cost effective and responsible in their use of tax dollars. This is the intent of the "Higher Education Satisfactory Progress Act of 1985." I am pleased that Senator PELL, who is one of the most highly respected Members of this body for his knowledge and activity in the field of education, has understood the importance of maintaining integrity and responsibility in the Federal student aid programs for some time now. In 1980, Senator PELL introduced an amendment which was in the same spirit as the legislation we are introducing today. In addition, in 1982, the Senator from Rhode Island and I introduced this bill and received a number of cosponsors and positive feedback. I am pleased that we are again taking up the issue at this time when the Higher Education Act is being reauthorized.

Since the publication of the President's Commission on Excellence in Education recommendations, attention has been focused with new vigor on the strengths and weaknesses of our educational system. Although there has been diverse opinion on a number of the Commission's proposals, there was one which found near unanimous support. That was the recommendation to raise the standards and requirements for college admission. The legislation which we are introducing today is meant to compliment this proposal within the domain of Federal financial student aid programs.

I encourage my colleagues to examine our proposal, for I am convinced that what we have put forth today is a judicious and fair approach to directing student assistance to those students who not only need it, but who are serious in their determination to make the most of their educational opportunity.

I ask unanimous consent that the digest of the GAO's report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STUDENTS RECEIVING FEDERAL AID ARE NOT MAKING SATISFACTORY ACADEMIC PROGRESS: TOUGHER STANDARDS ARE NEEDED

The Federal Government provides billions of dollars in student aid each year under programs administered by the Department of Education, the Veterans Administration, and the Social Security Administration. These agencies have widely varying policies regarding satisfactory academic progress of students receiving assistance.

In reviewing the academic progress standards applied to students at 20 institutions of higher education, GAO found that these standards were often inadequate and not always enforced. Although each of the schools had established standards, they were often poor measurements of academic progress. Some schools had not enforced the standards they had established, resulting in overpayments of more than $1.2 million in Department of Education programs.

More stringent Federal requirements would alleviate many of the problems resulting from poor academic progress by students receiving aid.

DIGEST

Each year the U.S. Government provides billions of dollars in financial aid to students seeking a postsecondary education. While a wide array of assistance is available, the major programs are administered by the Department of Education (ED), the Veterans Administration (VA), and the Social Security Administration (SSA). These programs provided about $7.8 billion in student aid during fiscal year 1980. (See p. 1.)

There are no uniform requirements among the three Federal agencies regarding satisfactory academic progress of students receiving financial aid. VA requires an institution to establish and enforce a reasonable policy on satisfactory progress and meet specific requirements set by law and regulation. ED also requires that an institution set and enforce a policy, but does not provide specific criteria. SSA does not impose standards for academic progress in its program since there is no requirement set by law. (See pp. 2 to 8.)

In visits to 20 institutions of higher education and a review of more than 5,800 randomly selected student transcripts, GAO found that many students receiving financial aid were not making satisfactory progress. Mainly this resulted from school standards that allowed students to remain eligible for aid without proving that they were moving toward a definite goal with adequate grades and at a reasonable rate. Some of the institutions were not even enforcing their own standards. (See p. 9.)

GAO conducted its review in response to concerns raised in previous reviews of student aid programs on the adequacy of standards for determining satisfactory academic progress. After this review began, the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources expressed an interest in the issue and requested GAO to prepare a report on its findings for the Committee. (See p. 8.)

STANDARDS ARE NOT ADEQUATE

An effective academic progress standard should consider all factors which affect a student's academic performance. However, many of the schools visited did not have reasonable requirements concerning such factors as minimum grade point averages (GPAs), nonpunitive grades, and the rate of movement toward completion of a program of study. (See p. 9.)

While the schools visited uniformly required a 2.0 GPA (on a 4.0 scale) for graduation, they normally set their standards for determining academic progress at considerably lower levels. This resulted in large numbers of students on financial aid with low grades. Overall, 19.9 percent of the ED aid recipients, 23.1 percent of the SSA aid recipients, and 12.4 percent of the VA recipients in GAO's samples had cumulative GPAs below 2.0. In many cases, the averages were below 1.5, or the equivalent of a "D-plus." (See pp. 9 to 12.)

The performance of many students in GAO's samples was distorted by their schools' overuse of nonpunitive grades—grades which have no effect on the GPA or do not count toward program completion. The schools often offered wide ranges of grades which had no effect on the measurement of progress. At two schools, non-punitive grades accounted for more than 40 percent of all grades assigned during a recent term. (See pp. 12 and 13.)

A common example of a nonpunitive grade is that assigned for a course withdrawal. The schools visited often allowed students to withdraw from a course without penalty far into the term. GAO found many examples of students who had withdrawn from courses, allowing them to maintain higher GPAs, but also adding to the time necessary to complete a course of study. During the spring term of 1980, more than 20 percent of the ED and SSA aid recipients in GAO's sample withdrew from courses so that the number of hours they took was less than the number of hours required under their aid programs. (See pp. 13 and 14.)

Other nonpunitive grades were given for courses not completed or later repeated. Incomplete grades were often carried on a student's record for an extended time and, in some cases, were never converted. This resulted in higher GPAs than would have otherwise been the case. In some instances, students were allowed to repeat the same course numerous times. (See pp. 15 and 16.)

Only 10 of the 20 schools visited had specific requirements concerning the rate of a student's academic progress, and these requirements were often ineffective. This led to instances where students stayed in school and on financial aid for inordinate lengths of time. Among the ED aid recipients sampled, 56.3 percent of those attending school on a quarter system and 61.5 percent of those on a semester system were behind in their studies. (See pp. 18 to 20.)

In general, fewer instances of poor progress were noted among VA aid recipients than either ED or SSA aid recipients. GAO believes that this is due to the more stringent requirements set by VA, including (1) prior VA approval of a school's academic progress standard and a student's course of study and (2) refusal to pay for courses outside of an approved course of study, from which the student withdrew, or which did not count toward program completion. Neither ED nor SSA has such requirements. ED officials said they do not believe ED has the statutory authority to issue regulations setting specific requirements. There are no statutory requirements for academic progress in the SSA program. (See pp. 3 to 8.)

STANDARDS ARE NOT ENFORCED

Nonenforcement of academic progress standards is a major problem. Nine of the schools visited were not enforcing their published standards. Three schools were not enforcing their standards for ED or VA aid recipients, five schools were not for ED aid recipients only, and one school was not for VA aid students only. SSA had no academic progress requirements. (See pp. 22 and 24.)

For the schools which had not enforced their standards for ED aid recipients, GAO estimated overpayments of about $1.28 million. GAO did not project overpayments for VA recipients because the schools did not have information on the amount of financial aid paid by VA. (See pp. 22 and 23.)

CONCLUSIONS

Weak and nonspecific Federal requirements on academic progress have led to abuse of the student aid programs, particularly those administered by ED and SSA. A uniform Federal policy is needed. Although VA standards set by existing legislation and regulations are generally adequate, standards are needed for the rate at which a student is progressing. GAO believes that ED and SSA requirements should be essentially the same as those set by VA. This would require changes to both authorizing legislation and program regulations. (See pp. 25 and 26.)

These changes would accomplish the following objectives:

Tighter academic progress standards would save Federal funds now being paid to students not making satisfactory progress.

Schools would encounter fewer differences in the requirements for administering the three agencies' programs.

Federal agencies would be able to better coordinate their efforts in setting academic progress requirements and monitoring their enforcement.

Also, students might be encouraged to enroll in programs which are more suited to their abilities and which they are more likely to complete. (See p. 26.)

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am very pleased to join my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] in introducing the Higher Education Satisfactory Progress Act of 1985. Both Senator NICKLES and I are very concerned that the absence of specific academic standards for the receipt of Federal student aid can result in the abuse of these important programs, and thus weaken the valuable help they provide students who desire to pursue a postsecondary education but cannot afford it. This is the primary reason we are reintroducing the legislation we originally submitted in 1982.

The public reaction to this legislation when we first introduced it was very encouraging. Editorials from all parts of the United States endorsed it. The Madison, WI, State Journal said of our proposal:

> The best thing about the proposal is that it reserves loan money for serious students, the ones who will make progress toward a degree. They deserve help. It is a good amendment to a good program.

The Corning, NY, Leader said that the bill's enactment "may do more to improve scholarship in American colleges than any legislation in years."

In Boston, radio station WRKO said:

> Senator Pell's measure would eliminate student laggards, encourage others to meet higher academic standards, and it would save money. We endorse it.

But perhaps the most succinct endorsement came from the McComb, MS, Enterprise Journal, which said of our proposal: "It ought to be done."

Almost 3 years have passed since the initial introduction of our proposal. More than 3 years, however, have elapsed since the GAO issued its report that approximately 20 percent of the Federal student aid recipients it surveyed had less than a 2.0 grade point required for graduation, and about 10 percent less than a 1.5 grade point. In light of this situation, Senator NICKLES and I feel very strongly that this is an issue that must be considered as part of the pending reauthorization of the Higher Education Act. It is a bill whose time has come.

There is an important history behind this proposal, and as we introduce this legislation, it is a history that bears repeating.

The first satisfactory progress proposal was advanced by the Carter administration during the higher education hearings in October 1979. Dr. Mary Berry, then Assistant Secretary for Education in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, proposed on behalf of the administration that a student must successfully complete at least 50 percent of the course load undertaken using title IV aid during a given period of enrollment in order to be eligible for Federal aid in a subsequent period of enrollment. She also stipulated that this requirement would be waived for demonstrated hardship circumstances.

During the question and answer period that followed Dr. Berry's formal statement, I expressed my complete support for the idea that a student should have to maintain decent grades in order to receive Federal student aid. In fact, I thought the administration's proposed standard of 50 percent was too low.

In May 1980, when the full Senate passed S. 1839, the Education Amendments of 1980, included was a requirement, of which I was the principal proponent, that a student must successfully complete 75 percent of his or her academic course load to be eligible for assistance provided by Federal Student Aid Programs. That provision, however, did not contain a definition of what constituted successful completion of a course, but left that decision up to the individual institution of postsecondary education.

Unfortunately, the provision in the Senate bill was dropped in the House-Senate conference.

Since passage of the 1980 amendments, the Department of Education has worked closely with representatives of the education community on regulations requiring more specific standards of satisfactory progress. These efforts were designed to help insure the integrity of the Federal Student Aid Programs while also preserving institutional discretion in setting specific standards.

It is encouraging that the new rules stipulate that satisfactory progress must be the same as or stricter than the institution's standards for determining progress toward and successful completion of the educational objective. This helps avoid the situation cited in the GAO report where students can remain eligible for Federal student aid although never required to maintain a grade point average that matches the institution's requirement for graduation.

The regulations, however, do not establish a standard that can be enforced in an equitable and uniform manner. Senator NICKLES and I believe that there continues to be a need for a provision in Federal law that spells out specifically what a student must accomplish in terms of a grade average if he or she is to continue to receive Federal student aid.

The issue at hand is neither one of institutional integrity nor one of interferring with the operation of a college or university. Rather, the issue is one of an agreement which a student makes with the Federal Government when he or she accepts Federal student aid. I contend that the aid should be dependent upon a student's maintaining a satisfactory grade point average, and that is the matter directly addressed in this legislation.

In no way should the action we are seeking be construed as punitive. Nor should this legislation be misconstrued as an intrusive step into the affairs of a college or university.

We already have a series of eligibility rules for student assistance programs in areas such as family income, a student's status as dependent or independent, and whether or not the student is full time or part time. We have agreements concerning the repayment of loans. And we have limits on the amount of money a student can receive through grants and loans. The legislation that Senator NICKLES and I are proposing would simply add another requirement with respect to the level of academic work a student must maintain if he or she is to continue to be eligible for Federal student aid.

The Satisfactory Progress Act of 1985 would apply to all Federal Student Aid Programs included in title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended. If a student after the first year of postsecondary work has less than a C average or its equivalent, then the student would be placed on probation for the next grading period. If the student receives an average of C or better for the following period, then he or she would no longer be considered on probation and could continue to receive Federal student assistance.

Should the student earn less than a C average, however, he or she would be dropped from eligibility for Federal student aid. Once dropped, a student would have to earn a grade average of C or better for two consecutive terms in order to become eligible once again to receive Federal student aid.

There is also an undue hardship clause in our legislation. It would allow the institution to judge students with unusually severe situation, such as sudden death or illness in the family or particularly difficult personal or emotional problems, and allow them to continue to receive Federal student aid.

Mr. President, in this period of fiscal restraint, it becomes all the more important that Federal aid is not only well-targeted but also wisely used. That is precisely what our legislation seeks to do in the area of student aid. Very simply, it would help insure that Federal student aid moneys would be directed to deserving students who are serious and responsible about pursuing their academic work. To my mind, that is a worthy goal and one that is surely within our reach.●

By Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. BRADLEY, and Mr. EVANS):

S. 1538. A bill to replace the Synthetic Fuels Corporation with a more fiscally responsible scaled down Synthetic Fuels Assistance Program; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SYNTHETIC FUELS FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY ACT

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, today my colleagues and I are introducing legislation which we hope will put our Synthetic Fuels Program back on a productive track.

A little over 5 years ago, Congress established the Synthetic Fuels Corporation [SFC], gave it a lump sum appropriation of over $17 billion, exempted it from most laws governing accountability and congressional oversight, and instructed it to create a commercial synthetic fuels industry.

We all had high hopes that the program would allow us to utilize our vast resources of coal, oil shale, and tar sands to reduce our dependence on insecure foreign supplies of oil.

Mr. President, improving our energy security is a goal which has been especially important to me since I joined the Senate. I supported a National Synfuels Development Program back in 1979 and 1980, and I still support that concept today.

But over the course of the last 5 years, the SFC has not brought us any closer to establishing a viable synthetic fuels industry. I believe that we all have been patient and have given this agency the benefit of the doubt on numerous occasions. But there comes a time when we must ask whether or not we are getting what we hoped for from this program. Sadly, the answer is a resounding "no."

The SFC is an agency which is flawed in management and execution.

Administratively, this agency has been a disgrace. Mismanagement, scandal, and administrative abuse have run rampant. The performance of the SFC makes a mockery of the high goals we set for that agency.

Two presidents resigned amidst charges of mismanagement and impropriety.

Resignation of Board members left the SFC without an operating quorum for 8 months.

Massive turnover in the top staff positions have created instability and lack of direction.

The excessive salaries and benefits at the SFC would embarass any responsible public official. During this time of severe budgetary crisis, they are downright offensive.

Clearly, the SFC has abused the autonomy and freedom from normal congressional oversight that was granted to it.

The SFC has shown a similar inattention to fiscal responsibility in its attempts to create a synthetic fuels industry. Its efforts to create a viable industry through a crash commercialization program have been a failure.

Changing markets and unanswered questions concerning technical feasibility, cost effectiveness and environmental acceptability have added to the difficulties confronting the development of a successful synfuels industry. But the SFC has demonstrated an inability to fashion a program which addresses these uncertainties, encourages private sector commitment, and establishes the basis for a successful industry.

The SFC, set up as a financing bank and accenting commercial development, is not equipped to support the level of research which needs to be done.

Since inception of the Synfuels Program, over $2.5 billion has been committed, much of it to projects of questionable merit. Many other projects which are leading candidates for billions in additional SFC assistance also have serious failings, unresolved problems and lack of sponsor commitment. Yet, the SFC has offered outrageous price guarantees, as high as $90 per barrel of oil, in order to attract sponsors. Subsidies of this magnitude will inevitably result in the expenditure of billions of dollars.

Such expenditures could be justified if we knew they would lead to the creation of an independent, viable commercial industry.

Unfortunately, such is not the case.

The much publicized problems of the Great Plains project underscores this fact and highlights the plight of the SFC.

The Great Plains gasification project was one of the first projects funded under the Synthetic Fuels Program. The sponsors received an array of Federal subsidies, including a $1.5 billion Federal loan, generous tax credits and a FERC-approved pricing formula which guarantees an above market rate for their high Btu gas product at the expense of consumers. Today, gas from the Great Plains project garners $5.50 for the project sponsors, while natural gas in other areas is shut in because producers can't even get $3 for it.

Yet, the sponsors of the project-Tenneco, American Natural Resources, Pacific Lighting, Transco and Midcon, some of the wealthiest corporations in the country—have told the Government that they will default on the $1.5 billion loan and walk away from the project unless they receive even more subsidies.

And the SFC is prepared to capitulate to their demands.

Two weeks ago, the SFC approved a plan which would allow the sponsors to default on their $1.5 billion loan. As a reward for one of the largest defaults in the history of this Nation, the sponsors would receive another $673 million loan, with no assurances of any interest or principal repayment. To add the crowning blow, the SFC planned to throw in another $720 million in price subsidies.

Yesterday the Department of Energy rejected the SFC bailout plan because it was such a bad, one sided deal.

No one but the project sponsors would have benefited. The Government exposure appeared to increase, rather than decrease, and the proposal contained no requirements that the project sponsors make any commitment to the long-term operation of the project.

This is fiscal irresponsibility of the highest order.

Yet, the Great Plains story is the story of the SFC.

Instead of contributing to the development of a reliable, self-sustaining industry, the SFC is only creating an industry which will be perpetually dependent upon continual and increasing infusions of Federal subsidies for its existence. This does nothing for energy security, and only places greater strains on the Federal deficit.

Time and again, this agency has promoted the candidacy of weak and unpromising projects. It has offered outrageous prices guarantees on the order of $60 to $90 per barrel of oil. Yet, it has been unable to produce a sound synthetic fuels industry.

Rather than a vehicle to achieve energy security, the SFC has become a haven for many get-rich-quick schemes proffered in the name of energy security.

This is not what we expected when we created the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. This is not what the American public deserves.

The real issue in this debate is how to most effectively and efficiently develop synthetic fuels technologies.

Fundamental changes in the current approach are necessary if we hope to effectively explore and develop the potential of synthetic fuels. Simply providing additional subsidies for commercialization, whether in the form of loan guarantees, price guarantees, or tax credits will not make the current program any better—only more expensive.

It is time for Congress to get serious about snythetic fuels. We need to establish a program which will provide the basis for a strong, reliable industry, able to withstand the fluctuations of the energy market.

That is what our bill does.

Our legislation will abolish the SFC, and authorize a $500 million Synthetic Fuels Program in the Department of Energy. It requires substantial private sector cost sharing, limits the size of price supports, and provides for congressional review of all major commitments.

With an accent on appropriately scaled development, data collection and analysis, this program will ensure that we will acquire the data base required to establish the foundation for a successful commercial industry.

Mr. President, as we commence the debate on the future direction of our national synfuels effort, we cannot ignore the fact that it takes place against the background of the largest budget deficits in history. Deficits which threaten to cripple our economy if not brought under control.

I am a member of the Budget Committee. We have agonized long and hard over ways to reduce the deficit without impairing the quality of life for Americans. Many difficult choices have been put before us.

I do not believe we can, in good conscience, ask our constituents to accept hard budgetary measures affecting programs crucial to their well-being, if we are unwilling to make significant cuts in unproductive programs which threaten to add billions to our Federal deficit.

We tell the farmer beset by falling prices and high interest rates to seek help elsewhere. We tell the elderly that we cannot help them. Students cannot get loans from us. How then can we justify the continuation of this extravagant program which promises nothing but the spectre of billions in future deficits while filing the coffers of corporations?

We have a responsibility. We have a responsibility to our taxpayers and to this Nation. We must provide a responsible synfuels program—one that will work, and will yield results in an effective and efficient manner. Our legislation will achieve this.

The goal of energy security is too important to waste the limited funds we have available to us. We must judiciously and effectively employ the resources we have.

I hope that my colleagues will support this bill, and that the Energy and Natural Resources Committee will quickly turn its attention to this legislation.●

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senators METZENBAUM, PROXMIRE, and BRADLEY in the introduction of the Synthetic Fuels Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1985.

The Debate over the Synthetic Fuels Corporation [SFC] has raged since this quasi-governmental corporation was established in 1980. Then, its mandate was to help spur the development of a commercial synthetics fuels industry. The goal was to displace foreign sources of liquid petroleum, and thus fortify our energy security at home. To achieve this mandate, an energy-scared Congress gave the new SFC a huge wad of Federal money—$15 billion with the promise of billions more—and few limitations on how the SFC was to spend the money. Some of us argued then that this scheme was a sure-fire formula for disaster. The legacy of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has proven us correct.

After 5 years and millions of dollars, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has not bought the Nation one drop of energy security. What it has bought is a shameless record of waste and abuse of taxpayers dollars. The record of the Synfuels Corporation would be outrageous at any time. But in an era of out-of-control budget deficits, this kind of fiscal foolishness simply cannot be tolerated.

The time to do away with the SFC has long since passed. I am pleased to be joining my colleagues in introducing this bill. First and foremost, this legislation will abolish the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The legislation will also create a $500 million multiyear Synfuels Program at the Department of Energy, under strict new standards. Importantly, the legislation will also establish procedures for accountability and congressional oversight of the new DOE Synfuels Program.

Mr. President, I am delighted to join in this effort. I intend to do all I can to press for prompt Senate consideration of this bill. It is time for the Synfuels folly to end.●

By Mr. ROTH:

S. 1539. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to repeal the earned income limitation on the deduction for retirement savings and the age 70½ limitation on the deduction and distribution of retirement savings; to the Committee on Finance.

INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNT EQUITY ACT

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, today I am introducing S. 1539, the Individual Retirement Account Equity Act of 1985. I decided to introduce this bill after numerous contacts from senior citizens in my State and across the country. These people are upset because they have been prevented from participating in the IRA program due to provisions in the Tax Code that are nothing more than discriminations based on age.

There is a myth going around that our senior citizens do not like to save or have no reason to save. The myth holds that people save during their working years, and spend it all during their retirement. But there are many reasons why senior citizens would like to, and do, save. They may want to save to protect against catastrophic medical expenses. Or they may want to continue to save to travel. They may want to save to leave a bequest. In fact, a great deal of the saved wealth of this Nation is passed on to the next generation. Every dollar saved by senior citizens is good for the macroeconomy. Seniors can be prolific savers and our Nation, with its dismal savings rate, cannot afford to shut off this potential source of new capital.

The current Tax Code stops seniors from participating in IRA's in many ways. In the first instance, the maximum deduction is $2,000 or the level of so-called earned income, whichever is the higher. A retired person living off capital income cannot, therefore, participate in an IRA program because of lack of compensation. There is no reason why such a person should not be able to save in a tax deferred vehicle. Second, no person beyond the age of 70½ can take a deduction for an IRA and third, there is a forced distribution system after that age as well.

My bill would change all that. It would allow capital income, as well as compensation to be saved in an IRA. It would repeal both the prohibition on IRA deductions after age 70½ and the forced distribution system. As such the discrimination against seniors in our Tax Code would be removed in terms of this important saving vehicle.

This bill will aid seniors and at the same time aid the growth potential of our economy. I recommend it to my colleagues. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1539

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REPEAL OF EARNED INCOME: LIMITATION ON DEDUCTION FOR RETIREMENT SAVINGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 219(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to maximum amount of deduction for retirement savings) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount allowable as a deduction under subsection (a) to any individual for any taxable year shall not exceed $2,000.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (2) of section 219(b) of such Code is amended by striking out subparagraph (B) and redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B).

(2) Paragraph (4) of section 219(b) of such Code is hereby repealed.

(3) Subsection (C) of section 219 of such Code is hereby repealed.

(4) Paragraph (1) of section 219(f) of such Code is amended by striking out the last sentence thereof.

(5) Paragraph (2) of section 219(f) of such Code is amended by striking out "subsections (b) and (c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (b)".

(6) Subparagraph (A) of section 408(d)(5) of such Code is amended by striking out "$2,250" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,000".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.

SEC. 2. REPEAL OF AGE 70½ LIMITATIONS ON DEDUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION OF RETIREMENT SAVINGS.

(a) LIMITATION ON DEDUCTION REPEALED.—Section 219(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to other limitations and restrictions on retirement savings deduction) is amended by striking out paragraph (1) and redesignating paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) as paragraphs (1), (2), and (3), respectively.

(b) LIMITATION ON DISTRIBUTION REPEALED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 408 of such Code (relating to individual retirement accounts) is amended by striking out paragraph (6).

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Section 408(b) of such Code (defining individual retirement annuity) is amended—

(i) by striking out paragraph (3) and redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (3), and

(ii) by striking out "if it matures later than the taxable year in which the individual in whose name such contract is purchased attains age 70½;" in the last sentence thereof.

(B) Paragraph (1) of section 408(c) of such Code is amended by striking out "(7)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(5)".

(C) Paragraph (2) of section 408(d) of such Code is amended by striking out "paragraphs (1), (3), (4), and (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) and (3)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.●

By Mr. DODD:

S. 1540. A bill providing a statutory basis for a budget that requires that any increase in outlays be financed by an equivalent increase in revenues, and for other purposes; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on Governmental Affairs and the Committee on the Budget.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO BUDGET LEGISLATION

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am introducing today legislation to place congressional budget procedures on a "pay-as-you-go" basis. Simply stated, pay-as-you-go refers to a system of budgeting whereby spending in one area is allowed to go up only if there is an offsetting reduction in other areas, or an increase in revenues equal to the new expenditures. My bill would apply these principles to the enactment each year of the congressional budget resolution beginning with fiscal year 1987.

Reduction of the Federal budget deficit is the No. 1 domestic priority facing our Nation. Unfortunately, this problem is worsening as a result of less-than-expected GNP growth. In all likelihood, $200 billion deficits 3 years in the future are the most we can hope for from a favorable conclusion to the currently stalemated budget conference. In response to this overwhelming problem the Congress and the President offer the American people only quick fixes and political bumper sticker solutions.

Recently we debated the line-item veto. That proposal will not put us on the course to a balanced budget. If it did, I might be more inclined to support enactment of this concept. Indeed, the line-item veto does not cover all Federal spending. Only about 25 percent of Federal spending would be covered by this proposed extraordinary grant of new authority to the Executive.

In September, we may debate once again the constitutional amendment for a balanced budget. Even if adopted by the Congress, this amendment will take years to be ratified and even then will not tell us how to get to that balanced budget which we all wish to see.

Mr. President, political will and greater discipline in Federal budget procedures will produce a balanced budget over time. Clearly, we cannot legislate the former. The latter is the subject of the legislation I am introducing today.

Under the terms of my bill, a point of order would lie against consideration of the budget resolution if total outlays proposed exceed the level in the enacted resolution for the preceding fiscal year unless new revenues are proposed in an equal or greater amount. Revenues could not be any lower than in the preceding year's resolution unless outlays are reduced by a like amount. This would apply to both discretionary and entitlement spending.

These procedures could be waived by a two-thirds vote of the Members of both Houses of Congress. Finally, recognizing the great role the Executive plays already in the formulation of the budget, the President would be required to submit budgetary messages to the Congress which conform to pay-as-you-go criteria.

Under this legislation, total outlays and revenues are not required to balance, but changes in the levels of outlays and revenues should balance. In effect this allows the natural growth of the economy to reduce the deficit over time. When this concept was proposed originally by myself and Congressman GEORGE MILLER in 1982, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that if adopted, the Federal budget would be in surplus by the end of fiscal year 1985.

In conclusion, Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today will put increased discipine into Federal budget procedures. The deficit situation is out of control and our constituents rightfully are demanding prompt and meaningful action. I am confident that the pay-as-you-go principles can set us on a path to a balanced budget without upsetting the balance of power between the legislative and executive branches of Government and without the necessity of going through the lengthy and ill-advised process of amending our Constitution.

Pay-as-you-go tells us not only where we want to be in terms of responsible Federal budgeting, it also tells us how to get there. In the longer term, these changes will require us to muster complete political conviction and broad support before we undertake spending. I would urge my colleagues to give this concept their serious and favorable consideration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1540

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a)(1) notwithstanding any other provision of law, and except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall not be in order in the Senate or the House of Representatives to consider any concurrent resolution on the budget for any fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1986, or any amendment thereto or any conference report thereon if—

(A) the adoption of such concurrent resolution as reported;

(B) the adoption of such amendment; or

(C) the adoption of the concurrent resolution in the form recommended in such conference report, would cause—

(i) the appropriate level of total budget outlays set forth in such concurrent resolution for such fiscal year to exceed the appropriate level of total budget outlays set forth for the preceding fiscal year in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for that preceding fiscal year; or

(ii) the recommended level of Federal revenues set forth in such concurrent resolution for such fiscal year to be less than the recommended level of Federal revenues for the fiscal year preceding that fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for that preceding fiscal year.

(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), a concurrent resolution on the budget for a fiscal year may—

(A) provide for an amount of budget outlays for such fiscal year in excess of the appropriate level of total budget outlays for the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for that preceding fiscal year if the concurrent resolution on the budget for such fiscal year also—

(i) provides for an amount of revenues for such fiscal year in addition to an amount of revenues equal to the recommended level of Federal revenues for the fiscal year preceding that fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for such preceding fiscal year, that is not less than such amount of excess budget outlays; and

(ii) identified the source of such additional amount of revenues and proposes changes in law to achieve such additional amount of revenues; or

(B) provide for a reduction in the recommended level of Federal revenues for such fiscal year below the recommended level of Federal revenues for the preceding fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for that preceding fiscal year if the concurrent resolution on the budget for such fiscal year also—

(i) provides for a reduction in budget outlays for such fiscal year below the appropriate level of total budget outlays for the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for such preceding fiscal year, in an amount not less than the amount of the reduction in revenues for such fiscal year; and

(ii) identifies the program or activity in which such reduction in budget outlays is to be made and proposes changes in law to accomplish such reduction in budget outlays.

(3) Any additional amount of revenues contained in a concurrent resolution on the budget pursuant to paragraph 2(A)(i) shall only include additional revenues that will result from proposed changes in law. Any reduction in budget outlays contained in a concurrent resolution on the budget pursuant to paragraph 2(B)(i) shall only include reductions in budget outlays that will result from proposed changes in law.

(b) Subsection (a) may be waived by a two-thirds vote of the Members of each House of Congress, duly chosen and sworn.

SEC. 2. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law and except as provided in subsection (b), the budget transmitted pursuant to section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, for the following fiscal year shall not contain—

(1) an estimate of total budget outlays for such following fiscal year that exceeds the appropriate level of total budget outlays for the current fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for the current fiscal year; or

(2) an estimate of total revenues for such following fiscal year that is less than the recommended level of revenues for the current fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for the current fiscal year.

(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a), the budget transmitted pursuant to section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, for the following fiscal year may—

(1) contain an estimate of budget outlays for such following fiscal year in excess of the appropriate level of total budget outlays for the current fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for the current fiscal year if such budget also—

(A) contains an estimate of revenues for such following fiscal year in addition to an amount of revenues equal to the recommended level of Federal revenues for the current fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for the current fiscal year, that is not less than the amount of such excess budget outlays; and

(B) identifies the source of such additional estimated revenues and proposes changes in law to achieve such additional estimated revenues; or

(2) contain an estimate of a reduction in revenues for such following fiscal year below the recommended level of Federal revenues for the current fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for the current fiscal year if such budget also—

(A) contains an estimate of a reduction in budget outlays for such following fiscal year below the appropriate level of total budget outlays for the current fiscal year set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for the current fiscal year, in an amount not less than the amount of the reduction in revenues for such following fiscal year; and

(B) identifies the program or activity for which such estimated reduction in budget outlays is proposed and proposes changes in law to achieve such estimated reduction in budget outlays.

(c) Any additional estimated revenues that, pursuant to subsection (b)(1)(A), are contained in the budget transmitted pursuant to section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, shall only include additional estimated revenues that will result from proposed changes in law. Any estimated reduction in budget outlays, that, pursuant to subsection (b)(2)(A), are contained in any such budget shall only include estimated reductions in budget outlays that will result from proposed changes in law.

SEC. 3. For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "budget outlays" has the same meaning as in section 3(1) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 622(1)); and

(2) the term "concurrent resolution on the budget" has the same meaning as in section 3(4) of such Act (2 U.S.C. 622(4)).

SEC. 4. (a) The provisions of the first section and section 3 of this Act are enacted by the Congress—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, or of that House to which they specifically apply, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to such House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House.●

S. 1542. A bill to amend the National Trails System Act by designating the Nez Perce (Nee-Me-Poo) Trail as a component of the National Trails System; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

DESIGNATION OF COMPONENT OF THE NATIONAL TRAILS SYSTEM

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, at the request of the Department of Agriculture, I send to the desk for appropriate reference a bill to amend the National Trails System Act by designating the Nez Perce (Nee-Me-Poo) Trail as a component of the National Trails System.

Mr. President, this draft legislation was submitted and recommended by the Department of Agriculture, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, and the executive communication which accompanied the proposal from the Secretary of Agriculture be printed in the RECORD.

I would like to make it clear that the proposal from the administration does not contemplate any land acquisition.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1542

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the National Trails System Act (82 Stat. 919), as amended, is further amended as follows: Section 5(a) is amended to insert the following new paragraph:

"(16) The Nez Perce National Historic Trail, a route of approximately eleven hundred and seventy miles extending from the vicinity of Wallowa Lake, Oregon, to Bear Paw Mountain, Montana, as generally depicted in 'Nez Perce (Nee-Me-Poo) Trail Study Report' prepared by the Department of Agriculture and dated March 1982. The report shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Chief of the Forest Service, Washington, District of Columbia. The trail shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture.'

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, DC, July 11, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Transmitted herewith for the consideration of Congress is a draft bill "To Amend the National Trails System Act by designating the Nez Perce (Nee-Me-Poo) Trail as a component of the National Trails System."

The Department of Agriculture recommends introduction and enactment of the draft bill. A study of this trail was conducted pursuant to the National Trails System Act (Public Law 90-543 as amended) by the Forest Service and other Federal agencies. The Study Report, Environmental Assessment and Decision Notice are enclosed.

From the study, we have concluded it is feasible and desirable to designate this trail as a component of the National Trails System.

Under our recommendation, the entire 1,170-mile route tracing the 1877 flight of the nontreaty Nez Perce Indians would be designated as a historic trail. The trail would be marked and interpreted along highways and other connecting roads. Approximately 319 miles of high potential route segments on Federal lands or State-owned lands would eventually be developed. The preponderance of the high potential segments are located on National Forest System lands.

The National Park System Advisory Board has made the determination required by section 5(b)(3) of the National Trails System Act. They have determined that the proposed Nez Perce Trail is of national historic significance.

No land acquisition is proposed and initial development costs are estimated to be approximately $550,000 over the next 5 years. Annual operations and maintenance costs are estimated to be $65,000.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the presentation of this proposed legislation from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

A similar letter has been sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sincerely,

JOHN R. BLOCK.

DRAFT BILL

(To amend the National Trails System Act by designating the Nez Perce (Nee-Me-Poo) Trail as a component of the National Trails System.)

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the National Trails System Act (82 Stat. 919), as amended, is further amended as follows: Section 5(a) is amended to insert the following new paragraph:

"(16) The Nez Perce National Historic Trail, a route of approximately eleven hundred and seventy miles extending from the vicinity of Wallowa Lake, Oregon, to Bear Paw Mountain, Montana, as generally depicted in 'Nez Perce (Nee-Me-Poo) Trail Study Report' prepared by the Department of Agriculture and dated March 1982. The report shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Chief of the Forest Service, Washington, District of Columbia. The trail shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture."●

By Mr. MATHIAS (for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. DENTON, and Mr. DIXON):

S. 1543. A bill to protect patent owners from importation into the United States of goods made overseas by use of a U.S. patent process; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROCESS PATENT AMENDMENT

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, today I join Senator LAUTENBERG and several other cosponsors in introducing legislation to close a loophole in the U.S. patent law. This loophole allows a foreign company to pirate certain types of American patents, called process patents, and then sell the product in the United States.

To push to close this serious gap goes back at least to the 1966 report of the President's Commission on the Patent System. More recently, it was strongly endorsed in 1984 by the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness. Senator LAUTENBERG and I circulated a letter to all the Senators during the recess earlier this month, explaining the issue and inviting cosponsorship; so far Senator LAXALT, Senator DECONCINI, Senator SPECTER, Senator DENTON, and Senator DIXON have agreed to cosponsor.

Under the patent law, inventors can get two kinds of patents: product patents and process patents. The first protects the product itself; the second protects the process by which a product is made, usually a complex chemical or industrial process.

It is especially fitting that we introduce our bill today, July 31, 1985. Exactly 195 years ago today, on July 31, 1790, the first U.S. patent was issued. Patent No. 1 was issued to Samuel Hopkins of Philadelphia for an improved process for the making of potash. The patent was signed by the President, George Washington, the Attorney General, Edmund Randolph, and the Secretary of State and Commissioner of Patents, Thomas Jefferson.

Today, an inventor can prevent the importation of patented products, and he can stop the sale of products made in the United States using his patented process, but he can't prevent the importation of a product made in another country using his patented process. The International Trade Commission provides the only remedy under current law. There, the inventor must show that the imported products "destroy or substantially injure" the industry in which the inventor is involved. In practice, this has required an inordinately high standard of proof, and the remedy is seldom used. Even worse, the only remedy is injunctive relief; no award of damages is available from the ITC. The bill we introduce today would provide a remedy under the patent laws for this situation, bringing our policy into line with that of our major industrial trading partners.

Since the foreign manufacturers do not always have a presence in the United States, it is necessary in creating an effective remedy under our patent laws to apply the protection to the sale, use, or importation of products made in violation of the patented process. Thus, manufacturers in the United States will be responsible to assure themselves, by contract if necessary, that materials they receive from foreign suppliers are not made by a process that violates a U.S. patent. Of course, it would be preferable to stop the infringement at the source, but if the foreign manufacturer is beyond the reach of U.S. laws, the patent owner still should have the right to prevent products that were made with the patented process from being used in our country. It is not holding the customer responsible for the seller's misdeeds to say that he must determine whether the materials he imports and uses in his own manufacturing operation within the United States are made by a process that would violate the U.S. patent. Just last year, when we passed the Anti-Counterfeiting Act, we imposed a similar obligation on the importer.

In bringing a case under this bill, the patentholder would be required to inform the importing party that he suspects the materials are made by a process on which he holds a patent. The importing party would then decide whether to demonstrate that the materials are not made with the patented process, or to seek another source for those supplies. If he decides to hold his ground, the patentholder would then bring in expert witnesses and circumstantial evidence to try to persuade a court that there is substantial likelihood that his patented process was used by the foreign supplier.

The bill I initially introduced in the last Congress included a presumption clause. If the patent holder showed to the satisfaction of the court that there is a substantial likelihood that his patent is being violated, the burden of proof would shift to the defendant—whether it be the foreign manufacturer or his domestic customer. After the hearing held by the Subcommittee on Patents, Copyrights and Trademarks in April 1983, the language of the presumption clause was refined in the course of extensive discussion between the staff of the subcommittee members, the Department of Justice, the Patent and Trademark Office, and the patent community.

During the subcommittee markup last summer, it was agreed to put this presumption language in the committee report rather than the text of the bill, making clear that the committee intends such a presumption to arise in cases where it would be futile for the plaintiff to use the discovery procedures of the country where the foreign producer operated to demonstrate the process patent violation. Senator LAUTENBERG and I intend to take the same course in this Congress, including the same language in the report when the Judiciary Committee marks up the bill.

Concerns have been raised by the generic pharmaceutical drug industry, which receives of its materials from foreign suppliers. The generic companies fear that improved process patent protection might deprive them of that source of supply. We have attempted to address these concerns in three ways:

The bill applies only to materials made with U.S. patented processes that come into the United States after the date of enactment.

The bill grandfathers certain existing supply arrangements for the duration of the contract, allowing the generic companies to keep their existing business arrangements intact. Their only new responsibility would be to assure in their future arrangements for supplies from overseas that the materials are legitimate.

The bill directs the Department of Commerce to report annually to Congress for the first 5 years on the impact of the bill on supplies to domestic industries; this will allow Congress to act swiftly to correct any drastic unforeseen adverse affects of the bill.

I expect more suggestions for improvement will be forthcoming as we move through the legislative process. This is a complex problem where several different areas of the law intersect. The bill we introduce today is a fair and reasonable approach to settling the essential issue here: protection of legitimate U.S. intellectual property interests.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1543

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Process Patent Amendment of 1985".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 154 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by inserting after "United States," the following: "and, if the invention is a process, of the right to exclude others from using or selling products produced thereby throughout, or importing products produced thereby into, the United States,"

(b) Section 271 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" after "(a)";

(2) adding at the end of subsection (a), the following:

"(2) If the patented invention is a process, whoever without authority uses or sells within, or imports into, the United States during the term of the patent therefor a product produced by such process infringes the patent.".

(c) Section 287 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(a)" before "Patentees,"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) No damages shall be recovered by the patentee for infringement under section 271(a)(2) of this title from an infringer who did not use the patented process except on proof that such infringer knew of or was notified of the infringement and continued to infringe thereafter, in which event damages may be recovered only for infringement occuring after such knowledge or notice. Filing of an action for infringement shall constitute such notice.".

SEC. 3. This act shall apply only to products produced or imported after the date of enactment. This act shall not abridge or affect the right of any persons or their successors in business to continue to make, sell or import any specific product already in substantial and continuous commerical production on July 31, 1985, or for which substantial preparation for production was made before that date, to the extent equitable for the protection of investments made or business commenced before that date. This Act shall not deprive a patent owner of any other remedies available under 35 U.S.C. 271, 19 U.S.C 1337, or any other statutory provision.

SEC. 4. For five years after the date of enactment, the Department of Commerce shall report annually to Congress on the effect of this Act on the importation of ingredients to be used for manufacturing products in the United States in those domestic industries that submit formal complaints to the Department alleging that their legitimate sources of supply have been adversely affected.●

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator MATHIAS in introducing the Process Patent Amendment of 1985. The bill will significantly enhance the protection of American technology, and encourage investment in innovation.

On numerous occasions, Mr. President, I have risen on the floor of the Senate to discuss the importance of establishing effective, international protection of intellectual property. It should be a critical component of our trade policy. It should be a critical component of our efforts to maintain industrial competitiveness.

America's comparative advantage is its technology. While America does not offer the cheapest labor, while it imposes environmental and regulatory costs not imposed elsewhere, America is a leader in the search for new ideas.

But, we are not alone in that search. Our traditional economic competitors, as well as newly industrialized nations, vie with us for breakthroughs in biotechnology, computer science, robotics, telecommunications, and space science.

Our success in the race for innovation, and our ability to enjoy the fruits of victory, depend in large part on intellectual property rights protection. Patents reserve to the inventor a period for the exclusive exploitation of an invention. In return, the inventor makes his invention known, broadening the base of knowledge from which new inventions will spring.

Without patent protection, others could avoid the risk of research, and the frustration of failures that preceeds success. Others can reap the harvest that someone else has sowed.

The legislation we introduce today will close a major gap in the fabric of U.S. patent law, one that deals with patents of processes. There are two kinds of patents: one, of a product itself, the other of a process or method by which a product is made.

In some cases, a process may be patented, but not the product produced by it. Biotechnology companies are engaged in the development of new ways of producing substances that are naturally found in the environment, but exist in small supply or in a form that makes extraction difficult.

Under current patent law, a patent holder can preclude the unauthorized manufacture, use, or sale of a patent in the United States. "In the United States" are key words, Mr. President. Where a product patent is at stake, and the product is copied abroad, patent infringement occurs when the product is actually used or sold in the United States. When a U.S. patented process is copied abroad, infringement under U.S. law never occurs, even if the resulting product is sold or used in the United States.

In other words, our patent law does not reach the foreign exploitation of our most innovative processes. Our bill would change that. It would make it a violation of U.S. patent law to import into, or to use or sell in the United States, a product made overseas using a U.S. patent process.

Japan, Britain, West Germany, and France already consider such offshore exploitation of a patented process to constitute a patent infringement. Our legislation is intended to bring American law in line with the practices of these major trading partners.

Mr. President, this is a jobs bill. The current state of the law allows foreign firms to use American processes abroad, to manufacture products that are then shipped into the U.S. market. The International Trade Commission estimated, back in 1982, that infringement of U.S intellectual property cost Americans 131,000 jobs in just 5 selected industrial sectors, and cost the Nation's businesses $5.5 billion in annual sales. Since then, it is widely believed, the problem has gotten worse.

Today, the only remedy that process patent holders have is resort to the International Trade Commission, under section 337 of the Tariff Act. Yet, this remedy does not compensate for lost sales, sales that are necessary to recover substantial research and development costs. No money damages can be secured. Moreover, the ITC remedy is problematic on other grounds. A manufacturer must show harm to a domestic industry, and must show that it is efficiently and economically operated. Moreover, any ITC action must be approved by the President, who can bring to bear unrelated political considerations.

Mr. President, it is no secret that the generic pharmaceutical industry has opposed process patent reform. The industry relies upon foreign supplies for some of its drug ingredients, and it fears that improved process patent protection might cause these sources of supply to dry up.

Mr. President, my State is sometimes called the medicine chest of the Nation. It leads the Nation in the manufacture of pharmaceuticals. My constituents include many of the leading generic drug firms, as well as some of the pathbreaking firms in pharmaceutical research. The generic industry plays an important role in providing competition and low-cost drugs for consumers. The research-based firms provide the innovation, that brings new and more effective products to market.

My colleague from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS] and I met with representatives of the generic industry. We have made a genuine effort to address their vaild concerns, without compromising the basic principle that manufacturers should be responsible for determining whether their suppliers violate U.S. process patents.

The bill is drawn to have a minimal disruption of ongoing businesses. The bill would apply only to products imported after the date of enactment. Moreover, where equitable considerations dictate, the bill would grandfather certain existing supply arrangments for the duration of the contract. In other words, the import of some raw materials could continue, even though they are made in violation of process patents.

Lastly, the bill would require the Department of Commerce to examine the impact of the bill on affected domestic industries. These provisions should address the legitimate concerns of the generic drug industry, without undermining our effort to plug a loophole in our patent law.

Mr. President, process patent reform was one of the key proposals of the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness. Indeed strengthening intellectual property rights was cited as a major prescription for ensuring America's continued prosperity and economic competitiveness.

I am pleased to have worked with Senator MATHIAS in developing this legislation. I look forward to working with him to ensure its speedy passage. The legislation will contribute to the development of technologies and innovations that will be the foundation of America's economic future. I urge my colleagues' support.●

By Mr. ROTH (for himself, Mr MOYNIHAN, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. COHEN, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. GORE):

S. 1544. A bill to extend the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program, to place such program on a sound financial basis, and to reform such program to emphasize the retraining of workers; to the Committee on Finance.

TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE REFORM AND EXTENSION ACT

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill to extend and reform the Trade Adjustment Assistance [TAA] Program. This bill merges S. 23 introduced on January 3 by Senators MOYNIHAN and HEINZ and the TAA provisions of S. 234 (the Trade Expansion Act of 1985) introduced on January 22 by myself and Senators CHAFEE, and SYMMS. S. 23 called for the extension of the TAA program. S. 234 proposed an improved TAA program to be funded by a GATT-approved small fee on imports.

I am pleased that all four of my colleagues on the finance committee who sponsored these two bills—Senators MOYNIHAN, HEINZ, CHAFEE and SYMMS—join me today in introducing the merged version. In addition, I am delighted that several other members of the finance committee—Senators BRADLEY, MITCHELL, GRASSLEY, MATSUNAGA and the Chairman of the International Trade Subcommittee Senator DANFORTH—as well as Senators COHEN, KERRY and GORE are also co-sponsoring today's legislation.

As many of you know, the TAA program is slated to disappear on September 30 of this year. I don't think we should let this happen. In fact, I think we need to use all our ingenuity to devise a way to keep this program alive. That is what this legislation is all about.

Why is the trade adjustment assistance program so important? The answer to this question requires a broader look at what is happening in trade and trade policy today.

THE TRADE SHOCK

In the 1970's this country, and many others, experienced an "energy shock." In the 1980's we—and we alone—are experiencing a second shock, a "trade shock." I say this not only because of the mind-boggling size of the global U.S. trade deficit and the fact that imports are now hurting the full range of American industries from textiles to semiconductors. I characterize the American trade situation as a "shock" because underlying these figures is a profound anxiety about the unevenness of the international playing field for trade, what many call the erosion of the International Trading System. And if this weren't bad enough, this is all taking place in a world economy characterized by rapid and constant change—the appearance of new products and services and rapidly shifting comparative advantage.

The Senate is moving to respond to this shock. Now our attention seems rivetted on proposals for retaliation against the trade practices of other countries.

Retaliation may be necessary to spread the trade shock to other countries, to create a sense of urgency internationally that will bring our trading partners to the table for serious and meaningful negotiations. The trading system needs a jumpstart.

But retaliation alone is not a sufficient response to the trade shock. In fact, retaliation pursued alone will only too soon evolve into "de facto" protectionism. We will close our markets to right a wrong, while others may respond by closing their markets further. Trade will contract, our standard of living will decline and even our political and military alliances will be at risk. We will move closer and closer to international economic chaos.

We need a comprehensive trade policy to confront the trade shock. A comprehensive trade policy would be aimed at opening foreign markets to U.S. products, assuring fair competition in the U.S. market, improving U.S. competitiveness, and helping those hurt by trade. It is this later point that the bill we are introducing today addresses.

The Trade Adjustment Assistance Program was established in 1962, because it has long been recognized that even when there is a favorable balance of trade, there will be losers—individuals whose jobs will be lost to import competition. With an unfavorable balance of trade, the number of losers multiplies. Today the trade shock has driven this point home. At no time in our history has the need been greater for help for those who lose their jobs to trade.

Yet, ironically, in just a month the TAA program is scheduled to expire and the prognosis for keeping it alive has not been good.

Why is this?

I believe there are two key reasons. First, as everyone knows, money is tight. Second, the program as currently structured has not achieved its principal purpose—adjustment by individuals and firms to import competition.

The bill we are introducing today corrects each of these problems.

FUNDING—A NOVEL APPROACH

A creative approach is proposed for funding the reformed program. A small fee—an adjustment fee—would be placed on imports to finance TAA. In effect, it would be a users fee for trade—those who benefit from trade would pay for the costs of trade. The bill puts a cap on this fee of 1 percent of the value of imports, but I would estimate that it would cost only 1/10 to 1/25 of a percent to finance the program set up in the bill.

The bill directs the President to obtain GATT approval as soon as possible for countries to be able to impose such a small fee on trade to fund adjustment programs. After 1 year, however, the President is required to impose the fee unless the Congress approves fast track legislation suspending the imposition of the fee for 1 more year to allow the President additional time to finish the GATT negotiation. At the end of 2 years, the fee is imposed in any case.

Make no mistake, this is not a proposal for an import surcharge. The fee is small and the fee is capped by statute. I got this idea from a similar program that has been in place in Hong Kong for some time. Everyone thinks of Hong Kong as a totally free port, but in fact, Hong Kong assesses a small fee (one-twentieth of 1 percent) on all imports and exports. (In the case of Hong Kong the fee is used to finance trade promotion programs.)

The adjustment fee would be a small cost to trading nations to keep trade open and expanding, and I think America's traders are ready to pay it. The National Retail Merchants Association endorsed this idea soon after I introduced it last January as part of S. 234.

Internationally, the timing is also right. We are not the only country having trouble adjusting to new trade conditions and we are not the only country that is having budget problems. Other nations would have a clear national interest in signing onto this proposal in the GATT and that is the key ingredient for a successful reputation.

But there is no point in placing a fee on trade to promote adjustment if the program in place is not designed to assure that objective. That is why this bill also includes a proposal for reform of the current program.

THE NEW PROGRAM

The changes are few, but they are critical. The bill does not propose a complete revamping of the TAA program. In fact, all benefits now available to workers under TAA (additional unemployment compensation known as a "trade readjustment allowance," job search and job relocation allowances) would continue, but there is a key new eligibility requirement and an important new benefit.

The new eligibility requirement—any worker receiving benefits under the reformed program must be enrolled in or have completed a retraining program.

The new benefit—to pay this training, each worker would be given a $4,000 job retraining voucher redeemable for training. Individuals would have a wide choice of training options: Programs under the job training partnership act, such as State training programs and private programs approved by the private industry councils established by that act; programs approved by the Secretary of Labor as well as training by private firms. This last option—training by private firms—I believe, in particular, will open up many new opportunities.

As far as the firms program is concerned, the bill would leave in place the Technical Assistance Program. This program has proved its usefulness. For example, in the recent House hearings on TAA testimony on benefits of technical assistance to the Textile and footwear industries was submitted. The assistance is used not only to management and marketing advice, but also for research and development, for example, for automated apparel equipment. Importantly, these moneys are also used to help firms prepare petitions for help under this statute.

The reformed TAA program would not include financial assistance for firms. The loan and loan guarantee program has in effect been terminated in the last few years because it has not worked. Data up to March 1983 showed that of 324 loans, 112 were in trouble; 86 were current and 5 were paid off.

How much would this reformed program cost? I am advised that 1983 is a good year to use for a rough estimate. In that year, 30,000 people received benefits under TAA, at a cost of about $70 million. Add to that $120 million for the job vouchers under the new program plus about $15 million for technical assistance. This totals about $205 million. With imports of approximately $350 billion last year or even at the roughly $250 billion of 1983, it is clear that the adjustment fee to finance this program would be small indeed.

Some might say that this estimate is too low. But remember the eligibility criteria do not change, many workers have already received help under the program and all workers do not apply the same year. Besides, even if the number of eligible workers should increase fivefold and the cost rises concomitantly, financing of the program would still be financially feasible with an adjustment fee well below the cap.

These changes in the TAA program for workers and firms would not come into effect until 1 year after the import fee is imposed. During that year moneys would begin to build up in a trust fund set up to finance the program. Until that time, the current program would be extended and funded out of general revenues costing less than $100 million for each of at most 3 years depending on the timing of the GATT negotiation.

BENEFITS

The trade situation as we all are aware is getting graver. As a number of members have pointed out recently, this is a time for open minds, for unconventional proposals.

Today more than ever our workers need meaningful help in the face of the trade-related dislocation. Imports now compete with nearly the full range of U.S. production. The proposal in this bill for the first time offers these workers a total package of relief—unemployment compensation, job search and relocation help and significant financing and options for retraining. A complete package is not available under any other federal program.

And today more than ever the international trading system (the GATT) needs to be brought back to life. Trade intellectuals in the OECD and elsewhere have for some time now decried the need for "positive adjustment policies" (policies that facilitate the movement of people and resources from declining to growing industries) as the underlying problem dragging the trading system down. This proposal for a GATT-sanctioned import fee to finance adjustment provides a new tool to promote positive adjustment by GATT members.

I believe it offers, as well, a new tool for getting meaningful multilateral trade negotiations underway. It is traditional for nations to signal their seriousness about a new round of trade negotiations by taking a trade liberalizing action for example, lowering some tariffs. Agreement to the imposition of a small fee on imports would be an unconventional, even ironic, way to signal a new round. But this fee could very well be the catalyst for movement on the issue that is central to establishing a fair and effective international trading system and to the success of any new negotiations, a new multilateral agreement on safeguards. In these times I think a GATT agreement on this adjustment fee would perhaps more than any other simple action signal a renewed worldwide commitment to make the trading system work.

As you can see, I introduce this bill with great hopes. But I want to make it clear as well that I agree with the AFL-CIO recent comments on the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program included in a letter to Congressman GIBBONS, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee:

> The AFL-CIO does not view trade adjustment assistance as a substitute for a fair and effective trade policy. Nevertheless, the United States is faced with the tragic reality of devastated communities and wasted human resources due to imports. A trade adjustment assistance program that includes income support, training, and job search and relocation allowances is a first and necessary step to restoring and revitalizing the industrial strength of our country.

This bill has broad support on the Finance Committee and I am particularly pleased that Senator DANFORTH, the chairman of the International Trade Subcommittee, is among the cosponsors. Senator DANFORTH has promised to hold hearings on this legislation as soon as possible after the August recess.

At this time, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1544

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Trade Adjustment Assistance Reform and Extension Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. CASH ASSISTANCE FOR WORKERS.

(a)(1) Subsection (a) of section 231 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2291) is amended by adding after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) Such worker—

"(A) is enrolled in, or

"(B) has completed, a training program for which a voucher is available under section 236.".

(2) Subsection (b) of section 231 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2291(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) If the Secretary determines that—

"(1) the adversely affected worker—

"(A) has failed to begin participation in the training program the enrollment in which meets the requirement of subsection (a)(5), or

"(B) has ceased to participate in such training program before completing such training program, and

"(2) there is no justifiable cause for such failure or cessation, no trade adjustment allowance may be paid to the adversely affected worker under this part on or after the date of such determination until the adversely affected worker begins or resumes participation in a training program for which a voucher is available under section 236.".

(b) Section 232 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2292) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or training for which a voucher is available under section 236," after "on-the-job training," in subsection (b),

(2) by striking out "under any Federal law," in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "under any Federal law other than this Act",

(3) by striking out "under section 236(c)" in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "under section 231(b)", and

(4) by striking out "If the training allowance" in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "If such training allowance".

(c) Section 233 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2293) is amended—

(1) by striking out "52" in subsection (a)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "78",

(2) by striking out "52-week period" in subsection (a)(2) and inserting in lieu thereof "78-week period",

(3) by striking out paragraph (3) of subsection (a), and

(4) by striking out subsection (b) and redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (b) and (c), respectively.

SEC. 3. JOB TRAINING VOUCHERS FOR WORKERS.

(a) Section 236 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2296) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 236. JOB TRAINING VOUCHERS.

"(a) Each adversely affected worker covered by a certification under this chapter shall be eligible for a job training voucher issued by the Secretary. The voucher shall be in the amount of $4,000, and may be used only in accordance with the provisions of this section to defray (in whole or in part) the cost of any of the following training programs provided to such worker:

"(1) A training program provided by the State pursuant to section 303 of the Job Training Partnership Act.

"(2) A training program provided by a private entity if such program has been approved for purposes of this section by a private industry council established under section 102 of the Job Training Partnership Act. A private industry council shall approve a training program for purposes of this section only if the council determines that the program provides training in occupations for which a need exists in the private sector of the economy.

"(3) Training provided by an employer who agrees to employ the worker upon completion of the training, for a period (including the training period) of not less than 26 weeks.

"(4) A training program approved by the Secretary if the Secretary determines that there is a reasonable expectation that the adversely affected worker will obtain employment upon completion of such training program.

"(b) The State (in the case of a voucher used pursuant to subsection (a)(1)) or the person conducting the private training program (in the case of a voucher used pursuant to paragraph (2), or (4) of subsection (a)) may redeem such voucher for the Secretary upon completion of the training program by the adversely affected worker.

"(c)(1) No employer may redeem a voucher used by a worker pursuant to subsection (a)(3) if such employer is engaged in the same occupation from which the worker was separated and with respect to which such worker's group was certified pursuant to section 222.

"(2) No employer may redeem a voucher used by a worker pursuant to subsection (a)(3) unless such employer has provided such worker with training and employment for a combined period of not less than 26 weeks.

"(3) No employer may redeem any voucher used by a worker pursuant to subsection (a)(3) if such employer terminated the employment of an employee for the purpose of hiring and training such worker under the provisions of this section. Any employer found by the Secretary to have violated the provisions of this paragraph shall also be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $12,000 for each such violation.

"(d) Any entity which redeems a voucher used by a worker pursuant to subsection (a)(2) shall repay to the United States the amount of such voucher plus interest at a rate of 10 percent if the Secretary subsequently determines that the entity's training program was not approved by a private industry council for purposes of this section.

"(e)(1) A worker may not be determined to be ineligible or disqualified for unemployment insurance or for program benefits under this chapter—

"(A) because the individual is in training for which a voucher is provided under this section,

"(B) because the individual terminated employment which was not suitable employment to enter such training, or

"(C) because of the application to any week in which the individual participates in such training of provisions of State law or Federal unemployment insurance law relating to availability for work, active search for work, or refusal to accept work.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'suitable employment' means, with respect to a worker, work of a substantially equal or higher skill level than such worker's past adversely affected employment, and wages for such work at not less than 80 percent of the worker's average weekly wage.".

(b)(1) Section 237 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2297) is amended—

(A) by striking out "section 236(b)(1) and (2)" in subsection (a)(2) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (c)", and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) The amount of subsistence expenses for which reimbursement is allowable under subsection (a) shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(A) the actual per diem expenses for subsistence, or

"(B) the amount determined by using 50 percent of the prevailing per diem allowance rate authorized under Federal travel regulations.

"(2) The amount of travel expenses for which reimbursement is allowable under subsection (a) shall not exceed the prevailing mileage rate authorized under Federal travel regulations.".

(2) Paragraph (1) of section 238(d) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2298(d)) is amended by striking out "section 236(b)(1) and (2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 237(c)".

(c) The table of contents of the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 236 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 236. Job training vouchers.".

SEC. 4. ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE FOR FIRMS.

(a) Paragraph (1) of section 252(b) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2342(b)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Adjustment assistance under this chapter consists of technical assistance. The Secretary shall approve a firm's application for adjustment assistance only if he determines that the firm's adjustment proposal—

"(A) is reasonably calculated materially to contribute to the economic adjustment of the firm,

"(B) gives adequate consideration to the interests of the workers of such firm, and

"(C) demonstrates that the firm will make all reasonable efforts to use its own resources for economic development.".

(b) Section 254 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2344) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this chapter, no direct loans or guarantees of loans may be made under this chapter after the date on which the amendments made by section 4 of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Reform and Extension Act of 1985 take effect.".

SEC. 5. SUNSET OF TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE.

(a) Section 285 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2271, note) as amended—

(1) by striking out the first sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "(a)",

(2) by striking out the section heading and inserting in lieu thereof "SEC. 285. TERMINATION.", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) No assistance, vouchers, allowances, or other payments may be provided under chapter 2, no technical assistance may be provided under chapter 3, and no duty shall be imposed under section 257, after the date that is 6 years after the date of enactment of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Reform and Extension Act of 1985.".

(b) The table of contents of the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 285 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 285. Termination.".

SEC. 6. FUNDING OF TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE.

(a)(1) Section 245 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2317) is amended by striking out "1982 through 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "1986, 1987, and 1988".

(2) Subsection (b) of section 256 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2346(b)) is amended—

(A) by inserting "for fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988" after "to the Secretary", and

(B) by striking out "from time to time".

(b)(1) Chapter 5 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2391, et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 285 the following new section:

"SEC. 286. TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE TRUST FUND.

"(a) There is hereby established within the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the Trade Adjustment Assistance Trust Fund (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Trust Fund"), consisting of such amounts as may be transferred or credited to the Trust Fund as provided in this section or otherwise appropriated to the Trust Fund.

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer to the Trust Fund out of the general fund of the Treasury of the United States amounts determined by the Secretary of the Treasury to be equivalent to the amounts received into such general fund which are attributable to—

"(A) the duty imposed by section 287, or

"(B) repayments of loans, payments of interest, and other revenue arising out of transactions entered into by the Secretary of Commerce under chapter 3.

"(2) The amounts which are required to be transferred under paragraph (1) shall be transferred at least quarterly from the general fund of the Treasury of the United States to the Trust Fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts referred to in paragraph (1) that are received into the Treasury. Proper adjustments shall be made in the amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of, or less than, the amounts required to be transferred.

"(c)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall be the trustee of the Trust Fund, and shall report annually to the Congress on the financial condition and the results of the operations of the Trust Fund during the preceding fiscal year and on its expected condition and operations during the current fiscal year and the next 5 fiscal years after the current fiscal year. Such report shall be printed as a House document of the session of the Congress to which the report is made.

"(2)(A) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest such portion of the Trust Fund as is not, in his judgment, required to meet current withdrawals. Such investments may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States. For such purpose, such obligations may be acquired—

"(i) on original issue at the issue price, or

"(ii) by purchase of outstanding obligations at the market price.

"(B) Any obligation acquired by the Trust Fund may be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury at the market price.

"(C) The interest on, and the proceeds from the sale or redemption of, any obligations held in the Trust Fund shall be credited to and for a part of the Trust Fund.

"(d) Amounts in one Trust Fund shall only be available for making expenditures to carry out the provisions of chapters 2 and 3 of this title.".

(2) Section 257 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2347) is amended by striking out subsection (c) and redesignating subsections (d) and (e) as subsections (c) and (d).

(c) Chapter 5 of title II of the Trade Act of 1975 (19 U.S.C. 2391, et seq.), as amended by subsection (b) of this section and by section 7(b) of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 288. APPROPRIATION OF FUNDS.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay out of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Trust Fund all expenses incurred by the Secretary of Labor or the Secretary of Commerce in carrying out the provisions of chapters 2 and 3 of this title.".

(d) The table of contents for the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by inserting, after the item relating to section 285, the following new items:

"Sec. 286. Trade Adjustment Trust Fund.
"Sec. 287. Imposition of additional duty.
"Sec. 288. Appropriation of funds.".

SEC. 7. IMPOSITION OF SMALL UNIFORM DUTY ON ALL IMPORTS.

(a)(1) The President shall undertake negotiations necessary to achieve changes in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that would allow any country to impose a small uniform duty on all imports to such country for the purpose of using the revenue from such duty to fund any program which assists adjustment to import competition.

(2) On the date that is 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to the Congress a report on the progress of negotiations conducted under paragraph (1).

(3)(A) The President may submit to the Congress a draft of a bill which—

(i) amends section 9 of this Act—

(I) by striking out "1 year" in subsection (b)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "2 years", and

(II) by striking out "2 years" in subsections (c)(1) and (d)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "3 years", and

(ii) extends the authorization of apropriations for chapters 2 and 3 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 for an additional year.

(B) Any draft of a bill submitted by the President in accordance with subparagraph (A) shall—

(i) be introduced (by request) in each House of the Congress by the majority leader of such House on the first day such House is in session after the day on which such draft bill is received by the Congress, and

(ii) be treated as an implementing bill for purposes of subsections (d), (e), (f), and (g) of section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2191).

(4) On the first day after the date of enactment of this Act on which the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade allows any country to impose a duty described in paragraph (1), the President shall submit to the Congress a written statement certifying that the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade allows such a duty.

(b) Chapter 5 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2391, et seq.), as amended by section 6(b)(1) of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 287. IMPOSITION OF ADDITIONAL DUTY.

"(a) In addition to any other duty imposed by law, there is hereby imposed a duty on the entry, or withdrawal from warehouse, of any article for consumption in the customs territory of the United States.

"(b)(1) The rate of the duty imposed by subsection (a) shall be a uniform ad valorem rate proclaimed by the President at least 30 days prior to the date such rate takes effect which is equal to the lesser of—

"(A) 1 percent, or

"(B) a percentage that is sufficient to provide the funding necessary to carry out the provisions of chapters 2 and 3 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974.

"(C) Duty-free treatment provided with respect to any article under any other provision of law shall not affect the imposition of the duty imposed with respect to such article by subsection (a).".

SEC. 8. TAXATION OF TRADE READJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE.

Section 85(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by inserting ", but not including a voucher issued under section 236 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2296)" after "nature of unemployment compensation".

SEC. 9. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) The amendments made by section 5, subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 6, and the provisions of section 7(a), shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) The amendment made by section 7(b) shall apply to any article entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption after the earlier of—

(1) the date that is 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, or

(2) the date that is 30 days after the date on which the President submits to the Congress the written statement described in section 7(a)(4).

(c) The amendments made by sections 2, 3, 4, and 6(c) of this Act shall take effect on the earlier of—

(1) the date that is 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, or

(2) the date that is 1 year after the date described in subsection (b)(2).

(d) The amendment made by section 8 shall apply to taxable years ending on or after the earlier of—

(1) the date that is 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, or

(2) the date that is 1 year after the date described in subsection (c)(2).●

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today with my distinguished colleague Senator ROTH, to introduce legislation extending and reforming the Trade Adjustment Assistance [TAA] Program.

TAA is the only Federal program, the only national commitment, specifically intended to help workers who lose their jobs to foreign competition.

Trade adjustment assistance is a commitment made to the American worker two decades ago, at the time of the Kennedy round of multilateral trade negotiations. We recognized then that while a policy of open trade is essential to a healthy American—and world—economy, important parts of the work force are adversely affected by import competition. Trade adjustment assistance is for these workers.

Trade readjustment allowance—which is to say, extended unemployment compensation for those who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits—helps workers pay their bills while they are unemployed. Retraining benefits help displaced workers qualify for new jobs in different sectors of the economy. And job search and relocation benefits help ease the transition.

The need for the TAA Program has never been greater.

Since 1981, the United States has imported some $346 billion more in goods than it has exported. Our 1984 trade deficit of $123 billion was more than triple that of 1981, and the outlook for 1985 is no better. If the trade pattern established in the first half of 1985 continues, we will run a trade deficit of approximately $141 billion this year. The trade deficit for the first 6 months of 1985 is greater than that for all of 1983.

There is a rough rule used by the International Trade Commission and the Department of Commerce that for every billion dollar increase in the trade deficit, 25,000 new job opportunities are lost. That means 2.3 million job opportunities have been lost since 1981.

Yet, I regret to say that the administration has shown little interest in TAA. In fact, the program has been dramatically cut; it is now funded at less than $100 million a year—less than one-tenth of 1 percent of our 1984 trade deficit.

Moreover, the administration opposes reauthorization of the program—which will expire on September 30 of this year.

Mr. President, the bill we introduce today, first and foremost, would reauthorize a Trade Adjustment Assistance Program for 6 years. I might remind my colleagues that on the first day of this Congress, Senator HEINZ and I introduced legislation extending the TAA Program for 6 years. This bill would extend the existing TAA Program until a revised program goes into effect—no later than 3 years after the bill is enacted.

The new program would be funded by a modest fee—maximum of 1 percent—on all imports. A trust fund would be created for receipts from the duty, dedicated to trade adjustment expenditures. In March 1983, I introduced legislation that would have similarly funded the TAA Program, by revenues collected through Customs duties.

The current program would further be reformed to require that a worker agree to retraining in order to receive a trade readjustment allowance [TRA], provide $4,000 tax-free vouchers for retraining, and limit adjustment assistance for firms to the provisions of technical assistance.

Mr. President, the bipartisan legislation we are introducing today reaffirms the commitment our Government made to working men and women 20 years ago. In the past 10 years, nearly 1.5 million American workers, including 111,300 New Yorkers—have received benefits under this program.

The premise on which trade adjustment assistance was based—that some will suffer from an open trade policy and that they should be compensated—is as valid today as in 1962. We cannot renege on our commitment. We must not let TAA die.

I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting this vital program.●

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, it is my pleasure today to join my Senate colleagues in sponsoring the Trade Adjustment Assistance Reform and Extension Act of 1985.

As you all know, we face a serious trade problem here in the United States. The flood of foreign imports has weakened our industrial capacity and our ability to compete in foreign markets. All around us we see the loss of international and domestic market share, the decline of industries, and the loss of jobs.

International trade has become a national priority in the last decade. It is a problem that requires leadership, cooperation, and creative problem solving. There are, however, both good and bad solutions to this problem. Some would hide our affected industries behind import restrictions and trade barriers; others would award import relief benefits to workers, waiting for the day that industry makes its miraculous comeback. In those cases where we are dealing with unfair trade practices by our foreign competitors—dumping, subsidies, constraints on our access to their markets—tough tactics on our part are appropriate.

But these kinds of solutions do not deal with all aspects of the problem. In any healthy economy, trade implies economic change, and while change brings technological miracles and a better standard of living, it also means declining industries and painful job dislocations. It means that some firms must change direction and adapt to new competitive environments. It means that some workers must find new jobs in new fields.

This is the reality that we must face, and this is the part of the puzzle we have avoided.

The Trade Adjustment Assistance Act of 1974 was one of the first steps in the right direction. It tried to come face to face with adjustment, taking a bold, constructive approach to the problem. It went beyond import relief, offering technical assistance and the opportunity to rebuild affected firms. It tried to take significant steps toward the retraining of workers and the betterment of their lives. As we all know, it was not entirely a successful effort.

Today, we introduce the Trade Adjustment and Assistance Reform and Extension Act of 1985 to improve and refine that first step. The bill still offers worker retraining, but gives the individual a greater range of learning options. For the firm program, it eliminates the loan program, and allows funds to be focused on the more successful technical assistance program. In addition, the bill provides for funding through the imposition of a small uniform fee on imports. Finally, since this fee will be the result of multilateral agreement, the bill extends the present TAA Program until the new one comes into effect.

As we look around us, the trade deficit continues to climb, and our industries must respond to the challenge of foreign competition. Their task is to respond to new competitive challenges, and the firm part of this program can help them do that. Our task in the Congress is to redouble our efforts to eliminate trade barriers and unfair practices and restore free market principles to the international trading system. And at the same time we need to facilitate the movement of workers into competitive industries. If we do not do that, then we are giving American workers no choice but to come to Congress demanding protection.●

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the United States has been for the past 2 years in the midst of a healthy and robust recovery. Yet despite the glowing reports on the overall economy, certain sectors—notably the export- and import-competing sectors—have not fared so well. This Congress began not long after the announcement of the largest trade deficit in our Nation's history. Congress is besieged these days by protectionist pressures from import competing industries, and swamped with the complaints of exporters.

These complaints are certainly justified. The trade figures for the first quarter of 1985 are illustrative. Imports of manufactured goods rose 5 percent and exports dropped 1 percent during the first quarter, bringing the overall merchandise trade deficit to $28.3 billion. Farmers saw wheat shipments drop by 35 percent, corn sales by 12 percent and soybean sales dropped by 5 percent, all in the first quarter alone. We are now projecting an overall deficit for 1985 of $140 billion.

America has been flooded with bargain imports and its traditional exports—machinery, chemicals, electronics, grain—have lost their price competitiveness. Industry after industry has come to the Congress seeking protection from imports. These industries assume that we have more to lose to world trade than we have to benefit from it.

In fact open markets serve America in very tangible ways. Unfettered trade gives consumers access to a greater variety of products at lower prices. Trade forces domestic industries to adjust to changing technology before they become hopelessly inefficient. Perhaps most important, trade is the primary source of hope for the world's poor, increasing their stake in a stable world economic order.

But the advantages of open trade apply to the economy generally while specific sectors can suffer greatly. Some workers, laid off because of competing imports, have no reason to rejoice over cheap, high quality steel coming from Korea. Unemployed textile workers in Rhode Island, for example, hardly revel in the fact that American consumers are buying low-cost sweaters from Hong Kong in increasing numbers.

To try to offset this sacrifice we instituted the trade adjustment assistance program in the 1960's. It has certainly had its critics, largely because it has involved more assistance than adjustment—cash payments rather than long-term training to enable workers in affected industries to begin afresh with new skills.

The Trade Adjustment Assistance Reform and Extension Act of 1985, which we introduce today would replace the existing Trade Adjustment Assistance Program with a new program which emphasizes retraining assistance. This proposal is based on the view that if the United States is going to continue to support a liberal trade policy, it is important to facilitate the adjustment of those individuals adversely affected by import competition.

This program would shift the focus away from simply compensating workers to providing them with real future alternatives. And it would do so in a fashion that is consistent with our current efforts to trim Federal spending. This program, which is linked with the Job Training Partnership Act [JTPA], would provide eligible individuals with job retraining vouchers redeemable for training.

The implementation of this new program would be linked to negotiations which would add a provision to the GATT giving all member countries the right to assess a very small fee on imports in order to finance adjustment programs. Only upon completion of such negotiations would the U.S. institute such a fee to finance the job vouchers.

This bill would also extend the current program until the import fee has been approved and has raised sufficient revenue, that is, 1 year after the duty is applied. It therefore involves extension of the program for 2 years—1 year for the administration to negotiate this agreement within the GATT and another year to collect sufficient revenues under the import fee program.

This bill already has strong support within the Finance Committee, and I expect in the entire Congress. Trade adjustment assistance programs provide an alternative policy to import restrictions as a temporary relief measure. The cost of extending the program beyond September 30 is far less than the cost that consumers and the entire economy will suffer if we enact import protections for industries and workers which are suffering at the hands of foreign competition. We cannot afford to close our markets to protect jobs, but neither can we ignore the plight of workers whose firms or industries are dislocated due to import competition.●

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my Finance Committee colleagues in introducing a bill to extend and reform the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program [TAA] that is scheduled to expire on September 30 of this year.

This legislation will enable workers displaced by imports to retrain and gain new skills.

In the past TAA provided temporary assistance to displaced workers. This revised bill will continue to provide assistance, however, there is additional focus on the importance of a completed retraining program. It will give people a handup instead of a handout.

Congress is well aware of the seriousness of the trade imbalance and the impact that it has had on the workers in many U.S. industries. Across the country, people's livelihoods are at stake.

In Idaho this week, Potlatch Corp. closed several timber processing plants which resulted in a layoff of one-third of its Idaho work force. Clearly, the flood of Canadian timber across the border has cut deeply into the U.S. timber industry's market.

The tragedy of the situation is that these facilities may not reopen these mills in Idaho. Those people may have to find new jobs and learn new skills.

This bill will continue to provide workers displaced by imports with all benefits now available under TAA. However, a new eligibility requirement stipulates that any worker receiving benefits under the new program must be enrolled in or have completed a retraining program. This requirement further emphasizes the need for adjustment and retraining.

This revised TAA Program, with an expanded worker retraining portion, is a vital step toward restoring the industrial strength of this country. I am pleased it has the support of so many of my Finance Committee colleagues.●

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the Roth-MOYNIHAN Trade Adjustment Assistance and Reform Act of 1985, which is being introduced today.

With the current Trade Adjustment Assistance Program scheduled to expire on September 30, 1985, I feel this legislation is not only timely, but vastly improved over the previous program. Vastly improved in that the very cause of the displacement—namely foreign imports—will finance the program. With the bill putting a cap of 1 percent on the value of imports and requiring the President to apply such a duty after getting GATT approval, we will be able to assist these displaced workers without any additional cost to the U.S. Treasury.

Although the bill implies that agricultural workers would qualify for this program, it will be my intent during the markup of the legislation in committee to offer an amendment specifically extending coverage to agricultural workers displaced by excessive, and particularly unfair, Ag-imports. For despite the phenomenal job of U.S. farmers in offsetting our trade deficit, even they are severely jeopardized by the import blitz. We only need to look to such areas as pork, mushrooms, cut flowers and the poultry industry to name but a few.

Our move to equip displaced U.S. workers with new skills is rooted in both humanitarian and economic concerns. Every displaced worker is one more addition to unemployment, one less taxpayer, and one less consumer—not to mention the ripple effect as unemployment throws entire families, communities, and industries into chaos.

However, we will not settle for treating the symptom of worker displacement alone. We are committed to stronger measures which will resolve the trade deficit, itself—the only sure route to a working, prosperous, growing America.●

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today I rise in support of a proposal to reauthorize the Trade Adjustment Assistance [TAA] Program with certain modifications. I support this bill for three reasons: I believe that our society has an obligation to retrain workers who have been displaced by foreign competition and to help them find new employment; I believe adjustment assistance is a politically feasible alternative to protectionism; and I believe that this proposal, by emphasizing retraining of displaced workers, is an improvement over the original program.

For the last 200 years, economists in this country and around the world have been preaching the benefits of free trade. We have been told that free trade enhances marketplace competition and induces firms to operate more efficiently; we have been told that free trade benefits the consumer through lower prices and a wider variety of products, and that free trade stimulates innovation and economic growth; we have been told, in short, that free trade is a no-lose proposition. What the free trade advocates do not often acknowledge is that although the economy as a whole may benefit from free trade. For some of us, free trade is a losing proposition—for the textile and apparel workers, for the steel workers, for machine toolmakers and others in this country who, through no fault of their own, find themselves without jobs because of imports. It is simply unfair and inhumane to ask these people to bear the burden—or rather force them to bear the burden—so that the rest of us can reap the benefits of free trade. We have a duty to compensate them for their loss, which is exactly what this proposal is designed to do, by giving them the opportunity to retrain and find other employment.

I also support trade adjustment assistance because the alternative is permanent protection from imports for vulnerable industries, which, as a general rule, I cannot support. TAA cushions the blow to workers and businesses adversely impacted by foreign competition, and so lessens the political pressure for protectionism. An effective TAA program—not the partially dismantled TAS Program that the Reagan administration has operated, but a truly effective adjustment program—could generate the kind of support for expanding world trade that we so urgently need today.

I believe that this proposal provides for an effective TAA Program. The emphasis in this proposal is on retraining displaced workers, as opposed to merely compensating them for their loss. Moreover, this proposal provides vouchers for retraining, so that the displaced workers will have the flexibility to choose the type of retraining that best suits their needs and aspirations.

Let me add, Mr. President, that my support of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program does not mean that I believe that we can afford, as a Nation, to allow our industrial base and our manufacturing employment to simply drift overseas. Quite the contrary, I believe that where American jobs are threatened by unfair competition, by the industrial targetting policies of other nations, by subsidies, and by restricted market access and nontariff bariers—that in those cases our Government take action of a different kind. Instead of adjustment assistance, those cases require the purposeful use of other remedies. I fully support efforts to strengthen the capacity of our Nation to respond to such violations with reciprocal measures, and urge the administration to use existing trade law more forcefully to that end.

But it is unavoidable, Mr. President, that the viscisitudes of global competition mean that there will be a constant ebb and flow of comparitive advantage in manufacturing. Trade adjustment assistance can be an important tool. When used properly, it will offer an incentive that will promote speedier adjustment to these inevitable changes, and will help our workers industries upgrade their skills and keep our economy on the leading edge of economic growth, innovation, and opportunity.●

By Mr. HEINZ (for himself and Mr. SPECTER):

S. 1546. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to allow an individual a credit against income tax for certain expenditures for the purpose of reducing radon levels in the principal residence of the individual; to the Committee on Finance.

RADON RELIEF ACT

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to provide assistance to homeowners who must purchase equipment and materials for radon decontamination, the Radon Relief Act of 1985.

Radon is a radioactive gas naturally produced by the decay of underground deposits of uranium. Uranium is in a constant state of decay by its very nature, breaking down into a variety of radioactive substances, including radon. It seeps to the surface, and dangerous concentrations of radon build in the basements of well-insulated homes. Radon gas is colorless, odorless, and tasteless; it does not burn or glow, and is undetectable by human senses. The gas is not necessarily hazardous to humans, but may further decay into highly dangerous radioactive particles which lodge in the lungs when inhaled.

In the eastern part of my home State, through Berks County, there runs a narrow belt of uranium-rich granite known to geologists as the Reading Prong. This region extends beyond Reading to northern New Jersey and into New York State. Unacceptably high levels of radon gas have been discovered in approximately 40 percent of the over 1,400 homes already tested in the Reading Prong by the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources. In addition, high levels of indoor radon have been detected in Maine, New Hampshire, Florida, Idaho, Montana, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Texas, California, and the State of Washington.

Mr. President, according to the National Council on Radiation and Protection [NCRP], radon gas contamination may be responsible for between 5,000 and 10,000 lung cancer deaths annually. NCRP estimates that over 1 million American homes may have unacceptable levels of radon gas. The deadly nature of this gas struck home for two of my constituents, Stanley and Diane Watras of Colebrookdale, PA, whose home was estimated to contain radon levels 675 times the maximum permitted in uranium mines. This was the highest level of naturally occurring radiation ever recorded in a home in the United States.

Because there are no State or Federal funds available for financial assistance, the costs of reducing radon in a home must presently be borne by the homeowner. Earlier this month I sent EPA Administrator Lee Thomas a letter requesting further study of the radon problem. I believe that Federal agencies should work together to formulate a national strategy to address this emerging threat to public health.

In most cases, radon can be reduced by finding and sealing the main source of the gas leak. Often, some means of venting the gas from the footings of the house is also required. The cost to homeowners for remedial work to permanently lower dangerously high levels of radon gas can range from a few hundred dollars to $20,000. Many insurance companies have said that they are not liable for radon contamination, and since the substance occurs naturally, no company or agency can be sued for damages.

My legislation will allow homeowners a tax credit against expenditures for the purpose of reducing radon levels. The credit will be for 40 percent of the amount spent on radon-proofing, with a maximum credit of $5,000. I might add at this point, Mr. President, that a few years ago we promoted energy conservation in the Congress by giving a tax credit to homeowners who sealed their homes to prevent heat loss. An unintended consequence of keeping the cold air out was that this insulation restricts circulation and keeps contaminated particles inside, posing a very serious health threat.

While supporting a tax credit bill in the midst of tax reform debate may be difficult for some, I believe that the dangers of exposure to radon gas warrant action by the Federal Government. For those whose homes have been measured to contain unacceptable levels of radon gas, whose homes have been contaminated through no fault of their own, a tax credit will provide some financial assistance to defray the cost of installing mitigating devices.

In the past, we have devoted much of our time working on environmental laws regulating outdoor pollution. We will soon consider legislation to reauthorize Superfund, the Federal hazardous waste cleanup program. Yet, we have no policy regarding indoor air pollutants, and we spend an average of 90 percent of our time indoors, much of it in our own homes. Homeowners and their families should be able to live in an uncontaminated environment—one free of deadly radon gas. The Radon Relief Act will help homeowners work toward this goal.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill and my letter to EPA Administrator Lee Thomas be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1546

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Radon Relief Act of 1985".

SECTION 1. CREDIT FOR EXPENDITURES FOR REDUCING RADON LEVELS IN CERTAIN PRINCIPAL RESIDENCES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 25 the following new section:

"SEC. 25A. EXPENDITURES FOR REDUCING RADON LEVELS IN CERTAIN PRINCIPAL RESIDENCES.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the qualified radon-reduction expenditures with respect to an eligible principal residence.

"(b) QUALIFIED RADON-REDUCTION EXPENDITURES.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any dwelling unit, the qualified radon-reduction expenditures are 40 percent of so much of the radon-reduction expenditures made by the taxpayer during the taxable year with respect to such unit as does not exceed $5,000.

"(2) PRIOR EXPENDITURES BY TAXPAYER ON SAME RESIDENCE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—If for any prior year a credit was allowed to the taxpayer under this section with respect to any dwelling unit, paragraph (1) shall be applied for the taxable year with respect to such dwelling unit by reducing the dollar amount contained therein by the prior year expenditures taken into account under such paragraph.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) RADON-REDUCTION EXPENDITURES.—The term 'radon-reduction expenditure' means any expenditure made by the taxpayer for property (or for the original installation of such property) installed in or on a dwelling unit (which, at the time such expenditure is made, is an eligible principal residence) if such property—

"(A) is designed to reduce the radon in the air inside such residence,

"(B) can reasonably be expected to remain in operation, or continue to have effect, for at least 3 years, and

"(C) meets the appropriateness, performance, and quality standards (if any) which—

"(i) have been prescribed by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency by regulations, and

"(ii) are in effect at the time of the acquisition of the property.

"(2) ELIGIBLE PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE.—The term 'eligible principal residence' means a dwelling unit—

"(A) which is located in the United States,

"(B) which is used by the taxpayer as his principal residence, and

"(C) which is determined under a technique approved by the National Council for Radiological Protection and Measurement to have a radon level exceeding 2 worker level months per year.

"(d) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) WHEN EXPENDITURE MADE; AMOUNT OF EXPENDITURES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—An expenditure with respect to an item shall be treated as made when original installation of the item is completed.

"(B) AMOUNT.—The amount of any expenditure shall be the cost thereof.

"(2) PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE.—The determination of whether or not a dwelling unit is a taxpayer's principal residence shall be made under principles similar to those applicable to section 1034, except that—

"(A) no ownership requirement shall be imposed, and

"(B) the period for which a dwelling is treated as the principal residence of the taxpayer shall include the 30-day period ending on the first day on which it would (but for this subparagraph) be treated as his principal residence.

"(3) CERTAIN RULES TO APPLY.—Paragraph (10) of section 23(c), and paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 23(d) shall apply for purposes of this section.

"(e) BASIS ADJUSTMENT.—For purposes of this subtitle, if a credit is allowed under this section for any expenditure with respect to any property, the increase in the basis of such property which would (but for this subsection) result from such expendiure shall be reduced by the amount of the credit so allowed."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Subsection (a) of section 1016 of such Code (relating to adjustments to basis) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (26), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (27) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and by adding after paragraph (27) the following new paragraph:

"(28) to the extent provided in section 25A(e), in the case of property with respect to which a credit has been allowed under section 25A."

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25 the following new item:

"Sec. 25A. Expenditures for reducing radon levels in certain principal residences."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to amounts paid or incurred after December 31, 1984, in taxable years ending after such date.

Hon. LEE THOMAS,
Administrator,
Environmental Protection Agency,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. THOMAS: I am writing on behalf of the residents of Reading and other parts of the state of Pennsylvania whose homes have been contaminated by radon gas.

Radon can build up to deadly concentrations indoors and many residents of the so-called Reading Prong have unacceptable levels of the gas in their homes. Last month I joined with six of my colleagues in cosponsoring S. 1198, the Indoor Air Quality Research Act of 1985, legislation to establish an EPA research program to study the hazards of indoor air pollution and the effects of radon.

While it is my hope that our bill will pass and become law, I urge you to devote existing resources to this emerging public health problem. There is a clear need for Federal involvement in this area and I suggest that EPA work closely with state and local governments and other agencies such as the Department of Health and Human Services Centers for Disease Control in formulaiting a national strategy for remedial action to combat this mysterious killer.

Sincerely,

JOHN HEINZ,
U.S. Senator.●

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 1547. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to authorize certain disabled former prisoners of war to use Department of Defense commissary stores and post exchanges; to the Committee on Armed Services.

USE OF COMMISSARY STORES AND POST EXCHANGES BY CERTAIN FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation, which in my view, is long overdue. My bill would enable those former prisoners of war who have been separated honorable from their respective service and who have been rated to have a 30 percent service-connected disability to have the use of both the military commissary and post exchange privileges. While I realize that it is impossible to adequately compensate one who has endured long periods of incarceration at the hands of our Nation's enemies, I do feel this gesture is both meaningful and important to those concerned. It also serves as a reminder that our Nation has not forgotten their sacrifice.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 1548. A bill to require the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board to develop a "Strategic Foreign Currency Reserve"; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

STRATEGIC FOREIGN CURRENCY RESERVE ACT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the foreign exchange value of the dollar is much like Washington's weather in August: Everyone complains about it, but nobody does anything about it. The time has come to do something about the price of the dollar.

I rise today, with my distinguished colleague Senator BAUCUS to introduce legislation to require the Department of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board to intervene in the foreign exchange markets by exchanging dollars for a "Strategic Foreign Currency Reserve" consisting of the currencies of the Group of Ten industrialized countries.

No Member of this body would support a 60-percent tax on American exports and a comparable subsidy of foreign imports. Yet, since 1980, the price of the dollar has increased approximately 60 percent against a basket of currencies of 10 of our major trading partners. The high price of the dollar makes American goods more expensive in foreign markets, while foreign produced goods become cheaper in American markets. In effect, the high price of the dollar acts as a tax on American exports and a subsidy of foreign imports.

The results have been devastating. American businesses are unable to sell their products abroad. At the same time, foreign companies have been able to build distribution networks in the United States. Perhaps most alarming, U.S. companies are being forced to import finished products and major components in order to remain competitive here at home.

The increase in the price of the dollar during the last 4 years has occurred despite record merchandise trade and current account deficits—a cumulative $283 and $149 billion respectively. Under the floating exchange system prevailing since 1973, such deficits should depreciate the dollar, since foreign exchange must be bought with dollars to pay for the imports, and the increased supply of dollars should reduce the price of the dollar as against foreign currencies.

This has not happened. Instead, the price of the dollar has risen sharply. Why? Because of extraordinary foreign demand for dollars to invest in this country. Foreign investors have bought dollars with their currencies to invest in the United States, attracted by higher real interest rates—resulting from the administration's unprecedented budget deficits, a cumulative $600 billion since 1981—as well as by expectations of greater economic growth here than abroad. This demand for dollars has exceeded available supplies, even taking into account dollars needed to pay for imports.

The price of the dollar is now largely determined by international investment, not trade, flows. Foreign exchange transactions for investment purposes are estimated to be at least 10 times the amount needed to finance international trade transactions. Rapid and large-scale capital flows are possible as a result of liberalized and computerized international financial markets.

But international foreign exchange markets, like any market, are subject to numerous market imperfections. Decisions may be based on dated, erroneous, incomplete, or noneconomic information. Decisions may also be made in anticipation of the continuation of market trends, a phenomenon often referred to as "bandwagon effects."

The combination of large international capital flows and market imperfections have led to excessive short-term fluctuations—"volatility"—and have contributed significantly to the market overshooting a dollar price that reflects underlying trade realities—"misalignment".

At the same time, there are many who believe—and fear—that the combination of continuing merchandise trade and current account deficits, reduced expectations of economic growth in the United States, and market imperfections could produce a sharp drop in demand for dollars to invest in the United States. Such a run on the dollar would lead to a sudden and sharp drop in the dollar's price, and a corresponding sudden rise in the cost of imported goods that could, in turn, reignite inflation, causing a painful adjustment process and seriously damaging the economy.

Lest anyone doubt how easily such a run could develop, and not necessarily in response to changes in underlying market fundamentals, let us recall that the dollar dropped 2.4 percent in 24 hours between 2:30 p.m. on March 18 and 2:30 p.m. on March 19 in response to an Ohio thrift institution going bankrupt and fears that there would be a run on other Ohio savings and loans institutions.

Mr. President, the costs to the U.S. economy associated with the dollar's excessive increase in price, and possible sudden sharp drop in price in the future, are significant and should be avoided. A gradual decline in the price of the dollar from its current high levels is desirable and should be encouraged.

What, then, can be done to achieve a gradual and lasting reduction in the dollar's price to a level that better reflects such underlying trade factors as relative productivity and inflation?

First, we must take action to reduce the Federal budget deficit, in order to reduce the high interest rates that attract foreign capital. Second, the governments of foreign countries with underpriced currencies must stimulate economic growth, to enhance the desirability of investing in those countries. And finally, the governments of all industrialized nations representing the major trading currencies must coordinate their macroeconomic policies. Yet these actions are unlikely to occur, at least to a sufficient extent, in the near future.

There is, however, something the United States can do to supplement and complement these actions. Our Government can intervene in the foreign exchange markets. This is not a new idea; indeed, from the time the dollar began to "float" in 1973 through 1981, the United States intervened often. Intervention was particularly noteworthy in 1978–79 when the United States sought to stem a serious decline in the dollar's price. However, this changed on May 4, 1981, when Beryl W. Sprinkel, Under Secretary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs, proclaimed the Reagan administration's policy of a "clean float."

Intervention by the United States to purchase substantial amounts of foreign currencies with dollars, thereby developing a "Strategic Foreign Currency Reserve," could correct market imperfections, reduce the extent and slow the pace of exchange rate movements, resist further increases in the dollar's price, and assist its gradual decline.

It is important to note, Mr. President, that a Strategic Foreign Currency Reserve also would provide the Treasury and Federal Reserve Board with the means to moderate any sudden large drop in the dollar's price, by selling the foreign currencies in the reserve and purchasing dollars, thereby helping to support the dollar's price.

The legislation which I am introducing today would direct the Department of the Treasury and Federal Reserve Board to intervene in the foreign exchange markets by purchasing substantial amounts of foreign currencies with dollars. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board would be required to exchange, within 3 years, not less than $30 billion in dollars for the currencies of the countries constituting the Group of Ten.

In the unlikely event that international economic conditions change to such a degree that the Secretary and the Chairman agree that complying with the 3-year period would actually defeat the purposes of the act, then they will notify Congress, which may, by joint resolution, approve a 1-year extension.

The Secretary and the Chairman would have discretion to purchase foreign currencies at those times that such intervention would be most effective in resisting and moderating increases in the price of the dollar and assisting its gradual decline in price. They also would seek to coordinate such intervention with the central banks of the Group of Ten whenever possible, and would be authorized to take action to offset the effect of such intervention on the domestic money supply; that is, the intervention could be "sterilized".

On April 30, Senator BAUCUS introduced a resolution—which I cosponsored—calling upon the President to initiate discussions at the Bonn summit on the problems of currency misalignments and exchange rate volatility and possible cooperative approaches to these problems. He did not do so.

On May 15, the Senate adopted an amendment introduced by Senator BRADLEY—which I cosponsored—urging the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board to take steps, including intervention, to gradually lower the price of the dollar. Yet the administration has not indicated any change in its policy of nonintervention except in the most selected instances of "disorderly markets."

Nor can the recent agreement among the finance ministers of the Group of Ten to increase surveillance of each country's economic policies suffice.

We cannot afford to wait any longer. The overpriced dollar poses a real and present danger of "de-industrialization." I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1548

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 1. This Act may be cited as the "Strategic Foreign Currency Reserve Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) In 1984, the average price of the dollar when measured against the currencies of 10 major trading partners was approximately 60 percent higher than in 1980.

(2) In the first two months of 1985 the price of the dollar rose a further 8 percent, before returning to 1984 levels.

(3) The high price of the dollar makes American goods more expensive in foreign markets, while foreign produced goods become cheaper in the American markets. Thus, the high price of the dollar acts as a tax on American exports and a subsidy of foreign imports.

(4) The high price of the dollar has resulted in much of the growth in domestic demand being satisfied with foreign imports, not domestically produced goods. Since 1980, the high price of the dollar has resulted in the loss of an estimated 2 million jobs, 4 percent in real gross national product, and 9 percent in industrial production.

(5) The high price of the dollar is leading to the deindustrialization of the United States. United States companies are: establishing plants abroad and importing finished products; importing major components and assembling the finished product in the United States; and abandoning foreign markets. Foreign companies are able to build distribution networks in the United States; their increased export volume permits those companies to realize economies of scale and take advantage of state-of-the-art technology.

(6) The high price of the dollars hurts not only United States exports of manufactured goods and services and high technology products but agriculture as well; 1984 American agriculture exports were $2,500,000,000 less than 1980 exports.

(7) The price of the dollar has lost its relationship to international trade flows and is higher than is warranted by underlying factors such as relative productivity and inflation. The increase in the price of the dollar during the last four years occurred despite the existence for record merchandise trade and current account deficits: a cumulative $283 billion and $149 billion for the years 1980–1984.

(8) The increase in the price of the dollar during the last four years has occurred because foreign demand for dollars was so great that it exceeded the available supply, even taking into account the supply of dollars resulting from the need to pay for imports. This demand for dollars has been investment not trade, generated.

(9) Foreign investors who have bought dollars with their currencies to directly and indirectly invest in the United States, have been attracted by higher real interest rates in the United States than abroad (resulting from the administration's unprecedented budget deficits—a cumulative $600 billion—since 1981), as well as expectations of greater economic growth and political stability.

(10) Foreign exchange transactions for investment purposes are estimated to be at least ten times the amount needed to finance international trade transactions. Rapid and large scale capital flows are possible as a result of liberalized and computerized international financial markets.

(11) The international foreign exchange market is subject to numerous market imperfections. Decisions may be based on dated, erroneous or noneconomic information or in anticipation of the continuation of market trends (often referred to as "speculative bubbles" or "bandwagon effects"). Such market imperfections have led to excessive short term fluctuations (volatility) in the dollar's price and have contributed to the market overshooting the correct dollar price (misalignment).

(12) At some point in the future the combination of continuing merchandise trade and current account deficits, reduced expectations of economic growth in the United States, and market imperfections could lead to a sharp drop in the demand for dollars to invest in the United States and a corresponding sharp drop in the price of the dollar. Such a sudden drop in the price of the dollar would lead to a sudden and sharp rise in the cost of imported goods and could reignite pervasive inflation, causing a painful adjustment process and seriously damaging the economy.

(13) The costs to the United States economy associated with the dollar's excessive increase in price, and possible sudden drop in price in the future, are significant and should be avoided.

(14) A gradual decline in the price of the dollar from its current high levels is desirable and should be encouraged.

(15) In order to achieve a gradual, and lasting, reduction in the price of the dollar:

(A) the United States Government must reduce the Federal budget deficit in order to reduce the high interest rates that are attracting foreign capital;

(B) the governments of foreign countries with underpriced currencies must stimulate economic growth in order to improve the desirability of investing in those countries; and

(C) the governments of the industrialized nations representing ther major trading currencies (that is constituting the Group of Ten) must coordinate their macroeconomic policies.

(16) These actions, which are unlikely to occur to a sufficient extent in the near future, can be complemented and supplemented by government intervention in the foreign exchange markets. Between 1973 and 1981 the United States and all other G-10 nations used exchange market intervention (to varying degrees) as a tool of exchange rate policy.

(17) Intervention by the United States Government in the foreign exchange markets to purchase substantial amounts of major foreign currencies with dollars, thereby developing a strategic foreign currency reserve, could: correct market imperfections; reduce the extent and slow the pace of exchange rate movements; resist further increases in the dollar's price; and assist its gradual decline in price.

(18) A strategic foreign currency reserve would also provide the Treasury and Federal Reserve Board with the means to resist any sudden large drop in the dollar's price by selling foreign currencies in the reserve and purchasing dollars, thereby helping to support the dollar's price.

(19) To be most effective, intervention by the Department of Treasury or Federal Reserve Board should be coordinated, whenever possible, with intervention by the central banks of the countries constituting the Group of Ten.

(20) Despite introduction in the Senate of a resolution calling upon the President to initiate discussions with our trading partners about the problems of currency misalignments and exchange rate volatility and possible cooperative approaches to these problems, and passage by the Senate of another resolution urging the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board to take steps, including intervention, to gradually lower the value of the dollar, the administration has not indicated any change in its policy of nonintervention (except in selected instances of "disorderly markets").

SEC. 3. PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to require the United States to intervene in foreign exchange markets to:

(1) purchase substantial amounts of major foreign currencies with dollars to resist and moderate increases in the dollar's price and assist its gradual decline in price; and

(2) purchase substantial amounts of dollars with major foreign currencies to prevent sudden large drops in the dollar's price.

SEC. 4. ACQUISITION OF A STRATEGIC FOREIGN CURRENCY RESERVE.—

(1) The Secretary of the Treasury and the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board shall immediately acquire a strategic foreign currency reserve consisting of the currencies of the Group of Ten. The Secretary and the Chairman shall, as soon as possible but not later than three years from the date of enactment of this Act, exchange not less than $30 billion for the currencies of the Group of Ten.

(2) The Secretary and the Chairman:

(a) shall purchase foreign currencies at those times that such action would be most effective in resisting and moderating increases in the dollar's price, or in assisting its gradual decline;

(b) shall coordinate such purchases whenever possible with the central banks of the Group of Ten; and

(c) may take action to offset any effect of such purchases on the domestic money supply.

(3) In the event that the Secretary and the Chairman agree that fulfilling the requirements of subsection (4)(1) within the time period set forth therein would be contrary to the purpose of this Act as set forth in section (3), then they shall so notify Congress. Following receipt of such notice, Congress may, by joint resolution, extend the time within which the Secretary and Chairman shall complete acquisition of the strategic foreign currency reserve by one year.

SEC. 5. USE OF STRATEGIC FOREIGN CURRENCY RESERVE.—

(1) The Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board:

(a) shall use foreign currencies in the strategic foreign currency reserve to purchase dollars in order to prevent sudden large drops in the price of the dollar;

(b) shall coordinate such purchases whenever possible with the central banks of the Group of Ten; and

(c) may take action to offset any effect of such purchases on the domestic money supply.

SEC. 6. REPLENISHMENT OF STRATEGIC FOREIGN CURRENCY RESERVE.—The Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board shall, at their discretion, subject to the provisions of subsection 4(2) and notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (4)1, purchase foreign currencies with any dollars acquired under section 5 of this Act.●

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN, in introducing the Strategic Foreign Currency Reserve Act of 1985.

This act should not be necessary. It would not be if this administration recognized we have a problem and would take steps to deal with the dollar.

THE PROBLEM

In the last 4 years the dollar has appreciated some 60 percent against the currencies of our major trading partners. Even with recent declines, the dollar remains overvalued by more than 40 percent.

This is not a costless rise. It is not a source of pride. The overvalued dollar is a source of pain.

It makes our products more expensive to sell. It makes imports cheaper.

The overvalued dollar is a kind of tax—a tax on exports. It is also a subsidy on imports. How long can we ask our workers, industries, and farmers to compete with the dollar working against them?

American workers have foregone raises or taken paycuts to save their jobs—and then seen those jobs disappear offshore because of the overvalued dollar.

Caterpillar Tractor makes some of the best tractors in the world. It is an efficient company with an excellent labor force. It has a productivity and labor-management relations record that would be the envy of the world. But it could not withstand years of an overvalued dollar. It has moved production abroad.

Eastman Kodak testified before the Finance Committee that it achieved a 13 percent increase in productivity last year—and saw that swamped by a rise in the dollar.

The American wheat farmer is the classic example of the efficient producer. American agriculture truly is a miracle. The farmer must fight drought or grasshoppers; he should not have to fight his own currency. But the overvalued dollar raises the cost of American wheat so much that earlier this year Cargill found it would be cheaper to buy Argentine wheat for sale in the United States.

There are areas of disagreement about the causes of our current trade problems. But there is no disagreement—at least not outside the White House—that the overvalued dollar is a major factor.

Ask traders or farmers what has happened to American farm exports. All their answers start with the overvalued dollar.

Ask manufacturers and their employees why plants and jobs have moved offshore. All their answers start with the overvalued dollar.

Ask miners and lumbermen why their industries are in trouble. Their answer is foreign subsidies and the overvalued dollar.

Or, look at the gap between demand and production in the United States during this recovery. Ask why this much heralded investment boom hasn't meant more U.S. production and jobs. The answer: Imports are filling the orders—in part because the dollar makes it cheaper for companies to buy foreign-made equipment.

THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SYSTEM

Mr. President, when the world abandoned the Bretton Woods system of fixed exchanged rates for floating rates, no one foresaw what has happened. Floating exchange rates were supposed to be self-correcting. When a country's trade competitiveness declined so would the value of its currency. This in turn would help restore the competitiveness of its exports.

It hasn't worked out that way. Over the last 4 years the United States has had a soaring Federal deficit, a soaring trade defict, and a soaring dollar.

Today trade flows don't seem to dictate currency values. It's the other way around. The value of the dollar now determines whether we can sell our products abroad.

RESPONSES

In today's world a gove. nment must take some responsibility for the value of its currency. The exchange rate cannot be something that just happens. We must keep an eye on the international arena when we design economic policy.

Unfortunately, this administration has ignored that reality. And now it refuses to take responsibility for the results of its policies.

No one believes that intervention in the international currency markets can solve all problems of a currency's value. But it is an important tool—and we must be prepared to use it.

We must also recognize that intervention works especially well when the goal is to lower a currency's value. We can sell dollars.

The U.S. Government should be willing to work with other governments and central banks to limit currency volatility and to drive the dollar back toward its equilibrium value.

STRATEGIC CURRENCY RESERVE

This legislation requires our Government to focus on the value of the dollar. It requires our Government to begin to build a strategic reserve of other currencies.

Accumulating such a reserve would serve several purposes. It would push the dollar lower—in part by the selling of dollars and in part by the signal that the U.S. Government wanted to push the dollar lower. It would also assure us a supply of foreign currencies for use at such time as we need to moderate any large drop in the dollar.

These are both important. A signal from the U.S. Government that we wished a decline in the value of the dollar—and that we were prepared to actively pursue that decline—would immediately dampen speculative pressure on the dollar. Accumulation of a strategic currency reserve would also signal that we are prepared to control that decline—and so would also discourage speculation against the dollar.

Mr. President, the strategic currency reserve is not the single all-purpose answer to our trade problems or even to the problem of the overvalued dollar. However, the strategic currency reserve is a start. It is also remarkable in another way—it is that rare piece of legislation that offers only benefits.

Mr. President, we must act now. Plants moved abroad don't come home rapidly. Market share once lost is not easily regained.●

By Mr. DENTON:

S.J. Res. 184. Joint resolution to authorize the Korean War Memorial, Inc., to erect a memorial in the District of Columbia or its environs; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

ERECTION OF A MEMORIAL BY THE KOREAN WAR MEMORIAL, INC.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation to authorize the erection of a memorial to the veterans of the Korean War by the group known as Korean War Memorial, Inc., using private funds.

It is clear that the time has come for our country to acknowledge the contributions and sacrifices of our men and women who served during the Korean War. The Korean War is the only significant conflict in which U.S. troops were engaged that does not have a memorial in our Nation's capital.

The joint resolution would authorize the erection of the memorial on public grounds on a site to the selected by the Secretary of the Interior with the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts and the National Capital Planning Commission. The design and plans for the memorial would be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the National Commission of Fine Arts, the National Capital Planning Commission, and the American Battle Monuments Commission.

No expenditure of Federal funds would be authorized, and the Federal contribution to the construction of the memorial would be limited to the provision of the land. The Secretary of the Interior, however, would be responsible for the maintenance and care of the memorial.

Finally, the authority for Korean War Memorial, Inc., to erect the memorial would lapse if construction does not commence within 5 years after the enactment of the legislation, and unless prior to construction there are sufficient funds collected to ensure completion.

Mr. President, there have been several pieces of legislation introduced in the Congress to provide a Korean War Memorial. Most of them provide for Federal funding. Certainly that may be an appropriate use of Federal funds, but at a time of serious budget deficits it would seem more prudent and responsible to enter in to an undertaking of this type using private funds if at all possible.

It also occurs to me that the Government's track record in the completion of memorials is not one of the best examples of speed and efficiency, as those of us who have visited the beautiful Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial can attest.

I understand that some of my colleagues have concerns about private funding of a memorial in light of the situation with another memorial. I think it only fair to point out, however, that the Vietnam Veterans Memorial did turn out fairly well, and its popularity certainly attests to its responsiveness to the concerns of many of our citizens. Moreover, I believe it fair to say that that memorial was erected far more quickly with private funds than it would have been with public funds.

In addition, the joint resolution that I am introducing today specifically provides for approval of the design by several responsible organizations. I believe that the inclusion of the American Battle Monuments Commission among them will ensure that the design is fully appropriate.

Finally, I should note that the Korean War Memorial, Inc., represents a responsible group of Korean War veterans, and has the support of many of our veterans organizations. It is worth noting that the activities of Korean War Memorial, Inc., played a major role in awakening public consciousness to the need for a memorial and in bringing the Congress to the point where action to provide a memorial seems assured.

Under its current leadership, Korean War Memorial, Inc., is a responsible organization that is fully aware of the challenge of raising private funding but that is in a position to do it successfully. I believe that it will be able to move quickly and effectively, in a way that satisfies the interests of all concerned.

Mr. President, the time has come for the Congress to act to authorize a Korean War Memorial. The brave men and women who served in our Armed Forces during that conflict deserve no less.

I urge my colleagues to support the joint resolution to authorize a privately funded memorial, and I hope that the Congress will act quickly to provide a fitting tribute to our Korean War veterans.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. J. RES. 184

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Korean War Memorial, Inc. is authorized to erect a memorial on public grounds in the District of Columbia or its environs, subject to authorization by the Secretary of the Interior as provided in section 2 to honor members of the Armed Forces of the United States who served in the Korean War, particularly those who were killed in action, listed as missing in action or held as prisoners of war.

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to select, with the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts and the National Capital Planning Commission, a suitable site on public grounds in the District of Columbia or its environs, upon which may be erected the memorial authorized in the first section of this resolution.

(b) The design and plans for such memorial shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the National Commission of Fine Arts, the National Capital Planning Commission, and the American Battle Monuments Commission.

(c) Except for the land authorized for the erection of the memorial in the first section, no funds may be expended, obligations incurred, or property given by the United States, the District of Columbia, or any State or local government for the erection of the memorial.

SEC. 3. The authority conferred pursuant to this resolution shall lapse unless—

(1) the erection of such memorial is commenced within five years from the date of enactment of this resolution; and

(2) prior to the erection of the memorial, funds are certified available in an amount sufficient in the judgement of the Secretary of the Interior to insure completion of the memorial.

SEC. 4. The maintenance and care of the memorial and grounds shall be the responsibility of the Secretary of the Interior.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 15

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the name of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 15, a bill to authorize the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make grants to States for the purpose of increasing the ability of States to provide drug abuse prevention, education, treatment, and rehabilitation, and for other purposes, to authorize the Attorney General to make grants to States for the purpose of increasing the level of State and local enforcement of State laws relating to production, illegal possession, and transfer of controlled substances.

At the request of Mr. DENTON, the names of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] were added as cosponsors of S. 274, a bill to provide for the national security by allowing access to certain Federal criminal history records.

S. 744

At the request of Mr. COCHRAN, the name of the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] was added as a cosponsor of S. 744, a bill to amend the Agriculture and Food Act of 1981 to provide protection of agricultural purchasers of farm products.

S. 807

At the request of Mr. HART, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 807, a bill to authorize payments to States to be used for grants to provide support for family day care providers.

S. 874

At the request of Mr. CHAFEE, the name of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. EAGLETON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 874, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 by increasing the Federal excise tax on cigarettes by 16 cents per pack to a permanent 32 cents per pack and by providing that revenues from the additional tax be deposited in the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund under the Social Security Act.

S. 942

At the request of Mr. DANFORTH, the name of the Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL] was added as a cosponsor of S. 942, a bill to promote expansion of international trade in telecommunications equipment and services, and for other purposes.

S. 987

At the request of Mr. EXON, the names of the Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] were added as cosponsors of S. 987, a bill to recognize the organization known as the Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War 1861-1865.

S. 1084

At the request of Mr. GOLDWATER, the names of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] were added as cosponsors of S. 1084, a bill to authorize appropriations of funds for activities of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and for other purposes.

S. 1090

At the request of Mr. HELMS, the name of the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1090, a bill to amend section 1464 of title 18, United States Code, relating to broadcasting obscene language, and for other purposes.

S. 1093

At the request of Mr. MATHIAS, the name of the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1093, a bill to amend the patent law to restore the term of the patent grant in the case of certain products for the time of the regulatory review period preventing the marketing of the product claimed in a patent.

S. 1153

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the name of the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1153, a bill to provide for the distribution within the United States of the United States Information Agency film entitled "Hal David: Expressing a Feeling".

S. 1214

At the request of Mr. DECONCINI, the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1214, a bill to amend section 215 of title 18, United States Code, to modify the state of mind requirements for certain bank bribery and related offenses.

S. 1233

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the names of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] were added as cosponsors of S. 1233, a bill to amend the Animal Welfare Act to ensure the proper treatment of laboratory animals.

S. 1277

At the request of Mr. BRADLEY, the names of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] were added as cosponsors of S. 1277, a bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that States may provide home or community-based services under the Medicaid program without the necessity of obtaining a waiver.

S. 1296

At the request of Mr. MATHIAS, the name of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1296, a bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to modify the requirement for naturalization of an understanding of the English language.

S. 1451

At the request of Mr. CHAFEE, the name of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1451, a bill to allocate funds appropriated to carry out section 103 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 for nutrition programs which reduce vitamin A deficiency.

S. 1456

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the name of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1456, a bill to recognize the Army and Navy Union of the United States of America.

S. 1459

At the request of Mr. BRADLEY, the names of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] were added as cosponsors of S. 1459, a bill to provide secure job opportunities to workers displaced by imports.

S. 1498

At the request of Mr. WEICKER, the names of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] were added as cosponsors of S. 1498, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide tax incentives for the issuance of small business participating debentures.

S. 1531

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the names of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] were added as cosponsors of S. 1531, a bill to amend the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 to provide for improved emergency planning and notification of releases of hazardous substances, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 68

At the request of Mr. DODD, the name of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. TRIBLE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 68, a joint resolution to designate November 21, 1985, as "William Beaumont Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 156

At the request of Mr. MURKOWSKI, the name of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 156, a joint resolution authorizing a memorial to be erected in the District of Columbia or its environs.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 159

At the request of Mr. JOHNSTON, the names of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. TRIBLE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 159, a joint resolution to designate the rose as the national floral emblem.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 166

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the names of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 166, a joint resolution to appeal for the release of Dr. Yury Orlov and other Helsinki Final Act monitors.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 175

At the request of Mr. PROXMIRE, the names of the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 175, a joint resolution to designate the week of August 25, 1985, through August 31, 1985, as "National CPR Awareness Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 176

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the names of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 176, a joint resolution to provide that a special gold medal honoring George Gershwin be presented to his sister, Frances Gershwin Godowsky, and a special gold medal honoring Ira Gershwin be presented to his widow, Leonore Gershwin, and to provide for the production of bronze duplicates of such medals for sale to the public.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 58—RELATING TO INFORMATION REGARDING MEDICARE BENEFITS

Mr. PROXMIRE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. CON. RES. 58

Whereas thirty million elderly and disabled Americans rely upon the Medicare program for essential health care;

Whereas the new prospective payment system for hospitals has resulted in unintended confusion among Medicare beneficiaries regarding their entitlement to hospitalization;

Whereas Medicare beneficiaries have not always had their questions regarding their rights and responsibilities clearly and accurately answered during their period of hospitalization;

Whereas the Congress believes that the Medicare program, senior citizen groups, the hospital industry, physicians and nurses should work together to resolve this problem cooperatively: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the Congress reaffirms its strong support for the Medicare program on this, its twentieth anniversary, and for the right of all Medicare beneficiaries to accurate and timely information regarding their Medicare benefits during a period of hospitalization;

(2) The Secretary of Health and Human Services should use her good offices to immediately convene a Working Group of representatives from senior citizen groups, the hospital industry, physicians and nurses to draft within 90 days a simple statement of Medicare Patients' Rights and Responsibilities;

(3) the Secretary of Health and Human Services should transmit copies of the completed Statement to all Members of Congress, all hospitals and physicians participating in the Medicare program as well as provide copies upon request; and

(4) all hospitals participating in the Medicare program should voluntarily reproduce and distribute the completed Statement to all Medicare beneficiaries upon admission and to their families or guardians, upon request.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this concurrent resolution to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 59—COMMENDING PRIVATE SECTOR EFFORTS TO ALLEVIATE HUNGER

Mr. TRIBLE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry:

S. CON. RES. 59

Whereas a large number of people in this country are not able to regularly supply themselves and their families with food;

Whereas food banks, soup kitchens, and other emergency food providers are witnessing a substantial increase in the number of persons seeking food assistance;

Whereas gleaning is a partnership between food producers and nonprofit organizations through which food producers permit members of such organizations to collect grain, vegetables, and fruit which have not been harvested and distribute such food items to programs which provide food to needy individuals;

Whereas support of gleaning to supply food to the poor is part of the Judeo-Christian heritage as set out in the Book of Leviticus, "When you reap the harvests of your land, do not reap to the very edges of your field or gather the gleanings of your harvest. Do not go over your vineyard a second time or pick up the grapes that have fallen. Leave them for the poor and the alien.";

Whereas a 1977 General Accounting Office analysis estimated that during the 1974 harvest 60,000,000 tons of grain, vegetables, and fruit, valued at $5,000,000,000 were unharvested;

Whereas the diets of millions of hungry people in the United States could have been supplemented with such lost grain, vegetables, and fruit;

Whereas a number of State and local governments have enacted Good Samaritan laws which limit the liability of food donors and provide an incentive for food contributions; and

Whereas numerous civic, religious, charitable, and other nonprofit organizations throughout the country have begun gleaning programs to harvest such food items and channel them to the hungry in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) food producers who permit gleaning of their fields and civic, religious, charitable, and other nonprofit organizations which glean fields and distribute the resulting harvest to help alleviate hunger should be commended for their efforts; and

(2) State and local governments should be encouraged to enact tax and other incentives designed to increase the number of food producers who permit gleaning of their fields and the number of shippers who donate, or charge reduced rates for, transportation of gleaned produce.

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, I am submitting a concurrent resolution today commending those farmers and charitable organizations who, by gleaning America's farmlands, help to alleviate hunger both here and abroad. Representative TONY HALL is sponsoring an identical resolution in the House.

Throughout the United States, farmers are donating surplus crops to the hunger relief effort. Charitable groups are heavily involved in distributing those crops to hungry individuals in America and around the world. Many States, including the Commonwealth of Virginia, have enacted tax incentives intended to encourage surplus crop donations. The people involved in these worthwhile efforts deserve to know that the Congress supports their work. My concurent resolution would commend the individuals involved, and encourage State and local governments to adopt tax incentives and other measures that will promote this type of hunger relief effort.

This activity in the area of crop donation could not have come at a better time. The specter of starvation looms most heavily today over the continent of Africa, but tragically, Africa is not the only continent afflicted by the threat of starvation.

Acute hunger and malnutrition persist in many areas around the world. In addition, several recent studies suggest that hunger might well be on the increase here in the United States.

Gleaning of America's farmlands can help to resolve these urgent problems. Through this process, food producers and hunger relief organizations collect vegetables, grain, and other crops which might have been passed over during a first harvest or may not be suitable for sale. Those food items are then distributed to needy individuals in the United States and other nations, rather than simply discarded.

One of the best examples of such an effort is "The Potato Project," based in my own State of Virginia. This program is administered largely by three individuals from the society of St. Andrew in Big Island, VA. It began as a temporary effort to distribute surplus potatoes to hungry families in Virginia and the District of Columbia. Yet, after only 2 years, the society has distributed millions of pounds of surplus potatoes—which otherwise would have simply been thrown away—to needy individuals in more than 40 States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a recent Washington Post article describing the potato project be printed in the RECORD at this time:

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 5, 1984]

POTATO POWER: 2 VIRGINIA PASTORS GATHER TONS OF TUBERS TO FEED NEEDY IN D.C., 35 STATES

(By Marjorie Hyer)

BIG ISLAND, VA.—Nothing about the weather-beaten sheep shed off a narrow gravel road that twists up through the Blue Ridge some 30 miles west of Lynchburg suggests it is the headquarters of a growing national hunger-fighting organization.

But before the year is out, a unique operation called the Potato Project, based here, will have rescued 8 million pounds of potatoes from garbage heaps and dispatched them to hungry people in 35 states and the District of Columbia.

Begun 14 months ago by two United Methodist preachers, the Potato Project has forged a long-missing link in the food distribution chain between waste in the fields and hungry people in the cities.

The basic premise is simple: Collect potatoes that are not marketable—because they are misshapen or were nicked by the digging machines—but are perfectly good to eat, and ship them to food warehouses and soup kitchens in cities and on Indian reservations.

"We stumbled into it last spring [1983] and were just going to do it for eight weeks, from the Eastern Shore to eight Virginia cities and the District of Columbia," said the Rev. Ray Buchanan, one of the founders of the Potato Project. "Somehow, we just never stopped."

From the improvised office in their hill country sheep shed, Buchanan and his partner, the Rev. Kenneth Horne, have distributed potatoes through more than 80 outlets, at a cost currently running at 3.8 cents a pound. They plan to double the volume in 1985, as well as branching out into such items as green beans, corn and frozen fish. They learn about available potatoes "by word of mouth," Horne said. "You work with one farmer. He learns that things are on the up and up, and he says, 'I know a guy you ought to call,' and the word gets around."

Last week, for example, they had a call from a broker on Virginia's Eastern Shore whom they had got in touch with four or five months ago. Could the Potato Project use a load of potatoes rejected by the "chippers" because they had knots on them and wouldn't fit in the potato chip machinery?

They could.

Two days later, a huge silver tractor-trailer truck eased into the space behind First Rising Mount Zion Baptist Church on N Street NW and dumped 49,000 pounds of potatoes for the Council of Churches to distribute to the poor in Washington.

To keep costs at a minimum, the Potato Project seeks distribution sites as close as possible to where the potatoes are grown. "We try to make sure that nothing is resold, and we try to make sure it gets to the people who need it," Horne said.

Their United Methodist connections come in handy, but "if we find a place where there's not a Methodist Church, we can always call the Episcopalians or the Lutherans," Horne said.

Buchanan and Horne are convinced they have only scratched the surface of a mountain of food that could go to the needy. "We'll move 8 million pounds [of potatoes] this year, and we're only dealing with 27 or 28 growers" in a dozen states, Buchanan said. "In Maine alone there are 1,100 growers.

"Last year, one grower, who is also a broker, gave us 2.4 million pounds. I asked him, 'What did you do before we came along?' He said, 'Well, I gave the starch plant all they could use, and then I dumped 3 million pounds.' "

The Potato Project pays the growers' cost of bagging the potatoes—the bulk load that went to Washington last week was unusual—and the freight to the nearest distribution center, though the receiving food banks or soup kitchens are invited to help pay shipping costs if they can.

Besides the satisfaction of knowing the potatoes are nourishing to someone in need, the grower may get a tax benefit for a charitable contribution. Buchanan has been lobbying both in Richmond and in Washington recently to get laws covering such benefits strengthened.

The early days of the Potato Project were particularly chaotic on the financial front, Kenneth Horne's brother David recalled. "There was a time last winter when we were in a really tight financial situation.

"We finally got out from under, and Ken went off to raise some money so we would have a little cushion. But while he was gone, a guy called and wanted to give us 2.25 million pounds. And somebody else called with another batch. We hated to turn them down, so when Ken came back in a couple days, he was all excited because he'd raised $6,000. But we'd already spent it!" David Horne said.

Buchanan and Kenneth Horne, both Vietnam veterans who have been friends ever since they began graduate study for the ministry at Duke University, have long since given up the pastoral ministry to operate the Potato Project full time, though "somebody is speaking somewhere about three times a month," Buchanan said.

The speaking helps raise money to keep the project going. The three administrators pay themselves salaries of $17,500 each. Bills for telephone service, which is essential, run to $600 or more a month, David Horne said.

The bulk of next year's $646,300 budget will go for bagging the potatoes and for freight. "We're looking for donated bags and donated freight, but donated freight is very difficult to arrange because of the nature of the business," said fund-raiser Horne.

Farmers and processors have offered them other foodstuffs. "A green bean packer on the Eastern Shore of Virginia said he could give me several hundred bushels of green beans," Buchanan said. Their only flaw: they are too long or too short to fit into the processing machinery.

There have also been offers of frozen fish, dairy products, even watermelons.

"What we foresee at some time in the future is that we may get so many potatoes given to us that we can't use them all fresh, so we may want to experiment with dehydration. Then you get into a whole new ballgame," said Buchanan.

"One of the things that makes this program is that it's not just direct relief; it strikes at one of the systemic causes of hunger," he said. Given the amount of food that they have already collected, and the tons more they know is out there, he said, "the only limitation to the program is financial."

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, the potato project is but one of many gleaning programs that are helping to feed hungry individuals. But it is a valuable and moving example of volunteerism at work, and it is exactly the type of private-sector effort that we in the Congress should be encouraging.

My concurrent resolution would do so by commending such efforts and acknowledging the contribution they make to hunger relief. It would also encourage those State and local governments which have not already done so to enact measures that will promote gleaning programs like the potato project.

It is tragic that hunger persists both in America and around the world. But the many private citizens who are working to end hunger deserve our recognition and our support. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this concurrent resolution.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 60—NATIONAL INVESTMENT IN RESEARCH AND ADVANCED EDUCATION CAPABILITIES

Mr. DANFORTH (for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. GORTON, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. PELL, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. FORD, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. SASSER, and Mr. COHEN) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

S. CON. RES. 60

Whereas the long-term economic vitality, security, and well-being of the Nation depend on its ability to sustain investment in the search for new knowledge and to educate future generations in essential scientific, engineering, biomedical, and technological skills;

Whereas the effectiveness of the national defense a position of sustained leadership in basic science, engineering and technological development, and the Nation's capacity to educate and train the most able citizens must be sustained and protected to guarantee that leadership;

Whereas the health and well-being of our people depend on the sustained national investment in fundamental biomedical research and the improvements in health care that result from the search for knowledge;

Whereas institutions of higher education are national resources essential to retaining the Nation's leadership position in the internatonal marketplace, because the institutions educate scientists, engineers, biomedical researchers, and skilled managers, and create new knowledge that underlies technological and economic development;

Whereas the Nation cannot presume the availability of sufficient numbers of highly trained and talented research scientists, teachers, and scholars, unless national policy provides incentives to bring about that result;

Whereas quality research, scholarship, and education at institutions of higher education depend on the exercise of national and State leadership and the will to establish and sustain balanced Federal and State policies designed to assure long-term excellence in basic science research and advanced education programs;

Whereas the Nation's research and graduate programs in institutions of higher education and the research instrumentation and facilities essential to such programs are vital to the search for solutions to national problems such as security, health care, energy, industrial producitivity, education, agriculture, and the environment;

Whereas national investment in higher education research and graduate programs and in the modernization of research laboratories is a responsibility of the Federal Government through its major research agencies, including the Department of Energy, Department of Defense, National Aeronautics and Space Administration, National Institutes of Health, National Science Foundation, and Department of Agriculture, in partnership with the States, private industry, local governments, the institutions of higher education, and others;

Whereas Federal research agencies require adequate information assessing the physical condition and needs of the research laboratories and facilities of institutions of higher education to conduct federally sponsored research; and

Whereas the capacity of universities and colleges to conduct research and graduate education programs on the forefront of science and technology has eroded: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That—

(1) a renewed national investment to strengthen the research and advanced education capabilities of institutions of higher education is needed; and

(2) the major research agencies of the Federal Government (the Department of Energy, Department of Defense, National Aeronautics and Space Administration, National Institutes of Health, National Science Foundation, and Department of Agriculture) should strengthen their investment in research and graduate education programs by—

(A) planning for and providing sustained investments in research and graduate programs in fields of basic science and fundamental engineering essential to the missions of the Federal agencies specified in this resolution;

(B) establishing and strengthening programs to upgrade and replace obsolete research instrumentation and equipment in laboratories of institutions of higher education;

(C) rehabilitating, modernizing, or otherwise improving the quality of research facilities and laboratories of institutions of higher education in which Federally assisted basic research and graduate programs are carried out;

(D) strengthening and expanding graduate fellowships, making awards to individuals and to science and engineering departments of institutions of higher education engaged in research;

(E) providing incentives and expanded opportunities for young investigators to pursue academic research careers;

(F) modernizing and improving undergraduate, graduate, and professional science and engineering instructional programs through the sustained support of faculty research, faculty professional development, instructional laboratory equipment and curricula; and

(G) undertaking a continuing assessment of the physical condition and needs of research facilities of institutions of higher education.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, today Senator DODD and I, along with several other Senators, are submitting legislation affirming the need for a renewed national investment to strengthen the research and advanced education capabilities of our Nation's universities and colleges. This legislative effort was begun with the introduction of S. 1537 2 years ago. The idea behind the ongoing effort is to lay down a basic blueprint upon which each Congress can act.

I am gratified to report since 1983, progress has been made. Funding for basic science research for the six Federal research agencies has increased. And for the 1986 fiscal year, the President requested that funds for research and development be increased by nearly 20 percent for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and by roughly 12 percent for the Department of Defense. However, so much more needs to be done.

During the 1950's and 1960's, our national investment in basic science and technological research reached unprecedented levels. Because of that investment, the United States was able to lead the world in major breakthroughs in areas of biomedical science, space science and engineering. Examples of our leadership in these fields include development of the polio vaccine and successful manned space mission.

Since that time, however, the research equipment and facilities of our Nation's research universities and colleges have become obsolete and worn out. Failure to revitalize the research infrastructure at this critical juncture through additional Federal, State, and private support will seriously weaken the ability of our universities and colleges to make new discoveries in such areas as national security, health care, energy, individual productivity, the environment, and agriculture. Unless we begin to work resolutely to stem this erosion of the basic science infrastructure, our national security, technical capacity, and economy will falter.

There is agreement that a serious problem exists; however, no reliable studies are yet available regarding the specific needs and costs of restoring our Nation's research capacity. Recently, the National Science Foundation surveyed the instrumentation needs of universities and colleges and found that:

Of the university department heads surveyed, 72 percent reported that lack of equipment was preventing critical experiments.

Universities' inventories of scientific equipment showed that 20 percent was obsolete and no longer used in research.

Of all instrument systems in use in research, 22 percent were more than 10 years old.

Only 52 percent of instruments in use were reported to be in excellent working condition.

Of university department heads surveyed, 49 percent rated the quality of instrument-support services—machine shop, electronics shop, and so forth—as insufficient or nonexistent.

The instrumentation problem is but the tip of the iceberg. The problem of replacing and modernizing the research buildings and laboratories is believed to be more acute. The American Association of Universities reported in 1981 that universities were able to meet only about half of their accumulating needs to replace, modernize, and renovate their research laboratories. In recent testimony before the House Committee on Science and Technology, Chancellor Donald Langenberg of the University of Illinois at Chicago conservatively estimated the immediate research facilities deficit at his university to be several hundred million dollars. He added that the estimate did not include the projected requirements of new research programs.

Estimates of the nationwide need for instrumentation and facilities are of course much greater. Dr. Bernadine Healy, Deputy Director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy, has stated that estimates of the cost of renovating and modernizing the university research infrastructure range from $15 billion to more than $20 billion over a 5-year period.

To address the problem adequately, comprehensive studies must be undertaken to assess the needs and costs of restoring university and college research facilities. The House recently responded to this need for reliable information on the magnitude of the problem by approving an authorization bill for the National Science Foundation [NSF] that directs the NSF to assess the research needs of universities. The NSF authorization reported by the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation also includes this provision.

The Nation's continued leadership in science and technology also depends on a sufficient supply of talented and highly trained research scientists, scholars, and teachers. Currently, national support for young scientists in the form of graduate fellowships and young faculty development awards is inadequate to attract the most talented young scientists to academic research and teaching. We are losing many of our best young scientists to private industry which attracts them with high salaries and state of the art equipment and facilities. If this continues, our universities and colleges will be unable to provide the training that new generations of scientists and engineers will need.

The Federal Government has traditionally played the leading role in supporting basic science research, and it must continue to do so. Two years ago, I, along with Senator EAGLETON and others, introduced S. 1537, the University Research Capacity Restoration Act of 1983. S. 1537 was prompted by our concern about the ability of our universities and colleges to educate the future generations of scientists, engineers, biomedical researchers, and skilled managers essential to the long-term vitality, security, and well-being of the Nation. That bill was intended to serve as a 5-year blueprint for increased and sustained Federal investment in our Nation's university and college research capacity. Specifically, the bill gave the six Federal research agencies and departments—the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the National Institutes of Health, the National Science Foundation, and the Departments of Agriculture, Energy, and Defense—authority, where necessary, and increased funding to achieve the objective of restoring and revitalizing our research capacity.

Since S. 1537 was introduced in the last Congress, Congress and the administration have shown a commitment to restoring our research capacity. The administration requested additional funds for basic research for fiscal year 1986, even though it called for an overall reduction in Federal spending. In the House, Representative DON FUQUA recently introduced a bill—H.R. 2823—which seeks to revitalize the Nation's research programs at our universities and colleges by requiring the six major Federal resarch agencies—NSF, NIH, DOD, DOE, NASA, and USDA—to reserve a portion of their research and development funds for the replacement or modernization of laboratories and other research facilities at universities and colleges.

The concurrent resolution that we are submitting today continues our effort in the Senate to strengthen the research and advanced educational capabilities of our universities and colleges. Specifically, this concurrent resolution recommends that the major research agencies of the Federal Government strengthen their investment in research and graduate education programs by: (1) Planning for and providing sustained investments in research and graduate programs in those fields of basic science and fundamental engineering essential to their missions; (2) establishing and strengthening programs to upgrade and replace obsolete research instrumentation and equipment in university and college laboratories; (3) rehabilitating, modernizing, or otherwise improving the quality of university and college research facilities and laboratories in which agency-funded basic research and graduate programs are carried out; (4) strengthening and expanding graduate fellowships and making awards to individuals and to university science and engineering departments engaged in research; (5) providing incentives and expanded opportunities for young scientists and engineers to pursue academic research careers; (6) modernizing and improving undergraduate, graduate, and professional science and engineering instructional programs through the sustained support of faculty research, faculty professional development, instructional laboratory equipment and curricula; and (7) undertaking a continuing assessment of the physical condition and needs of university and college research facilities.

Although the Federal Government must play the lead role, it can not afford to meet the facility needs of our universities and colleges alone, particularly in light of the escalating Federal deficit. The States, private industry, local governments, the universities, and colleges should join with the Federal Government in solving this problem. Earlier this year, I introduced legislation—S. 58—to encourage private support for university-based research. That bill would amend the Internal Revenue Code to create a new tax credit for corporate contributions to universities for basic research and to expand the present enhanced deduction to corporate contributors of scientific equipment to colleges and universities for use in research or research training. S. 58 is one approach to the facility needs problem. Other approaches should also be proposed.

Mr. President, the concurrent resolution that we are submitting today is but one of several efforts in this Congress to revitalize basic science research and advanced education programs of our Nation's universities and colleges. Although Congress and the administration have already taken important steps toward this goal, much more must be done. The Nation's future depends upon our success. Even during a time of restraint in Federal spending, restoration and revitalization of our Nation's research capacity must be a priority. I hope that my colleagues will realize the importance of this issue to the Nation and support this concurrent resolution.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senators DANFORTH, DODD, and CHAFEE as a principal sponsor of this concurrent resolution stating the need to renew and strengthen our commitment to high quality research and graduate programs in our institutions of higher education through various programs within the Departments of Energy, Defense, and Agriculture, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the National Institutes of Health, and the National Science Foundation.

The resolution states clearly the primacy of basic research and education to the national welfare. Our economic strength, national security, health, and the future well-being of our people all depend upon our continued capacity to educate our most able young minds to seek new knowledge necessary to respond to the rapidly changing world in which we live.

Report after report, in recent years, has documented the growing inadquacy of our advanced education and research enterprise. Many research laboratories, and the instruments they contain, are seriously out of date. Too many of our brightest young minds are turning away from research laboratories because of uncertainties in funding for research programs and inadequate stipends.

Dr. George Keyworth, Science Advisor to the President, recently stated,

I'm concerned about our ability to sustain the kind of leading-edge basic research program this country absolutely must have. We can't take it for granted. We have to convince others of its importance, and we have to make sure that the current priority for basic research is maintained.

Making sure that a priority for basic research and its resource base is maintained is precisely what this resolution is designed to achieve. I urge all of my colleagues to join with us in this initiative and the subsequent legislative steps which will be needed to carry out this commitment to preserving our scientific leadership.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

INFLIGHT EMERGENCY MEDICAL CARE

GOLDWATER AMENDMENT NO. 563

Mr. GOLDWATER proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 63) to encourage the rendering of inflight emergency care aboard aircraft by requiring the placement of emergency first aid medical supplies and equipment abroad aircraft and by relieving appropriate persons of liability for the provision and use of such equipment and supplies; as follows:

On page 4, line 9, insert "(other than a physician or an osteopath)" immediately after "personnel".

On page 4, strike all from line 24 through line 11 on page 5.

METZENBAUM AMENDMENT NO. 564

Mr. METZENBAUM proposed an amendment to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1195) to require that a portion of the mail of Congress and the executive branch include a photograph and biography of a missing child; as follows:

Subsection (c) of section 1 of the bill is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" before "Section 3204 (a)"; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following:

(2) Section 733 of title 44 United States Code, is amended by inserting after the second sentence of the second undesignated paragraph the following: "Franks may also contain information relating to missing children as provided in section 3220 of title 39.".

ANTITRUST REMEDIES FOR AGRICULTURAL PRODUCT SELLERS

PRESSLER AMENDMENT NO. 565

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. PRESSLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him; as follows:

SECTION 1. The Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12 et seq.) is amended by inserting after Section 4H the following new section:

SEC. 4I. (a) An action under sections 4, 4A, or 4C for damages resulting from any underpayment received on the sale of agricultural products shall not be barred because the person seeking such damages is not a direct seller to the defendant; provided, however, the person seeking such damages must have possessed the agricultural product for feeding or growing purposes for at least 21 days prior to sale.

(b) In any action under sections 4, 4A, or 4C for damages resulting from any underpayment received on the sale of agricultural products or the sale of products processed therefrom, the person seeking such damages shall not recover for any amount of an underpayment that has been passed on the other persons, who themselves are entitled to recover damages for such underpayment under sections 4, 4A, or 4C.

SEC. 2. The amendments made by this Act shall become effective upon the date of the enactment of this Act.

● Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I want to join in support of the majority leader's efforts to bring the farm bill to the floor for debate. Farmers in my home State of South Dakota will soon be going to the fields to plant their winter wheat and do fall tillage in preparation for next year's crop. They need to know what the 1985 farm bill will include if they are to make sound planting and financial decisions. We need to pass a farm bill so they know where they stand.

Earlier this year, I introduced a bill containing several sections of a farm bill. The primary focus of that bill was to hold down the cost of the farm program, direct farm program benefits to family-size farmers, provide for a sound Soil Conservation Program, and expand our export markets. These should be the basis of any farm bill we pass. However, when passing a sound farm bill, we must also keep in mind the record budget deficits we are currently facing.

Farmers prefer to receive their price from the market, rather than from the Government. However, in recent years the market price has been far below the cost of production. This has caused severe financial problems for many farmers. I plan to offer an amendment which would allow farmers to receive a fair price for their product from the marketplace. I will also be offering several other amendments on various sections of the bill.

Mr. President, I hope that we can pass the farm bill before the August recess. Farmers need to know what the farm program is going to be and Congress needs to do its work and tell them what that farm program will include.

Today I am filing an amendment which I intend to offer to the 1985 farm bill or any other appropriate bill which may be considered.

My amendment would amend the Clayton Act to allow agricultural producers to file antitrust suits against food manufacturers and retailers for price fixing or market manipulation. Currently indirect sellers of purchasers are prohibited from filing antitrust suits and collecting damages. I believe it is critical that the issue be considered at the earliest possible time.●

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1986

D'AMATO AMENDMENT NOS. 566 AND 567

Mr. D'AMATO proposed two amendments to the bill (H.R. 2942) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes; as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 566

Page 20 line 15: Insert after line 15 a new paragraph as follows:

"Of the funds appropriated under this head in Public Law 98-367 for demolition and paving of Square 724, $561,000 shall remain available until September 30, 1986."

AMENDMENT No. 567

Page 19 line 20: Insert after line 20 a new paragraph as follows:

"Of the funds appropriated under this head in Public Law 98-367, not to exceed $109,000 shall remain available until September 30, 1986."

QUAYLE (AND FORD) AMENDMENT NO. 568

Mr. QUAYLE (for himself and Mr. FORD) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 2942, supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place in the text of the bill insert the following: There is established for the duration of the 99th Congress a select committee of the Senate to be known as the Select Committee on the Two-Year Budget (hereafter in this resolution referred to as the "select committee"). The select committee shall be composed of twelve members of the Senate, six from the majority party and six from the minority party, to be appointed by the President of the Senate upon the recommendation of the majority leader and the minority leader.

(b) Of the twelve members—

(1) two members shall be from the Committee on the Budget;

(2) two members shall be from the Committee on Rules and Administration;

(3) two members shall be from the Committee on Governmental Affairs;

(4) two members shall be from the Committee on Appropriations; and

(5) four members shall be from the Senate at large.

(c) The select committee shall select a chairman from among its majority members and a cochairman from among its minority members.

SEC. 2. (a) A majority of the members of the select committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, except that the select committee may fix a lesser number as a quorum for the purpose of taking sworn testimony.

(b) Vacancies in the membership of the select committee shall not affect the authority of the remaining members to execute the functions of the committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments are made.

(c) The select committee shall adopt rules of procedure not inconsistent with the rules of the Senate governing standing committees of the Senate.

(d) Service of a Senator as a member or as chairman of the select committee shall not be taken into account for the purposes of paragraph 4 of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

SEC. 3. (a) It shall be the duty of the select committee to—

(1) study and review legislative proposals to improve the operation of the congressional budget process, including proposals for the two-year budget; and

(2) recommend specific legislation to improve the operation and enforcement of the congressional budget process, including such components of two-year budgeting which the select committee finds to be desirable and feasible.

In carrying out clause (1) of this subsection, the select committee shall pay particular attention to the need to free the time of senators from unnecessary repetitive operations, to encourage oversight of enacted legislation by committees, to provide stable funding expectations to State and local governments, and to maintain accurate budgetary estimates and assessments of national needs and priorities.

(b) The select committee shall report and make recommendations to the Senate within 180 days after the adoption of this resolution.

SEC. 4. (a) For the purposes of this resolution, the select committee is authorized (1) to employ personnel, (2) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (3) to hold hearings, and (4) to sit and act at any time or place.

(b) With the consent of the chairman and ranking minority members of any other committee of the Senate, the select committee may utilize the facilities and the services of the staff of such other committee of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, whenever the chairman and the cochairman of the select committee determines that such action is necessary and appropriate.

SEC. 5. Expenses of the select committee under this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the select committee, except that vouchers shall not be required (1) for the disbursement of salaries of employees of the select committee who are paid at an annual rate, or, (2) for the payment of long-distance telephone calls. Total expenditures for the select committee shall not exceed $300,000.

HAWKINS AMENDMENT NO. 569

Mr. D'AMATO (for Mrs. HAWKINS) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 2942, supra; as follows:

On page 6, after line 2, insert the following:

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL COMMISSION

For expenses of the United States International Narcotics Control Commission, as authorized by section 814 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, passed by the Senate on July 31, 1985, $325,000.

EARTHQUAKE HAZARDS REDUCTION ACT AUTHORIZATION

GORTON AMENDMENT NO. 570

Mr. DOLE. (for Mr. GORTON) proposed an amendment to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 817) to authorize appropriations under the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, and for other purposes; as follows:

In section 2, strike "35,044,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$35,578,000"; and strike "$36,621,000" and insert in lieu thereof $37,179,000".

In section 6, strike "and" at the end and insert in lieu thereof the following:

and".

SEC. 7. Section 2(b)(3) of the National Bureau of Standards Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1986 (Public Law 99-73) is amended by striking "(7), and (8)" and inserting in lieu thereof "' nd (7)".

FEDERAL FIRE PREVENTION AND CONTROL ACT AUTHORIZATION

GORTON AMENDMENT NO. 571

Mr. DOLE (for Mr. GORTON) proposed an amendment to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 818) to authorize appropriations for activities under the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974; as follows:

Strike "$22,953,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$22,037,000".

HIGHWAY SAFETY GRANT AUTHORIZATION

LAUTENBERG (AND DANFORTH) AMENDMENT NO. 572

Mr. BYRD (for Mr. LAUTENBERG for himself and Mr. DANFORTH) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1529) to authorize appropriations for State and community highway safety grants, and for other purposes; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. 3. Section 158 of title 23, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(2), by striking "the fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof "each fiscal year"; and

(2) in subsection (b), by striking "in fiscal year if in any succeeding fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof "in the fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1986, or the fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1987, if before the end of the period for which such funds would be available for expenditure under section 118(b) of this title".

DANFORTH AMENDMENT NO. 573

Mr. DOLE (for Mr. DANFORTH) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1529, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. . Section 403 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(g) There is authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out this section not to exceed $31,000,000 for fiscal year 1987.".

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations will hold a field hearing to examine a proposal to establish an International Boundary Waters Commission, on Friday, August 23, at 2 p.m., at Rainy River Community College, International Falls, MI.

Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations will hold a field hearing on S. 1209, to establish the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality, on Wednesday, September 11, in Miami, FL. For additional information contact Bob Harris at 224-4067.

COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Rules and Administration will meet at 9:30 a.m., on Tuesday, September 17, 1985, in SR-301, Russell Senate Office Building, to receive testimony on Senate Resolutions 28 and 81, concerning television and radio coverage of Senate proceedings.

Senators and other interested organizations and individuals who wish to testify or to submit a statement for the hearing record are requested to contact John Swearingen of the Rules Committee staff at 224-0285.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 31, until 1 p.m., to markup S. 616, the farm bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to meet during the session on the Senate on Wednesday, July 31, in order to receive testimony on RICO civil suits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 31, in order to receive testimony on the following nomination:

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Ferdinand F. Fernandez of California, to be U.S. district judge for the central district of California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MEDICARE PROGRAM

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, 20 years ago this week, President Lyndon B. Johnson traveled to Independence, MO, to sign the legislation creating the Medicare Program.

With determination and courage, and the stroke of the President's pen, the Nation guaranteed its senior citizens affordable health care, and a chance to live in the dignity they had worked for all their lives. For tens of millions of Americans, it meant the fear of illness was no longer accompanied by the fear of financial ruin.

Today, Medicare provides basic medical insurance coverage to 27.5 million senior citizens and 2.9 million disabled Americans. It is the Nation's largest health financing program and, save for the retirement provisions of Social Security, the largest entitlement program in the Federal budget.

President Johnson put it this way 20 years ago this week: Medicare is "not just our tradition or the tradition of the Democratic Party, or even the tradition of the Nation. It is as old as the day it was first commanded, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, thy poor, to thy needy in the land.' "

This week's 20th anniversary of Medicare marks how far we have come as a Nation in extending medical insurance coverage to our citizens. In a period of budget cuts, it underscores our commitment to preserving those gains and extending them to all citizens for whom serious illness can mean serious financial difficulty.

Safeguarding those achievements for future generations will require dedication and ingenuity. Let us remain steadfast in our commitment to the great principles which brought about the historic legislation whose anniversary we celebrate this week.●

MACHINE TOOL INDUSTRY IMPORT RELIEF

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, several times over the past 2 years I have directed the Senate's attention to a situation which, unfortunately, typifies this country's policy of benign neglect with regard to its basic manufacturing capability. I am referring to the U.S. machine tool industry and its request for temporary import relief.

The industry's 1983 request, premised on a well-sustained argument that then-current levels of sophisticated and defense-sensitive machine tool imports posed a serious threat to U.S. national security, was favorably received by Secretary Baldrige who forwarded his recommendation to the White House. That was 18 months ago. As imports continue to flood the U.S. market—import share as a percentage of domestic consumption by value has already risen from 27 percent to 38 percent since the industry's initial request—the White House, or more accurately, the National Security Council, continues to do nothing.

I submit that inaction in the face of grave national security consequenses in inexcusable and, indeed, irresponsible. The beleaguered machine tool industry has undertaken substantial self-help initiatives to revitalize its domestic production processes in order to become more competitive. I would direct Senators' attention to the July 8, 1985, edition of Business Week noting that among those U.S. industries in which R&D spending grew the most in 1984, machine tools ranked fourth—ahead of computers, electronics, and automotive spending.

Laudable as these efforts are, however, the industry has gone as far as it can go without the requested relief it deserves. The industry needs an answer—an answer which is long overdue. It is my hope that a favorable answer will be forthcoming without any further delay. Our national security depends upon it.●

DETROIT AREA SCOUTS HONORED

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to commend three Detroit area Boy Scout troops who spent a weekend in Niles, OH, helping victims of the May 31 tornado which leveled the town.

The Webelos: David Comerford, Aaron Fisher, Michael Helmrich, David Kuryvial, Steven Napolitano, George Pearson; Boy Scouts: Richard Bennett, Gerald Cameron, Peter Cullen, T.J. Grimaldi, Eric Higgins, Bogdan Lemecha, James Murdoch, Gerald Petre, Eric Schabo, David Seeley, Bryon Smith, Jay Stuve, Karl Tarkanyi; and Boy and Girl Explorers: Jennifer Gray, Robert Gray, Dawn Lombard, Valisa Lombard, Kevin Smith; collected food and clothing for the victims of the deadly storm.

The Scouts performed many and varied tasks. They cleared fallen trees, repaired broken toys, helped senior citizens, and several meals at the disaster center.

The Niles town clean up was a tremendous undertaking for Niles residents and the volunteers who came to their aid. People who had never met prior to the disaster pulled together with love and compassion in order to begin restoring Niles to its pretornado state of order and organization.

I further commend the adult leadership and non-affiliated members: Douglass Kerry, Joanne LaBeau, Kathie Lombard, Max Martin, Jesse Murdoch, Steve Napolitano, F.A. Pilch, David Pozak, Mike Ried, Brian Stalcup, and James Stuve, for a job well done. Also, Sgt. Ivon Coleman of the Michigan Army National Guard who drove the bus which safely brought these volunteers to the area, is to be thanked for pitching in to help the Scouts and the citizens of Niles, OH.

It is indeed a pleasure to honor these outstanding young people who gave so unselfishly of themselves when they saw a need to be met. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Scouts and their leadership for this act of kindness and community service. I thank them and wish them well in future endeavors.●

EXPANDED CAPITAL OWNERSHIP AND THE IDEOLOGICAL HIGH GROUND

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, today I am including the second of a series of three articles on the technology of expanded capital ownership. As part of America's search for more effective ways to promote private-sector productivity, investments and jobs, over 7,000 U.S. companies have adopted employee stock ownership plans [ESOP's]. And they seem to work. With over 10 million American workers now participating as coowners of the companies they work for, it is useful to understand the reasons ESOP's are becoming increasing part of the American free enterprise system. The following comments were excerpted from Senator RUSSELL B. LONG's floor statement of November 17, 1983, in support of the Employee Stock Ownership Act of 1983:

WHOSE PIE? AND WHY ESOP's?

(By Hon. Russell B. Long)

Employee stock ownership has grown in popularity all across this country over the past decade.

I am convinced that this ownership issue goes to the very heart of just what sort of economic system we mean to have in the United States, and just what sort of Nation we intend to leave for succeeding generations of Americans. * * *

Employee stock ownership is not a partisan issue; rather, it is an issue that cuts across party lines in an attempt to bring out the best in our free enterprise system. It is only fair and right that those who work to make this economy succeed should have an opportunity to share in that success. It is a matter of simple commonsense and basic equity.

If we want this private property system of ours to succeed, we simply must insure that as many Americans as possible have an opportunity to earn an ownership stake in that system. A continuing fundamental weakness of our system is that so many Americans own so very little while a relatively few Americans own a great deal.

This does not mean that we should redistribute the wealth of current owners. The intent is not to take from those who own to give to those who do not. Rather, the goal is to provide incentives for financing to be structured in such a way that, in the future, more Americans will have a chance to accumulate a capital estate.

INCENTIVE-SIDE ECONOMICS

Mr. President, in the 97th Congress, we enacted a sweeping set of tax incentives designed to promote the growth of investment. Under the banner of supply-side economics, the Congress reformed the depreciation rules, cut the capital gains tax, and enacted several other amendments with the idea of encouraging capital spending. * * *

We should continue our encouragement of this emphasis on such "hard" economic factors as capital investment and research and development. However, this approach will be shortsighted if we continue to overlook the "soft" factors that impact productivity—the motivation, commitment, and dedication of our work force.

Incentives for employee stock ownership provide a way to link these two factors and to end the costly mismatch between our national goal of improved productivity and our system of incentives and rewards.

WHOSE CAPITALISM?

The economic strength and political stability of this Nation stem largely from our commitment to a private property, free enterprise philosophy. To date, however, we have not strongly encouraged the use of financial techniques designed to provide widespread access to capital ownership. Consequently, in this, the world's most avowed capitalist nation, we have only a scanty sprinkling of capitalists.

In 1976, for example, the Joint Economic Committee studied this ownership issue and found that 50 percent of the market value of individually owned corporate stock in the United States is held by just 0.5 percent of the U.S. population, and 72 percent is owned by a mere 6 percent of the population.

Perhaps the most disturbing aspect of the present state of our private property system, however, is noted by the National Bureau of Economic Research, which reports that for the majority of American families, their most important wealth is now their entitlements under our pay-as-you-go social security system.

Thus, for the majority of Americans, their most significant asset is an assurance that their children will be taxed on their behalf. Mr. President, I question the wisdom of both U.S. economic policy and U.S. tax policy when the end result is to leave most Americans dependent for their subsistence on taxes paid by an already over-taxed population.

The financial press indicates that the Nation's pool of productive capital will increase by $2 to $5 trillion by the end of this century. Yet unless we develop financial incentives to spread this newly created wealth more broadly among our citizens, this Nation's crippling legacy of concentrated ownership will continue and the great bulk of that new wealth will become owned largely by the already-wealthy.

This likelihood led the Joint Economic Committee to conclude in its 1976 annual report:

To provide a realistic opportunity for more U.S. citizens to become owners of capital, and to provide an expanded source of equity financing for corporations, it should be made national policy to pursue the goal of broadened capital ownership.

WHOSE PRODUCTIVITY?

This concentration of wealth is not only unjust, the evidence indicates that it is harmful to the efficient and successful operation of a market economy.

In a 1980 Gallup survey, which asked workers who they thought would benefit from improvements in their productivity, only 9 percent felt that they, the workers, would. Most assumed that the beneficiaries would be others—consumers or stockholders or management.

Although increased productivity has a generally positive ring to it, for the average hourly worker increased productivity suggests that the company will benefit at his expense—for example, through speedups or through job insecurity due to automation.

The inference is clear. When employees themselves become stockholders, their attitudes toward productivity will change. This commonsense conclusion gains support from a series of studies of companies with the foresight to embrace employee ownership. One of the first studies focused on employee-owned cooperatives in the Pacific Northwest in which the average output exceeded industry productivity levels by more than 30 percent * * *

In a related finding, a 1977 report on employee-owned companies by the Survey Research Center at the University of Michigan—sponsored by the Economic Development Administration of the U.S. Department of Commerce—found that companies with a substantial degree of employee ownership are 1.5 times more profitable than comparable conventionally owned firms. They also discovered that the more equity the employees own, the more profitable the company. Managers surveyed indicated a noticeable improvement in work attitudes and a positive effect on productivity.

Similar results are reflected in a 1979 study of 72 companies with employee stock ownership plans (ESOP's) sponsored by the ESOP Association of America. The typical ESOP company studied had been in business for 24 years and had established its ESOP 3 years prior to the study. Over the 3 years, an average of 7 percent of the stock of the company was transferred to the ESOP each year; at the time of the survey, the typical ESOP in the survey held 20.6 percent of the company stock.

During those 3 years with an ESOP, annual sales per employee increased an average of 25 percent, total annual sales rose an average of 72 percent, and annual profits grew an average 157 percent. In addition, the results showed a close correlation between ESOP's and a growth in both employment and tax revenue, the study finding an average 37-percent jump in total jobs per company and an average 150-percent increase in company-paid taxes.

A 1981 survey of 229 ESOP companies by the Journal of Corporation Law at the University of Iowa School of Law found that while other companies' productivity was declining during the 1975–79 period, productivity in ESOP companies was increasing. In addition, one-third of the companies surveyed reported reduced employee turnover and improved quality of work.

In May of this year, the American Business Conference published the results of a 2-year study designed to explain how and why mid-sized growth companies have outpaced the Nation in sales, profits, jobs, and exports. In the high-growth companies studied, employees own over 30 percent of the company stock—a surprisingly high proportion for companies averaging over $200 million in annual sales.

On the basis of the research to date, it is clear that companies with employee ownership are likely to be more productive and more profitable than those without, and the more ownership held by employees, the better the performance of the company. Just as the company with employee ownership will have an advantage over a conventionally owned competitor, so, too, will the U.S. economy enjoy a competitive advantage with policies and programs supportive of widespread employee ownership.

It does not require an industrial psychologist to explain this phenomenon—a phenomenon, I should add, that is being repeated time and again across the Nation as more and more companies are establishing employee stock ownership plans. A sense of ownership is crucial to the efficient and successful functioning of our private enterprise system—a system based on individual initiative and on sharing in the gains that one's efforts bring about.

As an additional benefit, it appears that the tax incentives provided for corporate financing with ESOP's may well pay for themselves in the form of more jobs and generally higher tax payments—by both employees and employers.

Employee ownership can also help to create a more widespread unity of interest and incentive, thereby fostering better relations between management and labor. It can serve as a new stabilizing element, an element that may encourage these traditional foes to act more in the national interest by beginning to operate more in a much needed spirit of cooperation and compromise.

Stock ownership by employees—both management and rank-and-file employees—can create a work environment in which issues are resolved more constructively. Getting both sides to work together to solve problems they share in common can be a very powerful force for dismantling alienation and distrust.

Unions need new ways to deliver victories to their members, and management must find new ways to deal with union demands. Employee stock ownership provides a fruitful new area in which these adversaries can resolve their differences.

RELIEVING THE FISCAL STRAIN

A strong case for expanded ownership could be made on equitable grounds alone—or on motivational grounds alone. Certainly a nation, that puts its faith in a private enterprise system should conduct its economic policy so as to insure that the voting public has a personal stake in that system.

Rather than creating a constituency for private property capitalism, however, we have been steadily adding people to the make-work rolls, to the income security rolls, and to the countless other State and Federal programs designed to disguise the onus of welfare. This is clearly not the direction in which Federal tax policy should encourage the American economy to move.

Only recently have the consequences of this shortsighted approach begun to surface. The fiscal strains are the most obvious, with the growth of Federal transfer payments revealing one troublesome dimension of the problem. In 1960, these payments to individuals totaled 26.4 percent of total budget outlays; by 1980, they had skyrocketed to more than 50 percent; $27 billion was paid out in 1960; 23 years later these costs have risen to more than $400 billion. Just since 1970, transfer payments have grown more than $250 billion. These trends simply must be reversed.

TOWARD A PRIVATE SECTOR SOLUTION

It would be helpful if we could reduce the Government spending devoted to public sector employment. Without continued public spending, we cannot maintain these people in the new jobs to which they have been drawn by the inflationary spending of the past. We find ourselves running faster and faster to keep people employed in what are often artifically created jobs; meanwhile deficits continue to grow at an alarming pace.

This approach stems, in part, from the belief in the deliberate stimulation of aggregate demand as a means of creating full employment. But to blindly follow that approach requires that we elevate the tax system and government-stimulated demand to a position higher than the Nation's wealth-production system, upon which all tax revenues and everyone's ultimate standard of living depend. It is production that creates income and only income that can be taxed or spent.

The expanded ownership concept suggests that continued heavy reliance on taxation and Government spending is not a sound long-term approach to maintaining market demand and economic growth in a private property economy. Our long-term economic and tax strategy should offer incentives for the private sector itself, as the principal producer of goods and services in the economy, to become a more direct and efficient distributor of the purchasing power needed to consume those goods and services.

We can begin to move in that direction by encouraging companies to finance newly formed capital so that it is broadly owned, and then encouraging a substantial payout of the earnings on that capital in order to put purchasing power into consumers' hands.

The concept of a market economy is based on the premise that each person's outtake from the economy is directly related to that person's productive input. In a technologically advanced, capital-dominated economy such as ours, that presents a problem. Where capital instruments account for a major portion of an economy's input and capital owners are few, we must call on Government to redirect the income flows that would otherwise flow to this already income-saturated few.

Market mechanisms reward productivity—the ability to produce a product or a service to meet market demand. Productivity is, in part, dependent upon individual effort. However, and this is particularly true of our crucial infrastructure, to a great extent productivity is dependent upon technological advances and efficiencies converted to productive capital.

Since the dawn of the industrial revolution, our enhanced ability to utilize labor-saving technology has enabled this Nation to gradually shift the burden of industrial production off of our labor force and onto the Nation's nonhuman resources—the machinery, equipment, processes, and other advances that have been the hallmark of 20th century economic progress.

If the market system were permitted to operate in a totally laissez-faire manner, the bulk of the national income would flow to the owners of this Nation's productive capital. Those few owners, however, could consume only a small portion of the Nation's output.

When capital owners are few, the private property conduits of a market economy create vast reservoirs of savings for those few—savings that can then be reinvested to acquire more income-producing assets. If there were many owners, those same conduits could begin to broadly irrigate the economy with purchasing power.

By producing the economic pie, we necessarily create the problem of how it is to be distributed. Redistributive taxation is one way to achieve a more equitable and a more workable distribution of income, but for this purpose it is strictly a hindsight, remedial approach. And, of course, Government can never return as much as it takes, so its costs insure a net loss in the transfer.

This bill suggests a positive, forward-looking approach, one that begins to link the concern for production with the concern for widespread income distribution. It suggests that as we increase the economy's overall power to produce, we should simultaneously provide incentives to systematically increase the economic power of households to consume.

The long-term goal of ESOP-type financing is to create income-generating mechanisms to supplement the income earned through employment. The goal is to link a growing number of American households to the economic growth—as well as the capital income—represented by newly created capital, the capital whose creation our tax system was recently amended to encourage.

The free enterprise market mechanisms of incentive and reward have brought more and better goods and services to more people here and throughout the world than any other system in history. Yet those mechanisms are not indestructible. If they are to be preserved, we need an institutional framework that operates in their support. That support lies in the direction of a more democratic form of private property ownership.●

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT PURCHASES

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, last month I made a press release crediting the Boeing Aircraft Co. for announcing a rather creative corporate approach toward ending the spare parts scandals that have plagued the Defense Department for the past few years. On April 15, Boeing announced that it would refund the purchase price of any spare part bought from Boeing which the Defense Department later determined to have been overpriced. I am happy to report that other major defense contractors have decided to make a similar commitment.

Today I am pleased to announce that the McDonnell Douglas Corp.—which, in terms of Government contracts is probably our Nation's largest defense contractor—has made a similar commitment to refund any apparent overcharges for spare parts. Under this policy—subject to reasonable limitations—the Government can return any spare part or piece of support equipment if there is any dissatisfaction with its cost—no questions asked. To their credit, McDonnell Douglas takes this guarantee one step further. Should the military consider it necessary to retain the item in stock for operational readiness concerns, the complaint will be addressed without regard for a time limit.

In establishing what may now be the most comprehensive refund policy in the aerospace industry, McDonnell Douglas has taken a major step toward restoring the credibility of the entire defense industry.

I want to publicly commend Sandy McDonnell and all the dedicated, patriotic men and women of the McDonnell Douglas Corp. for their determination to ensure that for every dollar spent by the military, the American taxpayer gets a full dollar's worth of defense.

Mr. President, I look forward to making similar statements on the Senate floor as additional defense contractors make the same commitment Boeing and McDonnell Douglas have announced.

I ask that a letter from McDonnell Douglas in this connection be printed in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

McDONNELL DOUGLAS CORP.,
St. Louis, MO, July 24, 1985.

Hon. CASPAR W. WEINBERGER,
Secretary of Defense,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Since 1983 the McDonnell Douglas Corporation has been working with the Defense Department to encourage the purchase of items at the lowest possible price. We have been informing the military services in writing when requests for quotes produce high prices due to uneconomical quantities, high set up costs or unavailable tooling. Further, on parts we purchase we have been encouraging the Services to go directly to the supplier rather than through MDC, when this results in lower cost.

For some time now we have been working on another initiative that should assure you and the department that you can buy with confidence from McDonnell Douglas and its components.

The attached memo establishes a policy whereby the government can return any spare part or piece of support equipment if there is any dissatisfaction with its cost—no questions asked. Furthermore, if the military feels it must retain the item in stock for operational readiness, their complaint will be addressed without concern for a time limit. The refund policy which is the most comprehensive in the aerospace industry will also be offered to our commercial airline and foreign military sales customers.

We will make a formal announcement of this policy in a few weeks, but I wanted you to know that the McDonnell Douglas Corporation stands by its products and takes great pride in our reputation for integrity and ethical conduct.

Sincerely,

SANFORD N. MCDONNELL.

JULY 23, 1985.

To: A. Browde, D. Malvern, J.G. Real, J.E. Worsham, J.F. Yardley.

Subject: Spare Parts Policies.

Enclosure: (1) Spare Parts and Support Equipment Policies, July 23, 1985.

1. As contemplated in our memo of 13 June 1985, the enclosed Spare Parts and Support Equipment Policies have been coordinated with the aerospace components and are hereby approved for implementation immediately.

R.C. LITTLE.

SPARE PARTS AND SUPPORT EQUIPMENT POLICIES

The following policies are effective immediately on MDC aerospace prime contracts (U.S. Government and FMS, but excluding contracts where MDC is a subcontractor):

1. ENFORCED BREAKOUT

Policy—MDC will reemphasize support of breakout policies of the USG and will make a concerted effort to eliminate low value spares and non-complex support equipment from MDC furnished lists by:

(1) Resisting stocking or quoting purchased parts as spare parts to MDC customers. Customers will be encouraged to purchase from the true manufacturer(s).

(2) Progressively identifying and reclassifying non-structural low value MDC manufactured parts from "Make" to "Buy" with the exception of items not applicable to spares provisioning, to the maximum extent possible. This will apply to parts currently used in production which can be more economically purchased outside for both production and spares. Turnover from "M" to "B" will be initiated immediately, but existing inventories will be used before transition. Target date for completion is 31 December 1985.

(3) Increasing use of qualified low cost sources for purchase of non-complex support equipment and encourage customers to obtain follow-on requirements direct from such sources when feasible.

2. INTERIM PROCEDURES

Pending the transition of "enforced breakout," step 1 above, we must pay particular attention to low value parts to avoid the appearance of overpricing. During this period, kits, discounts, price reductions or other legitimate forms of price adjustment may be used if necessary.

3. PRICE REFUND POLICY

MDC will establish a refund policy for military customers who are dissatisfied with the price paid for MDC spare parts or support equipment providing:

(1) Parts or equipment were purchased from MDC and were MDC designed and manufactured products;

(2) They are returned in new and unused condition and are of current production configuration;

(3) They are returned within 6 months of delivery from MDC; and

(4) Price is not greater than the threshold for submission of cost and pricing data per P.L. 87-653, i.e., $100,000. No questions asked!

(5) In instances when Military Operational Readiness requirements prohibit the return of spare parts or support equipment within the 6 month period, MDC will continue to address customer concerns about prices on such parts and equipment on a case by case basis without regard for the 6 month limit.

4. CONTINUING PROCEDURES

The following policies previously established on 19 September 1983 are still valid:

(1) Discourage ROMS, quick quotes, and "not to exceed" prices which satisfy customer demands for quick response but can result in artificially high or unrealistic quotes.

(2) Advise customers in writing when requests for quotes produce high prices due to uneconomical quantities, high set-up costs, unavailable tooling, etc.

(3) Support "breakout." Advise customer of actual manufacturer and encourage direct procurement. Assist customers by giving access to supplier lists, automated data bases, etc. to facilitate direct customer procurement.

(4) Monitor supplier cost proposals. Challenge unrealistic quotes.

(5) Continue to monitor MDC spare parts and support equipment quotations, provisioning data, catalog prices and like source data to voluntarily identify and correct overcharges or errors.

(6) Make voluntary refunds or price adjustments if appropriate.

5. SUPPORT RESPONSIBILITY

MDC policies must also stress our dedication to the support of our products. During the implementation of these policies on spare parts and support equipment, we must do so in a manner which will not compromise product support.

6. COST ALLOCATIONS

Finally, MDC components must abstain from the allocation of provisioning costs or other "line item add-ons" which inflate the unit cost of spares or support equipment. Our policy shall be to bid such support costs as stand alone. This does not apply to cost allocations handled in accordance with the MDC Disclosure Statement.●

CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, it is an honor and a privilege for me to participate today in the Congressional Call to Conscience for Soviet Jews and Christians. This effort, ably chaired by my distinguished colleague on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator RUDY BOSCHWITZ, puts the Congress on record every day it is in session as expressing concern and support for Soviet Jews and dissidents of all religions in the Soviet Union who are denied their basic human rights, including the right to practice their religions or to emigrate.

It is a special honor to take part in this program today because tomorrow marks the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords. By signing those documents the Soviet Union committed itself to honor the human rights of all its citizens, including the right of religious freedom and of family reunion through emigration.

Since that time we have seen what the Soviet Union really thinks about its commitments under international law and international agreements. The situation in the Soviet Union for Jews and other minorities has worsened considerably year by year. Soviet Jewish emigration has fallen to a new low of 464 persons for the first 5 months of 1985 compared to 51,000 in 1979. At the same time there has been a significant increase in anti-Semitic activity, including the closing of synagogues, discrimination in education, and the confiscation of prayer books.

Mr. President, I would like to mention the case of only one of the many persons caught in the web of discrimination and denial of human rights which is the reality of Soviet Russia today. Mr. Yuri Rodin is a 46-year-old mathematician living in the Moscow area. Since applying for a visa in 1979 to leave the Soviet Union to join his relatives in Israel, his position has become increasingly perilous. In 1980 the authorities tried to fire him from his position in the Solid State Physics Institute of the Academy of Science. With an unusual show of courage, his colleagues refused to participate in the attempt to harass him, and as a result he was able to stay on the job.

Mr. Rodin's wife, Elena, was not as fortunate. She lost her job as a computer programmer early in 1982 because the authorities canceled her position. Now, once again, threats have been made to her husband that he will also be removed from his job. Since in their city even the night watchman's job seems to be controlled by the scientific director, it probably will be difficult for him to secure any other kind of work, should he be fired. With no income, the impoverishment of this family would then be complete.

Though suffering all the hardships of the refusenik life, Mr. Rodin is still optimistic and appreciative of all the efforts being made to help his family. He has written to friends:

> The only encouraging thing is the moral support of our colleagues in the U.S.A. and Europe. We understand that public opinion in the West keeps us out of jail and gives us hope to join our families in Israel.

It is when I consider cases such as this that I appreciate not only how important a statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD can be for keeping attention focused on this issue, but also how privileged I am to have the right to make such a statement freely and without fear. Mr. President, too often we take for granted the freedoms we have in this great country. It is only when one steps back to observe how some of the world's governments treat their citizens that one can truly appreciate the way in which our Government respects both our rights as citizens and its international agreements to protect those rights.

A corollary of that though is that it is essential that we Americans remain committed to the propositions that others deserve the same rights and freedoms, and that it is our responsibility to call the world's attention to denials for human rights. The Congressional Call to Conscience does just that through these daily statements of concern. I hope and trust its efforts will bear fruit in the form of an improved human rights situation in the Soviet Union and a commitment, at last, by that country to observe the Helsinki accords whose 10th anniversary we observe tomorrow.●

TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL S. PALLAK, PH.D., EXECUTIVE OFFICER OF THE AMERICAN PSYCHOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise today in tribute to a fine scientist and scholar, Dr. Michael S. Pallak, who will step down as executive officer of the American Psychological Association next month. It is most appropriate that this body honor Dr. Pallak, since, through his efforts at the helm of the largest association of psychologists in the world, we and the American people have been provided access to invaluable new knowledge.

The official purpose of the American Psychological Association is to "promote psychology as a science, as a profession, and as a means of promoting human welfare." Clearly, Dr. Pallak has upheld, personally and professionally, the goals of his own organization. In his 10 years at the association, of which the past 6 have been in the grueling role of chief operating officer, he has expanded the scope, the quality, and the importance of the APA. He has made available to the Congress, to the President, and to the courts, the accumulated knowledge of 76,000 psychologists. He has been most invaluable in my own efforts to ensure that psychology practitioners will ultimately be autonomously recognized under each of our Federal health care programs. He has helped ensure that the health and welfare of the American people are the primary considerations in governmental decisions. And, he has made us aware that scientific advancement through research is one of the highest and most beneficial goals of any civilization.

Mr. President, the operating budget of the American Psychological Association has grown during Dr. Pallak's tenure from $11 million to almost $37 million. Three years ago, APA purchased the popular magazine Psychology Today, and Dr. Pallak has turned around its financial status from tenuous to sound. More important, Dr. Pallak has made certain that the articles written for Psychology Today are at the forefront of popular science and public concerns. That association also publishes 20 scientific journals on a wide range of topics within psychology. Truly, Dr. Michael Pallak has well managed a burden that many of us would be loathe to shoulder, and he has carried it with good humor, grace, and a strong sense of pride in his mission.

To Dr. Michael Pallak, to his wife, Dr. Suzanne Pallak, and to his two daughters, Michelle and Stephanie, I pay tribute, express our appreciation, and extend all good wishes for a happy and continuing productive future.●

COMPACT OF FREE ASSOCIATION

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, on Monday the Senate Finance Committee considered the tax and trade provisions of the Compact of Free Association, which governs the future relationship between the Republic of the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia, and the United States. This compact was contained in Senate Joint Resolution 77. The committee has reported favorably on the resolution with an amendment. I would like to take a few moments to explain the committee's actions and the reasons for them.

BACKGROUND

The Republic of the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia are two of the four governments in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The trust territory has been administered by the United States since its creation in 1947 by an international agreement sponsored by the United Nations. The United States does not claim sovereignty over these territories under the agreement.

As I noted, the Compact of Free Association will govern the future relationship between these two States—the Freely Associated States and the United States. Under the compact, the Freely Associated States will be self-determining sovereign states with full control over their internal and external affairs. However, the United States will retain authority over all matters concerning security and defense of the area, and numerous other connections between the governments will be maintained.

COMMITTEE CONCERNS

The committee believes that some of the provisions of the compact, as originally proposed, are contrary to the tax and trade policy of the United States. First, they would have made the Freely Associated States into unusually effective tax havens. Second, they would have granted the Freely Associated States more favorable tax treatment than is afforded to the possessions of the United States, by freezing possessions treatment in place as it existed 5 years ago. Moreover, the adoption of the provisions would set an unwanted precedent that other foreign countries might attempt to follow in negotiating tax and other treaties with the United States. Finally, the trade provisions of the compact could have resulted in circumvention of U.S. tariff laws, particularly by exporters in the Far East. In approving the proposed compact, the House of Representatives included provisions in its resolution (H.J. Res. 187) that were meant to address these concerns.

Nevertheless, the committee fully recognizes the strategic importance of the compact, and the importance of providing incentives for investment in the Freely Associated States in a manner that adheres to the spirit and intent of a mutually negotiated agreement. Moreover, the committee recognizes the special relationship between the United States and the Freely Associated States that arises out of the trusteeship. Therefore, the committee supports the extension to the Freely Associated States of one of the major investment incentives applicable to the possessions, that is, the possessions tax credit of section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code. The committee insists, however, that such incentive not be made available to the Freely Associated States at any time when it is unavailable to the possessions.

The Finance Committee therefore recommends an amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 77 that parallels in many respects title IV of House Joint Resolution 187, clarifying the application of the tax and trade provisions of the compact. First, those provisions of the compact that would have enabled taxpayers to use the Freely Associated States as a tax haven—section 253 and the second sentence of section 254—are rendered ineffective with respect to U.S. taxes. The committee does not believe that the United States should seek to create a refuge from U.S. taxes. However, U.S. taxpayers in the Freely Associated States will receive the benefit of the normal rules applicable to U.S. taxpayers abroad, including the foreign tax credit for income taxes paid to the Freely Associated States, and the foreign earned income exclusion under Code section 911.

Second, the provision of the compact providing business investment incentives—section 255—is clarified so that it applies to one specific incentive provision—Code section 936—as it is amended from time to time. Section 936 in effect grants an exemption from U.S. tax for qualifying income earned in a possession—or, in this case, the Freely Associated States. If the benefits of section 936 are reduced, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Freely Associated States are to negotiate new benefits substantially equivalent to the lost benefit. If negotiations fail to produce a resolution within 1 year, the matter is to be submitted to an arbitration board provided for elsewhere in the compact. The committee's amendment differs from the House version in two respects. First, the effective date of any change to section 936 will not be delayed for 1 year in the case of the Freely Associated States. The committee does not believe it appropriate to enact a rule that would grant the Freely Associated States a greater benefit than is available to the possessions and would lead to the inconsistent treatment of similarly situated taxpayers. Second, the committee's amendment specifies that the U.S. representative to any arbitration conducted with respect to these tax provisions is to be the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate. The committee concludes that Treasury is the appropriate agency to represent the United States in these matters, which fall within its area of expertise.

Finally, the committee's amendment clarifies that the Freely Associated States will continue to be treated as part of the North American area for purposes of allowing U.S. taxpayers to deduct convention expenses incurred in those States. (The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands is currently designated as part of the North American area by Code section 274(h)(3).)

With respect to the trade provision of the compact, the committee's amendment follows the House resolution. The Freely Associated States will for tariff purposes be treated as foreign countries designated to receive duty-free treatment on eligible articles under the generalized system of preferences [GSP]. However, in meeting the 35 percent minimum local content requirement under the GSP, U.S. materials up to 15 percent may be included. In addition to the statutory exclusions under the GSP, canned tuna would be ineligible for duty-free treatment.●

FOREST PRODUCTS AND THE MOSS TALKS

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, to say that trade tensions between the United States and Japan are high is an understatement. This should be patently obvious to any observer. Sometimes, however, I get the feeling the Japanese still do not understand the level or the depth of our concern and dissatisfaction.

For example, at the beginning of the year—some 7 months ago—Prime Minister Nakasone and President Reagan announced negotiations on specific sectors. These MOSS negotiations were to be aimed at opening trade on a sector-specific basis. Four areas were selected to start: Telecommunications, electronics, medical equipment and pharmaceuticals, and forest products—including both paper and solid wood products. The goal was identification and removal of all barriers to trade in each sector. Success in these areas was to be followed by the addition of other sectors.

If the Japanese were truly committed to opening their markets and so alleviating tensions between our two countries, they would be moving rapidly to demonstrate that interest in the MOSS negotiations. We would expect to see dramatic progress in a very short period of time. This has not been the case.

There has been some significant progress in one sector, some small progress in two, and no progress at all in the forest products.

Yesterday Assistant U.S. Trade Representative James Murphy testified before the Banking Committee on the MOSS negotiations. His report on forest products was wholly pessimistic—there has been no movement at all.

I think my colleagues will find what he had to say enlightening:

> Two major problems continue to stymie progress.
> The first concerns the timing and depth of tariff cuts on wood and paper products. The Japanese participants in these MOSS talks have been unwilling or unable to go beyond Prime Minister Nakasone's April 9 statement that the Japanese Government would "positively consider reduction of [wood] tariffs approximately from the third year," now understood to be 1987. On paper tariffs, although we recently requested that Japan match the zero tariff rates that the United States has, the unilateral June 25 tariff announcement by the Japanese Government included only a 20-percent cut. This issue will continue to be discussed in the MOSS talks. The second issue concerns Japan's intention, announced on April 9, to launch a 5-year program to restructure the domestic forest products industry. We want to ensure that the GATT and OECD guidelines are followed, as well as the spirit of MOSS' market-oriented philosophy. The Japanese have agreed to do so.

Mr. President, those are not the words of a negotiator who is having great success. I say that not in criticism of either Assistant U.S. Trade Representative Murphy or of Agriculture Under Secretary Amstutz, both of whom I like and respect. I am sure they share my frustration.

I hope my Japanese friends are listening: three out of four won't do; success in the forest products negotiation is necessary; and success must come rapidly. We are not going to accept endless delays while the Japanese protect and strengthen their sawmill operators.

Refusal to make real concessions—to implement Nakasone's commitment—will not lessen tensions; refusal to budge will only increase anger in this Nation. The MOSS negotiations are only a start—if we cannot even get agreement after a pledge from the Prime Minister, how can we expect any cooperation in other areas?

We in the Congress expect action. We expect results—in all four MOSS areas—and we expect them soon.●

PART B MEDICARE APPEALS PROCESS

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, for some time I have been aware of a problem that my constituents and many other elderly Americans across the Nation are facing. The problem is an unfair gap in the appeals process under the Medicare part B law.

Medicare part B pays for doctors visits and other outpatient services. Last year, claims under part B totaled over $19 billion. For older Americans living on a fixed income, whole or partial denial of a claim may impose a severe financial hardship and emotional distress. Unfortunately, as one of my constituents learned recently, appeals rights under current law for part B reimbursements are quite limited. The Medicare statute and recent court decisions have effectively precluded judicial review of claims paid or not paid.

The problem is poignantly illustrated by Samuel Glass, a 72-year-old married gentleman from Allentown, PA. Mr. Glass' only source of income is Social Security. His left leg has been amputated and his lower right leg weakened by poor circulation. He has severe arterial disease and a long standing history of diabetes, arteriosclerosis and coronary artery disease. Now Mr. Glass heard an advertisement that Medicare would cover the cost of a seat lift, an item which would greatly facilitate his ease of movement to and from bed and chair. He called Medicare, explained his condition, and was told that he qualified for the lift chair. Mr. Glass then borrowed close to $2,000 from his brother to purchase the chair. He submitted his claim for reimbursement for $1,595 to the Medicare carrier which denied payment based on the medical necessity rules. He had to borrow money from his life insurance policy to repay his brother. Distraught, he asked for a review of this decision but the carrier upheld the original decision.

At Mr. Glass' request, a hearing was held before an employee of the carrier. Mr. Glass testified that without the lift he would suffer and would have to have people help him up from his chair. In using the lift, he is able to stand up and get around with a cane or walker. Despite the treating physician's prescription and supporting letters that Mr. Glass needs and would benefit from a seat lift, he was again denied payment because there had not been an improvement or retardation in the severity of his medical conditions.

Unfortunately, this was Mr. Glass' last chance for redress. This decision is final unless Mr. Glass can come up with new or material evidence. While I am not in a position to state whether Mr. Glass would ultimately prevail, I believe he should have an opportunity to challenge the denial before an administrative law judge and to have the chance for judicial review should he wish to pursue his claim.

Mr. Glass has suffered greatly—the cost of the lift has depleted all of his resources and the denials have drained him emotionally. He is not alone, but his case illustrates the urgent need for better due process protections for Medicare beneficiaries.

Mr. President, my colleague, Senator DURENBERGER, chairman of the Subcommittee on Health, Committee on Finance, is also acutely aware of the limited appeal rights of vulnerable part B beneficiaries. He and I have been working together to solve this problem. It is my expectation that we will shortly move to correct this unfairness in the law.●

ON THE PASSING OF HERBERT SCOVILLE

● Mr. HART. Mr. President, Susan Sontag, in a recent book "Illness as a Metaphor," said of cancer, "It is a disease which doesn't knock before it enters." She might have added that, however furtively it comes into the lives of people we love, there is an awful thunder when it claims someone close.

It was with a great sense of sadness that I learned my friend Dr. Herbert "Pete" Scoville, Jr., had died of cancer yesterday. I am sure all our colleagues join me in sending our thoughts and prayers to Pete's wife Ann, and their four children.

John Donne once wrote, "Any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in Mankind.* * *" Just as we are diminished by the death of Herbert Scoville, so to, all of us, were enlarged and indeed challenged by his contributions in life.

Dr. Scoville served with distinction and dedication as Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency and Assistant Director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. As a Government official, he argued forcefully for nuclear arms control and a test ban treaty.

After a long and remarkable career in public service, Herbert Scoville devoted his tireless energies to the cause of peace. His dedication to meaningful arms control, consistent with his commitment to this Nation's security, inspired innumerable policymakers, students, scientists, and concerned citizens to follow his lead.

Herbert Scoville was a prolific writer of books and articles which articulated his vision of a sane and sensible defense policy for the United States. Tackling technically difficult subjects, his writings were marked by great intellect. Yet his work also reflected both remarkable compassion and a desire to communicate with citizens regardless of their grasp of strategic doctrine.

Herbert Scoville was a friend, a colleague of mine on defense matters, but, most of all, an inspiration. I am grateful to have known and worked with him on the issues about which he cared so deeply.

This morning's Washington Post published a fitting tribute to the life of this decent and caring man. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The tribute follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 31 1985]

DR. HERBERT SCOVILLE, JR., EX-CIA OFFICIAL, DIES AT 70

(By Joseph D. Whitaker)

Dr. Herbert Scoville Jr., 70, a former deputy director of the CIA and assistant director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency who had written extensively on issues relating to arms control, died of cancer July 30 at Georgetown University Hospital. He maintained homes in McLean and Taconic, Conn.

Dr. Scoville began his campaign for nuclear arms control in the 1950s following the famed nuclear tests at Bikini Atoll. He argued at the Pentagon in 1954 for a test ban treaty and over the next three decades was a consistent opponents of a nuclear arms buildup.

Through his books, "Missile Madness" and "MX: Presctiption for Disaster," and in speaking engagements in this country and abroad, Dr. Scoville sought to lay the issues of arms control before the public.

Dr. Scoville said in a 1983 article in The Washington Post that he believed the U.S. was "drifting toward annihilation." Somehow the public doesn't seem to be able to grasp the significance of the issue," he said. "They read these numbers—50 million will be killed in an atomic attack, whole cities wiped out. It's nothing they can conceive of. It has no meaning in their day-to-day lives.

"If an airplane crashes and 75 people are burned up, that's a diaster everyone can visualize," Dr. Scoville continued. "They can picture themselves in the airplane. But a nuclear war that destroys our society—that tends to be just numbers. It's too depressing and they don't see what they can do about it anyway."

From 1955 to 1963, Dr. Scoville worked for the Central Intelligence Agency, where he became the deputy director. For the next six years, he was the assistant director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. He resigned from the federal service in 1969. Between 1958 and 1966, he also was a member of U.S. delegations to three disarmament conferences in Geneva.

Dr. Scoville was born in New York. He graduated from Yale University and earned his doctorate in physical chemistry at the University of Rochester. He moved to Washington in the early 1940s and went to work for the National Research Defense Committee.

He was president of the Arms Control Association and had served on the boards of the Union of Concerned Scientists and the Center for Defense Information. He also had served on the council of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

In 1981, he received the Rockefeller Public Service Award from Princeton University. He also received the Hutchinson Medal from the University of Rochester.

Survivors include his wife, Ann Curtiss Scoville of McLean and Taconic; three sons, Anthony and Thomas, both of Washington, and Nicholas, of Los Angeles; a daughter, Molly Fitzmaurice of Washington, and six grandchildren.●

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to offer to my colleagues a report written by Dr. Isaac Lewin, the distinguished representative of the Agudas Israel World Organization to the Economic and Social Council at the United Nations. He has been, and continues to be, a leading advocate for religious freedom in the world.

In 1981, Dr. Lewin was instrumental in achieving approval of the United Nations declaration on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance. At the end of last year, Dr. Lewin submitted a working paper to the U.N. Seminar on the Encouragement of Understanding, Tolerance and Respect in Matters Relating to Freedom of Religion or Belief in Geneva. The paper is entitled, "The Prohibition of the Jewish Religious Method of Slaughtering Animals for Food."

Mr. President, I ask that Dr. Lewis's report be printed in the RECORD in its entirety.

The material follows:

UNITED NATIONS SEMINAR ON THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF UNDERSTANDING, TOLERANCE AND RESPECT IN MATTERS RELATING TO FREEDOM OF RELIGION OR BELIEF

THE PROHIBITION OF THE JEWISH RELIGIOUS METHOD OF SLAUGHTERING ANIMALS FOR FOOD

In several countries, religious Jews are deprived of meat consumption, because the Jewish religious method of slaughtering animals for food called Shehitah is prohibited.

This discrimination has a long history. Before assuming power in Germany the Nazis accused in their propaganda the Jews of being cruel to animals. Due to their efforts, several German states (Bavaria, Baden, Thuringia, Brunswick, Wuerttemberg) outlawed the Jewish religious method of slaughtering animals for food even before the Nazi takeover of the German government. After Hitler became chancellor, he issued (on April 21, 1933) a decree which annulled the law of 1917 permitting the Jewish method. Immediately after occupying Poland, the German Governor-General Hans Frank issued a decree (dated October 26, 1939) which stated: "In any territory under German rule, cruelty to animals of any kind is not permissible. Effective immediately, I therefore forbid Shehitah, that is, the painful slaughter of animals, by means of gradual draining of blood for the purpose of the so-called kosher meat consumption." This discriminatory regulation was repeated by German rulers in other occupied countries (Slovakia, Holland, France, Belgium).

Needless to say, the Jewish religious method of slaughtering animals for food has been recognized by hundreds of the greatest experts as most humane.

In England it is permitted by a law adopted in 1933. In the United States of America, Public Law 85-765 of August 27, 1958, clearly states that "slaughtering in accordance with the ritual requirements of the Jewish faith or any other religious faith that prescribes a method of slaughter whereby the animal suffers loss of consciousness by anemia of the brain caused by the simultaneous and instantaneous severance of the carotid arteries with a sharp instrument"—is "hereby found to be humane".

Nevertheless, in some countries such as Sweden or Switzerland the Jewish religious method of slaughtering animals for food (called Shehitah) is practically prohibited, because legislation in these countries requires preliminary stunning of the animal, which makes Shehitah impossible. The experts who studied this method scientificaly (using modern methods such as electroenlcephalography) declared stunning unnecessary since the loss of consciousness takes place almost instantaneously (within 3-5 seconds) after the cut.

Material concerning this problem has been collected in the book Religious Freedom: The Right to Practice Shehitah by Isaac Lewin, Michael Munk and Jeremiah Berman (New York, 1946). Additional material can be found in the book Unto the Mountains by Isaac Lewin (New York, 1975).

It is suggested that, in accordance with Article IV of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the States which today do not permit the practice of Shehitah shall rescind legislation which whether directly or indirectly (by requiring preliminary stunning) includes discriminatory prohibitions which offend the Jewish religion and deeply hurt the Jewish population.●

DUCK MIGRATION DECLINES

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I came across an article in today's New York Times which confirms the importance of conserving our vital wetland areas. The story tell us that United States and Candian wildlife experts are forecasting a 22-percent decline in this year's migratory duck population. These experts attributed the decline to the loss of wetland areas—prime habitat for migratory duck and other wildlife species.

Mr. President, the Environmental Pollution Subcommittee which I chair has recently held three oversight hearings on the implementation of section 404 of the Clean Water Act. Section 404 is the primary regulatory program by which the Federal Government can control the dredging and filling of our important wetland areas. Our oversight hearings—and we are going to hold a fourth in September—have turned up strong evidence that the 404 Program is not being run properly. This most recent report only confirms that we are losing the fight to conserve the Nation's remaining valuable wetlands.

I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

DROP IN DUCK MIGRATION MAY CURB FALL HUNTING

(By Philip Sharecoff)

WASHINGTON, July 30.—United States and Canadian wildlife officials said today that the number of ducks migrating south this fall is likely to be sharply below last year and the lowest on record.

Because of the steep decline in the projected duck population, the Interior Department's Fish and Wildlife Service is considering a steep reduction in the number of ducks that may be taken by hunters this year.

The United States Fish and Wildlife Service and the Canadian Wildlife Service projected today that about 62 million ducks would migrate south this fall, 22 percent lower than last year. The total flight of ducks is the lowest projected since the agencies began making the annual forecast in 1969.

DECLINE IN NUMBER OF DUCKS

The lower fall migration is an index of the overall decline in the total duck population. Last week the United States Fish and Wildlife Service reported that the number of ducks breeding this spring was also down sharply.

Officials of the Fish and Wildlife Service and of hunting and conservation groups attributed the steep decline in the duck population to the rapid loss and degradation of wetlands, a prime duck habitat, combined with severe drought in areas frequented by ducks.

Each state has its own migratory bird protection program, and the Federal Government, as a signer of the Migratory Bird Protection Treaty, is responsible for taking action to preserve birds that cross international boundaries.

A statement by the Federal wildlife service said that the councils of state, Federal, and Canadian wildlife managers for North America's four major flyways were discussing "possible restrictions" on duck hunting.

In fact, according to A. Alan Wentz, director of fisheries and wildlife division of the National Wildlife Federation, the nation's biggest private conservation organization, the councils have been instructed to plan on a 25 percent cut in number of ducks shot this year. A spokesman for the Fish and Wildlife Service confirmed this.

James M. Shepard, director of national and international operations for Ducks Unlimited, a 600,000-member private organization devoted to preserving ducks, and their habital, said the prevailing theory is that up to a certain point hunting does not affect the overall duck population.

Mr. Wentz of the National Wildlife Federation, which has many hunters as members, said he had "strong concerns" about stiff restrictions on hunting. "Not everyone thinks it is necessary to reduce the harvest as much as they are planning to do," he said. "We are withholding judgment."

U.S. MAKES 5-YEAR STUDY

Megan Durham, speaking for the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, said a five-year study was underway to determine the impact of hunting on the duck population. She said the service did not have data showing that hunting was at fault. "But we think that this is a serious situation that requires serious action," she said.

Wildlife managers are looking at reducing daily bag limits for hunters, she said, as well as shortening the season or some combination of changes that would reduce the duck harvest.

Whitney Tilt, endangered species specialist for the National Audubon Society, said the Fish and Wildlife Service had had to do a great deal of soul searching before it lowered the number of ducks that could be taken, because part of its budget comes from a tax on sporting equipment.

"But the one short step response they can make is to regulate hunting," he said. "It is the one management step that can have immediate results."

PRESERVING THE WETLANDS

Mr. Shepard of Ducks Unlimited, which numbers many hunters among its members, noted that the United States lost over 12.5 million acres of wetlands over the last 20 years and is currently losing it at the rate of 500,000 acres a year.

He said that the Interior Department was doing its best to preserve wetlands but that the Army Corps of Engineers and the Agriculture Department subsidized drainage by farmers and others.

Mr. Wentz, however, said, "A lot of blame falls on the Fish and Wildlife Service for backing off wetlands acquisition in the Dakotas and for not requesting money available under the Wetlands Loan Act."●

COMMUNITY EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE ACT OF 1985

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced S. 1531, the Community Emergency Preparedness and Response Act of 1985. I am pleased to have Senators HUMPHREY and MOYNIHAN as cosponsors of this legislation.

The Community Emergency Preparedness and Response Act seeks to improve notification and emergency response efforts in communities with facilities handling extremely hazardous substances. It provides a framework for improving and integrating facility and community planning and emergency response capabilities, establishing Training Programs for local emergency response officials, and educating the public about what to do in the event of a dangerous release into the environment the legislation recognizes that the responsibility for emergency preparedness and response planning and implementation rests with the States and affected localities, but provides Federal technical assistance when appropriate.

Mr. President, one year ago, Bhopal, India, was unknown. Now it is a name and a place known to people all over the world. It is a name that strikes terror in the hearts of millions who live or work near a chemical plant.

On December 3, 1984, a poisonous cloud enveloped the town. It was so thick, workers could not see. Outside the plant, people died by the hundreds. Ultimately, some 2,000 perished. One hundred and fifty thousand sustained frightening injuries. It was the worst industrial accident in history. The most important task before us is to take every step to prevent such occurrences. But whenever any chemical release occurs we must be ready to respond. Hundreds of the victims in Bhopal could have been spared their lives or injuries if they had known of the hazard around them and known how to respond. In addition, many more lives could have been saved if a communication system had been in place in the city to alert them to the release.

Since that day, the question that has echoed through America is: Could Bhopal happen here?

Unfortunately, we know it can.

Texas City, TX, 1978: A sudden series of explosions at a refinery in the middle of the night. The sky lit up like daylight. Seven died. Pandemonium reigned in the streets.

Livingston, LA, 1982: Forty-three chemical cars derailed. Explosions and chemical contamination chased 2,700 people from their homes.

The Goethals Bridge, between New Jersey and New York, November 1984: Workers suspended hundreds of feet above the Arthur Kill River overcome by a vapor cloud. Six workmen and thirty passengers on the bridge sent to the hospital. New York City officials were mystified about the cause of the workers' symptoms and area hospitals were hampered in providing effective medical treatment for the same reason.

Since that release, others originating in New Jersey have traveled across State borders into parts of New York City, drawing protests from local and State officials and demonstrating the interstate dilemma posed by airborne chemical releases.

The Community Emergency Preparedness and Response Act is designed to improve our ability to respond to these disasters. It stems from a hearing held by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee in February 1985 in the wake of the tragedy in Bhopal, India. Testimony before the committee, from firemen, State and local emergency response personnel, Federal officials and industry representatives confirmed the need to improve local notification, planning and response capabilities in the case of dangerous chemical releases.

To improve local emergency preparedness planning, the bill requires that:

The President [EPA] prepare a list of extremely hazardous substances and that facilities which handle these substances and pose a danger to surrounding communities participate in community emergency response planning.

The Governors designate planning districts within their States for areas likely to be affected by releases from such facilities and appoint local emergency planning committees to prepare emergency response plans and training programs for local emergency response and medical personnel.

The national response team, established under Superfund, provide guidance and technical assistance to emergency planning committees, and review and comment on local emergency response plans upon request.

Existing Superfund requirements to notify the National Response Center of a release be extended to require immediate notification of emergency planning committees, Governors, and other appropriate State and local officials.

Facilities that handle substances covered by OSHA's hazard communication standard submit material safety data sheets required under that standard, and an estimate of their inventory of such substances, to local emergency planning committees which shall make this information available to the public.

Mr. President, this bill builds upon the existing emergency response provisions in Superfund. While the administration has provided some guidance through the national contingency plan, this has not been adequate to accomplish effective emergency preparedness.

The national response team and regional response teams established by the national contingency plan aid in responding to releases of hazardous substances covered under Superfund, but have done very little in the area of emergency preparedness. For example, in New Jersey, the New York-New Jersey regional EPA office provides personnel after a release occurs to ensure that measures have been taken to mitigate and clean up releases. Not enough has been done, however, to ensure that response personnel and resources are adequate to respond to a release. And few communities have initiated comprehensive efforts on their own.

Today, we recognize that we cannot afford to play Russian roulette with hazardous chemicals, and bank on being able to respond without coordinated emergency response efforts.

Congress has already been responsive to the inadequacies in emergency planning and response to hazardous release. During the Environment and Public Works Committee's consideration of S. 51, the Superfund Improvement Act, I offered several amendments to improve notification requirements under Superfund, stiffen penalties for noncompliance and require compilation and distribution of material safety data sheets. The Community Preparedness and Response Act, S. 1531, incorporates some of these provisions and is meant to complement them. When S. 51 is considered by the Senate, I intend to offer an amendment to it on community emergency preparedness.

During committee deliberation of S. 51, another issue was brought to our attention that I believe merits continued consideration. Under the Clean Water Act, facilities have carried out spill prevention containment and countermeasure plans. These plans have been very useful in preventing and mitigating petroleum spills, and may be equally constructive in the area of hazardous substances release prevention and containment. A similar approach could be used in preventing chemical releases.

In this case, the President (EPA) could be given express authority to ask facilities that have a history of releases or present a significant risk to the surrounding community or environment to conduct a review and undertake a workplan to improve safety problems at the facility. I believe this process would represent an important step in ensuring that trouble facilities take needed steps to improve safety. This will be another issue that I will be exploring prior to consideration of S. 51.

Mr. President, at this point I ask the text of S. 1531 be printed in the RECORD.

The text follows:

S. 1531

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION. 1. This Act may be cited as the "Community Emergency Preparedness and Response Act of 1985".

EMERGENCY OFFSITE PLANNING FOR EXTREMELY HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

SEC. 2. Section 105 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting "(a) National Contingency Plan.—" after the section number and adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) FACILITIES SUBJECT TO EMERGENCY PLANNING.—(1)(A) Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of the Community Emergency Preparedness and Response Act of 1985, the President shall publish a list of extremely hazardous substances, taking into account the toxicity, reactivity, usage, and volatility of such substances. The President shall review, and modify as necessary, such list not less often than every two years. Such list shall identify each extremely hazardous substance and shall include a formula which relates the toxicity, reactivity, volatility, and usage presented by such substance to the quantity of the substance present at facilities to determine whether a release of the substance from such facility would likely pose an imminent and substantial endangerment to the public health or to the environment. Facilities which pose such an endangerment shall notify the Governor in accordance with subparagraph (B). The President shall also establish quantities for such substances below which no facility manufacturing, processing, or disposing of such substance in such quantities shall be subject to the provisions of this subsection.

"(B) Not later than 120 days after such date of enactment, each owner or operator of a facility (other than motor vehicles, rolling stock, or aircraft) which poses an endangerment as specified in subparagraph (A) shall notify the Governor of the State in which such facility is located that such facility is subject to the requirements of this subsection. The Governor shall designate such facilities as being required to comply with the provisions of paragraph (2), and may designate additional facilities which shall be required to comply with the provisions of paragraph (2).

"(2)(A) Not later than 210 days after such date of enactment, the Governor of each State shall designate emergency planning districts in order to facilitate preparation and implementation of emergency plans. Where appropriate, the Governor may designate existing political subdivisions or multijurisdictional planning organizations as such districts. In emergency planning areas which involve more than one State, the Governors of each potentially affected State may designate emergency planning districts and emergency planning committees by agreement. In making such designation, the Governor shall indicate which facilities designated under paragraph (1) are within such emergency planning district.

"(B) Not later than 240 days after such date of enactment, the Governor shall appoint members of an emergency planning committee for each emergency planning district. Each committee shall include representatives of the public and appropriate State and local organizations. In making such appointments, the Governor shall consider persons who would be expected to play a major role in the event of a release of an extremely hazardous substance, including owners and operators of facilities designated under paragraph (1), elected officials, law enforcement and firefighting personnel, public health, medical, hospital, and environmental protection personnel, civil defense personnel, transportation officials, and representatives of broadcast and print media. Interested persons may petition the Governor to modify the membership of such committee. Such committee shall appoint a chairperson and shall establish rules by which the committee shall function. Such rules shall include provisions for public notification of committee activities, public meetings to discuss the emergency plan, public comments, and response to such comments by the committee, and distribution of the emergency plan.

"(C) Each emergency planning committee shall complete preparation of emergency plans in accordance with this subsection not later than two years after such date of enactment. The committee shall review such plan annually or as changed circumstances in the community or at any facility may require.

"(D) Each emergency planning committee shall evaluate the need for resources necessary to develop, implement, and exercise the emergency plan, and shall make recommendations with respect to additional resources which may be required, and methods for providing such additional resources.

"(E) Each emergency plan shall include (but not be limited to)—

"(i) identification of facilities designated pursuant to paragraph (1) which are within the emergency planning district, and identification of routes likely to be used for the transportation of substances listed pursuant to paragraph (1);

"(ii) methods and procedures to be followed by facility owners and operators and local emergency and medical personnel to respond to any release of such substances;

"(iii) designation of a community emergency coordinator and a facility emergency coordinator, who shall make determinations necessary to implement the plan;

"(iv) procedures providing reliable, effective, and timely notification by the facility emergency coordinator and the community emergency coordinator to persons designated in the emergency plan, and to the public, that a release has occurred (consistent with the emergency bulletin notification requirements under section 103(g));

"(v) a method for determining the occurrence of a release, and the area or population likely to be affected by such release;

"(vi) an evacuation plan, including provisions for a precautionary evacuation and alternative traffic routes;

"(vii) a training program, including schedules for training of local emergency response and medical personnel; and

"(viii) methods for exercising such plan.

"(F) The owner or operator of each facility designated pursuant to paragraph (1) shall—

"(i) within 240 days after such date of enactment, notify the emergency planning committee for the emergency planning district in which such facility is located that a facility representative will participate in the emergency planning process;

"(ii) inform the emergency planning committee of any relevant changes occurring at such facility as such changes occur or are expected to occur; and

"(iii) upon request from the emergency planning committee, provide information to the committee necessary for developing and implementing the emergency plan.

"(G) The National Response Team shall publish guidance documents for preparation and implementation of emergency plans. Such documents shall be published not later than 210 days after such date of enactment.

"(H) The Regional Response Teams shall review and comment upon such emergency plans or other issues related to preparation, implementation, or exercise of such plan upon request of the emergency planning committee. Such review shall not delay implementation of such plans.

"(3) The President may order a facility owner or operator to comply with paragraphs (1)(B) and (2)(F) of this subsection. The United States district court for the district in which the facility is located shall have jurisdiction to enforce the order, and any person who violates or fails to obey such an order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each day in which such violation occurs or such failure to comply continues.".

EMERGENCY BULLETINS

SEC. 3. (a) NOTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS.—Section 103 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) EMERGENCY BULLETINS.—(1) The owner or operator of any facility at which a release occurs in an amount requiring a report under subsection (a) shall immediately provide notice of such release to the community emergency coordinator for the emergency planning committees (established pursuant to section 105(b)) for any area likely to be affected by the release, to the Governor of any State likely to be affected by such release, and to other appropriate State and local officials.

"(2) Notice under paragraph (1) shall include (to the extent known at the time of the notice)—

"(A) the chemical name or identity of any hazardous substance involved in the release;

"(B) an estimate of the quantity of any such hazardous substance which was released into the environment;

"(C) the time and duration of the release;

"(D) the medium or media into which the release occurred;

"(E) the nature of the health or safety hazard posed by any substance released to the population as a whole and to sensitive populations, and the likely symptoms of exposure at different levels and types of exposure;

"(F) proper precautions to take as a result of the release, including evacuation; and

"(G) the name and telephone number of the person or persons to be contacted for further information.

"(3) As soon as practicable after a release to which this subsection applies, such owner or operator shall provide a followup notice (or notices, as more information becomes available) updating the information required under paragraph (2), and including additional information with respect to—

"(A) actions taken to respond to and contain the release;

"(B) any known or anticipated acute or chronic health risks associated with the release; and

"(C) where appropriate, advice regarding medical attention necessary for exposed individuals.".

(b) PENALTIES.—(1) Section 103(a) of such Act is amended by inserting ", and shall provide the notification required under subsection (g)" after "notify the National Response Center established under the Clean Water Act of such release".

(2) Section 103(b) of such Act is amended by inserting ", or fails to provide the notification required under subsection (g)." after "fails to notify immediately the appropriate agency of the United States Government".

MATERIAL SAFETY DATA SHEETS

SEC. 4. REQUIREMENTS.—Section 105 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (as amended by section 2 of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) MATERIAL SAFETY DATA SHEETS.—(1) Each owner or operator of a facility at which a hazardous chemical (as defined in section 101(33)) is produced, used, or stored shall file a material safety data sheet for such hazardous chemical with the emergency planning committee (established under section 103(g)) for the area in which such facility is located. Each such data sheet shall be accompanied by an estimate of the maximum amounts of the hazardous chemical expected to be present at the facility during a year (in ranges), and the location of the hazardous chemical at such facility.

"(2) Whenever a material safety data sheet is revised (as required under regulations under the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970) each such facility owner or operator shall file, as promptly as practicable but not later than 3 months after such revision, the revised material safety data sheet with such committee. Whenever a significant change occurs in the amount of the hazardous chemical located at the facility, such owner or operator shall file a new estimate of the amount present.

"(3) The emergency planning committees shall make the material safety data sheets and inventory information available to the public upon request.

"(4) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit the ability of any State or locality to require submission or distribution of information related to hazardous chemicals or to limit the authority of any State of preempt any local law relating to the submission of information related to hazardous chemicals.

"(5) The President may order a facility owner or operator to comply with this subsection. The United States district court for the district in which the facility is located shall have jurisdiction to enforce the order, and any person who violates or fails to obey such an order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each day in which such violation occurs or such failure to comply continues.".

(b) DEFINITIONS.—Section 101 of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (31);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (32) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(33) 'hazardous chemical' means, for purposes of section 105(c), any substance which is treated as a 'hazardous chemical' pursuant to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's hazard communication standard (codified in July 1985 in 29 CFR 1910.1200), except that the following substances shall not be treated as a 'hazardous chemical' for such purposes:

"(A) any food, food additive, color additive, drug, or cosmetic regulated by the Food and Drug Administration;
